All you need is a heart and a dollar

These entitle you to membership for one year.

When you wear your button, signifying that you are a member, you will not be asked to join again this year—it means that you have answered the Roll Call.

Join—be a Christmas member—but just join once.

Our soldiers and sailors look to the Red Cross for comforts. They have never been disappointed.

The Red Cross looks to you for the moral support of your membership. Answer "HERE!" when the Roll is called.

The WONDER WOMAN

The Star of a thousand moods

She startled the world in "Revelation" and in this production alone reached the pinnacle of box office success and established a new standard for the screen.

She did more in one production for the future of pictures, more for the continuance of enthusiastic patronage of picture theatres more for the exhibitors than any three of the biggest stars in the last ten years

She went beyond her own triumphs in "Toys of Fate," proving herself entirely different, totally distinctive and wonderful beyond any comparison as the supreme actress of the picture world.

She rises higher in her newest and, to date, her best production, "Eye for Eye" — of which more is said on succeeding pages

Neither a War, Spy, Sex nor Sermonizing Picture

BUT A wholesome, happy, clean and virile presentation of life with all its humor and pathos as it is known and understood by the average American. A picture of the deepest heart interest which puts across its lesson of love and fearlessness as life's great beneficial influences with a surge of satisfying comfort because its characters and their problems are handled with that combination of romantic sentiment, common-sense directness and realism which is of intense appeal to men, women and children everywhere.

The Turn in the Road is to the screen what James Whitcomb Riley and Eugene Field are to poetry and what such plays as Peaceful Valley, the Poor Relation, the Man from Home, The Fortune Hunter, Peg O' My Heart and the County Chairman were to the stage.

Gentlemen:

The Members of the Institute appreciated the opportunity of viewing your great film Picture entitled "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief." Every chair in our Hall, seating about 2,400, was filled and many were unable to secure admission.

The Picture is an interesting and vivid portrayal of the History of Belgium and of her period of devastation and suffering.

We are glad to be able to announce to our Members that two additional presentations of the Picture will be given.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES D. ATKINS, Director.

The pictorial paper furnished with "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief" is from Original Drawings by noted French and Belgian Artists and has never been equaled by any Motion Picture publicity. To Our Patrons

IT is not often that I permit myself to become enthusiastic to the extent of endorsing a film production, but the beauty and novelty of Mr. Maurice Tourneur's latest spectacle, entitled "Woman," compels me to proclaim it one of the most remarkable motion pictures I have ever seen.

It gives me pleasure to announce that this masterpiece will be shown at the Rivoli for the week beginning Sunday, October 27th.

The production will be given a musical and scenic setting worthy of its superlative merit.

Owing to the length and magnitude of the work, no additional pictorial feature other than the current release of the Creel Committee's official allied war review will be shown on the program.

I earnestly urge every devotee of the motion picture to witness this latest example of Mr. Tourneur's art.

C'EST POUR RIRE?

In a recent issue of an esteemed contemporary appears the statement that the leading exhibitors of Buenos Ayres are in the habit of passing a borrowed copy of their publication down the line until all had read it.

We happened to look up Buenos Ayres on our own subscription records and discovered that within that city were 30 picture men who could not wait for a borrowed copy of the WORLD, but had subscribed in order to get individual copies fresh from the mails.

We will gladly show this list of subscribers to any genuinely interested party. We don't print the names for obvious reasons. The Argentinian market, and every foreign market to be exact, is still a deep and dark secret to most American moving picture publications.

Even on the railroad trains of Argentina the MOVING PICTURE WORLD can be found.

It has subscribers in

In the majority of these countries the renters and exhibitors are blissfully ignorant of the fact that our New York friend is in existence.

And we are not saying a word about CINE-MUNDIAL, considerably more powerful and authoritative a medium in the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking countries than our New York contemporary ever was in the United States.

This is the situation all over the world.

While other publications are good enough to borrow, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is good enough to buy.

HOW FOX ORGANIZED THE WAR DRIVE

What Head of Theatrical Team Created in a Fortnight in the Way of Human and Other Machinery to Extract the Dollars from New Yorkers' Pockets

JUST two weeks prior to November 11, the date set for the opening of the drive for the United War Work Campaign, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., paid a signal tribute to the "infant" of amusement enterprises—the motion picture industry—by requesting William Fox to accept the post of chairman of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team. This, however, is not the first time that Mr. Fox has distinguished himself in connection with welfare work for our boys in the service, as his magnificent work in connection with the Red Cross, Knights of Columbus and Jewish Welfare drives is already well known.

With characteristic energy, Mr. Fox immediately sidetracked his private business and started to work wholeheartedly on the task of seeing that not only the quota assigned to his team would be raised, but that it would be oversubscribed. George M. Cohan was appointed associate chairman, and headquarters consisting of about 15,000 square feet occupying one entire floor at 110 West Forty-second street secured.

An organization, which is a marvel of efficiency, was mapped out and ready for business at the appointed time. About twenty-five different committees were apopinted, consisting of men prominent in amusement circles, to handle the varied details of the work under the supervision of A. S. Kempner, who was appointed campaign director—such as auditor, treasurer, supply, war relics exhibit, victory ball, club activities, special features, exhibitors, co-operation, tickets, sports, benefits, outdoor advertising, publicity, speakers and reception committee.

Women's Committee an Important One.

The largest, as well as one of the most interesting and important, committees, is the woman's collection bureau. The duty of this organization, of which Miss May Upshaw, a woman of great executive ability, is the chairman, is the handling of the collections in 584 theatres and 185 of the principal restaurants in Greater New York. Enlisted in this work are over 8,000 women, who have been divided into squads consisting of a captain and several girls for each theatre. In addition, with each squad there is a bank clerk who assists in tallying the collections and arranging for their deposit in a designated bank. Miss Upshaw has also selected a group of "Victory Girls," who, clad in Grecian robes and with palms of victory, visit the principal hotels and theatres, as well as being present at the special affairs of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, to assist in collections. This group is composed of motion picture and stage favorites.

William Fox.

Exhibitors' Co-operation Valuable.

Working in connection with the Women's Collection Committee and affording valuable co-operation is the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Committee, with S. Berman as chairman, M. A. Kashin, representing Manhattan; John Wittman, the Bronx; Rudolph Saunders, Brooklyn; Samuel Scheer, Queens, and Charles Moses, Richmond. Another important committee working in connection with the theatres is the speakers' bureau, under Judge Aaron Levy, which provides speakers each night for the different houses. The headquarters of this committee is a busy place, the walls being covered with blackboards, on which is kept a record of the houses and the speakers assigned to them.

In addition to the teamwork in the theatres, through the active co-operation of practically the entire theatrical profession and the Committee on Public Information a series of special features has been provided which covers practically every day during the drive, and includes a monster benefit at the Hippodrome, at which a notable aggregation of motion picture stars, vaudeville headliners and stage favorites appeared, and which netted $15,000; a concert at the Metropolitan Opera House in which Maggie Teyte, John McCormack and Jacques Thibaut appeared, and which raised $75,000, and in addition there was a football game at the Polo Grounds between Princeton and Camp Upton, a grand Victory Ball at the Hotel Astor, a boxing carnival at Madison Square Garden, with bouts between many of the most prominent of the "fistic" stars, and a combined Friars' Frolic and Lambs' Gambol at the Metropolitan, which was notable for the large number of well-known actors of the speaking stage who participated. There were also during the entire period two great exhibitions of war relics at the First Field Artillery Armory in New York and Twenty-third Regiment Armory in Brooklyn.

Prominent Men Aid Mr. Fox.

In handling these special events, Mr. Fox was ably assisted by many well known men who did splendid work, including Charles J. Harvey, of the sport committee; Sam Harris and J. J. McCarthy, benefit committee; W. J. Moore and J. M. Welch, outdoor advertising; Theodore Mitchell, publicity; Benjamin Kaye, treasurer; E. F. Albee, Hippodrome benefit.

To show what a tremendous organization was necessary for handling the various activities of this team, in addition to those previously mentioned, ten of the prominent officials of the Fox Film Corporation gave practically their entire time to this work. Altogether, nearly three hundred persons were busy at the headquarters, many working night and day in shifts, and, with the exception of some of the stenographers and clerks employed in clerical capacities, the work was performed entirely by volunteers. An idea of the scope of this organization may be gathered from the fact that it was necessary to install two telephone switchboards, with twenty-eight trunk lines and fifty extensions. The supply department sent out seventy-five thousand pledge cards, together with enormous quantities of reports, instructions and other literature to theatres, and the office equipment of headquarters alone, not counting the district offices of the Women's Collection Committee — forty in all — consisted of seventy-five flat-top desks and chairs, fifty typewriter desks and typewriters, together with several adding machines and comptometers.

All Reports Were in Triplicate.

An example of the thoroughness with which the entire work was handled is shown in the auditing department. In taking up the theatre collections after each performance reports were made in triplicate for each house. The captain of the team sent one to the auditor direct; the bank clerk assisting the captain sent the cash-collection to a designated bank, together with the duplicate report, and the bank the next morning reported the collection to the auditor, which was checked against the original report. Individual records were kept for each theatre, and by noon the previous day's collection was tabulated and the total given to Mr. Fox, who reported it at the luncheon of the United War Work Committee at the Chamber of Commerce.

As an additional evidence of Mr. Fox's effectiveness in war welfare work, at a dinner of the National Vaudeville Managers' Association, after E. F. Albee had requested a subscription for a clubhouse for actors and secured $250,000, Mr. Fox made a short speech, and within five minutes succeeded in raising an additional $25,000 for the present war work drive.

After viewing this spendid organization an observer cannot help feel that the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team under William Fox's leadership will not only reach its allotted quota, but that it will be greatly oversubscribed.

The Ball a Large Event.

One of the biggest events of the week's war drive was the ball arranged by William Fox and his associate chairman, George M. Cohan, as the principal source of contributions from the theatrical section of the national movement. The Astor gold ballroom was packed from 11 o'clock Saturday evening until well into Sunday morning.

The stage contributed the entire entertainment, and from that branch of the profession came most of the crowd in attendance. Moving picture folk there were, and in plenty, contributing to the charm and colorful effect of the revel. The entertainment was furnished by a host of stage celebrities, Flo Ziegfeld, Jr., sending over from the New Amsterdam Roof two big "girl numbers" to fill the ballroom floor with action.

An attempt to mention those who were present, beside being out of all possibility, would present a roster of practically every theatrical person in the city last Saturday night. The dancing was frequently interrupted by "boosters" for the war fund, and the total result of the ticket sales at $10 "per," plus the donations and sales of flowers and favors, must have swelled the total for Team No. 28, headed by William Fox, by many thousands of dollars.

C. C. Pettijohn Host at Pleasant Noon Luncheon

AT Rector's Saturday noon, November 16, C. C. Pettijohn sounded the real note of the industry's awakening when he re-established the very pleasant custom that had previously prevailed of giving luncheons to representatives of the trade press. When the lay-off came luncheons were submerged, and the Pettijohn pleasantry was the first of what may be an indefinite series of "feed" complimentaries to the newspaper folk.

The recent merging of Mutual with the Affiliated, as set forth in last week's World, formed the occasion for Mr. Pettijohn to sound the dinner call. H. A. Brink, general manager of the new and still unnamed organization, and W. J. Clark, president thereof, expected to reach New York in time to join Mr. Pettijohn and the others at luncheon, but they were delayed, reaching town Monday, with the prospect of a busy and important week before them at Mutual's former quarters, 1600 Broadway.

W. A. V. Mack, who is to be general sales manager for the new organization, was on hand, and John Manheimer also was present. William A. Brady pulled up a chair and joined the party to the gratification of all concerned. Mr. Pettijohn gave a sincere and comprehensive talk, forecasting some of the plans he, himself, and his associates have resolved to work out, but voluntary censorship might better be called in that the authoritative announcements may come from Mr. Pettijohn when he is ready to submit them for publication.

Allan Rock, publicity promoter for the new organization, was also in the offing, "making" the table in time to be welcomed by the members of the party in cordial acclaim. The Pettijohn luncheon was in every manner a success.

New York Exhibitors Hold Executive Meeting

THE New York Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League held an executive meeting at its rooms, 727 Seventh avenue, on Friday afternoon, November 14. The all-important topic of discussion was the raising of funds for the replenishing of the League's treasury, which is very much in need of finances to meet current expenses.

It was decided to hold a beefsteak dinner at Castle Cave on December 11 or 16, where final plans would be submitted for the holding of an entertainment and ball in combination with the exhibitors of Brooklyn and some other branch of the industry, by which a large reserve fund can be secured to finance the organization.

A committee of arrangements was appointed, consisting of Charles Steiner, Sol Coleman, William Hilkemier, Charles Haring, J. E. Hartstall and Morris Needles, with power to act. The ball will probably be held at the Hotel Astor sometime in February. Lee A. Ochs who attended the meeting, was requested to act in an advisory capacity, and promised to lend his assistance in any way he possibly can to make the affair a success.

The unexpected presence of Sam Trigger at the meeting was a happy surprise. He remained but a short time, and did not enter into any of the discussions.

The election in December for officers for the coming year was the next subject of debate. A committee was selected by the chair to prepare a slate for nominations. Strong pressure is being brought to bear upon Lee Ochs to accept the nomination for president, with Charles Steiner as vice president; William Hilkemier, secretary, and Morris Needles, treasurer.

The question of the League's exact status was again brought up, and again they were informed by Mr. Ochs that all exhibitors' organizations were independent bodies without any national affiliation, not even a branch of the N. A. M. P. I. until they became members and were officially notified of their admission.

Mitchell Lewis Now a Select Star.

Select announces the acquisition of Mitchell Lewis as a series star. Mr. Lewis, who has become popularly known to photoplay fans for his wonderful characterization of 'Poleon in "The Barrier" and for other creations, has already begun work upon the production of a series of pictures for Select, the first of which, "Code of the Yukon," has been filmed and is in process of preparation for distribution through Select Exchanges. Mitchell Lewis productions will be made in series and marketed in the same manner as the series productions of the other Select stars. The seies for the first season will include six features.

Interest attaches to the news that Mr. Lewis has been taken into the Select fold, by reason of the fact that Select Pictures has up to this time exploited only the work of women stars. Naturally Mitchell Lewis' Select Series Pictures will offer him roles in which he can be seen to greatest advantage.

PROTECTIVE MASKS FOR 'FRISCO

Californians Must Look at Pictures from Behind Shields, While Influenza Elsewhere Is Gradually Coming Under Control—Sunday Closing Agitated in Some Localities

THE gloom cast over the nation by the plague of Spanish influenza is being penetrated by rays of hope and brightness in many sections. That the epidemic is, generally speaking, within control may be accepted as applying to the greater section of the country.

Several strange features are developing in the news that comes to us from our correspondents. For the first time gauze masks are mentioned—San Francisco opened November 16 with these protectors exacted as necessary to admission.

In some places, Richmond, Va., in particular, churches are closed, while theatres are allowed to open. In Boston, as a side issue, the demand for Sunday closing of picture theatres is agitated. Showmen in other sections will have a "Sunday closing" fight upon their hands because of the opening the epidemic made for such discussion.

St. Paul, Minneapolis, and the whole of Minnesota is under strict ban. In St. Paul most drastic regulations have been adopted, the "closed shop" extending to saloons and soda fountains. Kansas City and vicinity are open under restrictions; Greensboro, N. C., having once been opened, is again closed. And so it goes all over the country, with the aggregate of news pointing to a release from the plague. We present herewith the reports from our correspondents:

Richmond Theatres Open; Churches Remain Closed

THE ban has finally been lifted in Richmond, Va., after the State and municipal health boards had staged all manner and kind of dramatic climaxes and had kept the public on their ear for ten days. Saturday morning, November 2, decisive action was promised—and was not forthcoming. Saturday night another meeting was staged and pastors stayed up late to learn whether they would have to prepare a sermon for delivery Sunday morning. Again the vote was a tie and there was no way in which a definite decision could be reached. Meanwhile theatre managers prepared advertising for Sunday's newspapers with the line in parenthesis (Health Conditions Permitting). Another meeting was held Monday morning at ten o'clock at which it was decided to lift the ban effective immediately. The morning papers had carried large announcements of the "Hearts of the World" engagement supposed to start the 4th at the City Auditorium, stating that the management still awaited the action of the health authorities.

Then came the ministers. They were much wrought up over the fact that permission to hold Sunday services was denied, and then the ban was lifted on theatres the following morning, and in lengthy communications decried the fact that secular places of amusement and theatres had got the better of the deal, and charging the authorities with "rank discrimination against the churches and an utter disregard for the spiritual forces in the life of our people."

Meanwhile "Hearts of the World" at the Auditorium, "America's Answer" at the Strand, and other big attractions at the "legitimate" theatres are playing to capacity business and the battle goes merrily on.

Ask Boston's Mayor to Close Theatres Sunday

MAYOR A. J. PETERS, of Boston, has under consideration the protest of eighty property owners living in the Dorchester District against Sunday night moving picture concerts.

The party appeared at a public hearing given on the petition of the Codman Square Theatre management to conduct Sunday night concerts. Objection was based mainly on the ground that the concerts might tend to draw young people away from regular church meetings and that such concerts result in financial gain to other interests than those of a charitable nature. Most of the party were members of the Second (Congregational) Church.

The Rev. Martin D. Kneeland, secretary of the Lord's Day League, loudly opposed the proposed Sunday concerts. Mrs. Charles W. Sprague protested as "a mother, leader of a girls' Bible class and a property owner." She claimed that the motion picture theatres ought to be able to restrict their performances to six days a week and even then have a surplus fund for the Red Cross and other charities. She deplored the fact that "Boston is becoming cosmopolitan." Mrs. Alfred E. Isaacs created a stir when she charged that Mayor Peters was bound up to all kinds of promises as the result of his election and that everything had been fixed for the Codman Square Theatre.

William J. Patron, attorney for the theatre, lauded the photoplay as an educational institution. Mr. Patron read letters from a number of residents of Dorchester indorsing the Sunday entertainments. Captain J. J. Walkins, of the Mattapan police, testified that the theatre had always been well managed and the quality of the performances high. Mayor Peters then took the matter under advisement.

Oklahoma Released from Influenza Quarantine

THE state of Oklahoma with some four hundred theatres was released from quarantine by order of the governor Sunday morning, November 10, and business among motion picture exhibitors and film men in Southwestern territory is soon expected to return to normal. Practically every theatre in Texas and Arkansas has been open and doing a flourishing business since November 1.

A few of the larger Texas cities which were slow to establish a quarantine rule were late in opening. The last large cities to open their picture shows were San Antonio and El Paso, where conditions in regard to influenza were for a while particularly bad. Dallas film row is in a rush and flurry of business owing to the necessity of a complete rebooking.

In all parts of the three states exhibitors are more optimistic than ever before that they will recoup their loss sustained during the closed period before the winter season is ended.

San Francisco Opened November 16.

Latest reports from San Francisco indicate that the Health Board authorized the opening of theatres on November 16, with the exception of a few in the residential district. The ordinance with reference to wearing masks, however, is still effective, and theatre owners are held responsible for its enforcement during performances. Net receipts for the first day were donated to the United War Work campaign. Further advices indicate that a majority of the theatres throughout the state of California will reopen during this week.

Indianapolis Ministers to Agitate Sunday Closing

WHEN the health authorities of Indianapolis lifted the influenza ban a short time ago and the motion picture theatres opened their doors again after an enforced closing of three weeks' duration, the local exhibitors thought their troubles were ended for some time to come. But now come the ministers of the city with an announcement that they are soon to begin a concerted effort to try to close up all commercialized amusements on Sundays.

Members of the Indianapolis Ministerial Association, composed of practically all the ministers in the city, at a meeting during the week of November 4 at the Roberts Park M. E. church, voted to begin immediately a determined drive to close the motion picture houses and other forms of amusements on the Sabbath. A committee of the association was appointed to begin an investigation of the subject at once.

It was first decided at the meeting that all of the ministers of the city will be requested to deliver sermons against Sunday amusements on a specified Sunday, the date to be named later. A motion to set aside the first Sunday in December for that purpose was withdrawn after several ministers suggested awaiting the report of the investigating committee before laying further plans.

Mayor a Friend of the Exhibitors.

Mayor Charles W. Jewett is to be visited by members of the committee and urged to enforce laws governing Sunday activities. Mayor Jewett is known as a staunch friend of the local exhibitors and is generally known to be an advocate of Sunday amusements, so it is believed that the ministers will not have much luck in endeavoring to prevail on the mayor to put the old "blue laws" into effect.

The fact that the laws as they now stand do not provide for the cessation of amusement enterprises solely have caused the local exhibitors and theatre managers to view the proposed efforts of the ministers with considerable optimism. The laws cover street car service, taxicabs and certain kinds of stores that now keep open. That makes the question a mighty big one to deal with and comprises the strongest argument in opposition to Sunday closing.

It is the general belief of the exhibitors and theatre men that the announcement by the ministers was made in order to begin preparations for combating any kind of legislation that may come up in the legislature, when it convenes in January, in regard to the legalizing of Sunday opening in Indiana. The matter was brought up at the last session and would have been carried through if it had not been for an error discovered in the bill during the closing session.

St. Paul Health Authorities Issue Sweeping Closing Ban

THE St. Paul city health department on Monday, November 4, issued an order closing all places of amusement, schools, churches, soda fountains and saloons on account of the influenza epidemic.

Retail stores and other business places not actually dealing in necessities come within the closing order and only the prescription counters in drug stores will be operated. The closing order in that city has been carried out to the letter, and has resulted in shutting off the influx of theatre patrons from Minneapolis who had been going to St. Paul for their amusement.

This move was made necessary, it is explained, by the unexpected increase of the disease in St. Paul, where there is now more than 12,000 cases. Nearly 50 per cent. of the 27,000 school children of the city were absent from school on account of illness prior to the order, physicians said.

Minneapolis May Modify Closing Order.

In the meantime a steady decrease of the disease in Minneapolis continues and exhibitors are preparing to resume business. Modification of the influenza closing ban in Minneapolis will be ordered by the city health department November 16, provided there is a decrease of 50 per cent. in the daily number of deaths from influenza and pneumonia as compared with the situation at the present writing.

To insure the earliest possible lifting of the local closing orders rigid adherence to the present health restrictions is urged by Dr. H. M. Guilford, city health commissioner. The present situation is clearing up rapidly and the malady will soon be eradicated if crowding in public places does not occur within the next few days, Dr. Guilford said.

Urge Opening to Relieve Employes.

The decision to rescind the closing regulations was announced by the health department, after a conference with Minneapolis theatre and moving picture house proprietors and exchange managers.

I. H. Ruben, chief spokesman for the theatre men, urged that the theatres be opened in order to relieve the condition of 1,000 men employed in the Minneapolis theatres who have been out of work since the influenza ban went into effect. Robert B. Scott, manager of the Metropolitan opera house, said theatre employes had been kept waiting for four weeks without any assurance as to when they might be taken back to work.

Dr. Guilford said the epidemic of influenza would be considered on the wane when the daily number of deaths did not exceed seven. At present, he said, from twelve to fourteen deaths are reported daily.

Kansas City District Opens With Limit on Admissions

THE Kansas City teritory started the week of November 10 fairly free from epidemic restrictions as to opening—but still subject to restrictions as to the number of patrons that might be received. In many localities the authorities maintained inspection of theatres to see that no more than half the capacity of the houses was utilized.

In Kansas City the end of the severest form of restrictions due to the epidemic was brought about through the inability of officials to find a happy medium between complete shutting down of business and bans that would affect only the real sources of contagion. The original ban was against theatres and public gatherings and against overcrowding of street cars; the imposition of short hours for stores, 9 to 4, applied to only the large stores until November 6, when the restriction as to hours was extended to all stores in the downtown district. The following day, because of hosts of complaints from downtown merchants, this restriction was extended to suburban stores also. Many downtown places of business—notably saloons—and many outlying merchants did not strictly observe this order, so on November 8, the mayor issued a proclamation removing the larger part of the restrictions. Exception was made of theatres and public gatherings, from which the restrictions were to be mostly removed Saturday at midnight, so that Sunday services could be held, and theatres open, on that day. On churches and theatres, however, the same order prevailed, that only half the seats should be occupied—every alternate one.

Worked for Just Regulation.

The moving picture men of Kansas City had kept right on the job throughout the epidemic—and the course of the restrictions—trying to secure an equitable adjustment of the burden. The chief feature of the burden was that the theatres were the easiest to regulate, and therefore were the most stringently regulated. Representatives of the industry tried zealously to make the officials see this fact—and to extend their orders to cover other sources of spread of the disease, or else to remove the restrictions altogether. The alertnes of the men of the industry is sufficiently indicated, when it is said that no meeting was held to discuss restrictions, at which moving picture men were not present, and heard.

A public meeting was called at the city hall on Wednesday, November 6, where the largest representation of moving picture men was present. Frank Newman, local exhibitor, was temporary chairman, and Joe Donegan, proprietor of the Century Theatre, a burlesque house, was permanent chairman. This meeting emphasized to the board of health that the restrictions were ineffectual and failed to control some of the most important sources of contagion; and the meeting was largely responsible for the imposition of more stringent regulations. The local moving picture men realized the lack of co-operation in their own ranks, but did not seem able to bring about the desired harmonious action.

Wants Co-ordination of Effort.

"We see where we need co-operation, and maybe now we can proceed to get it," was the comment of several men of the industry. Lee D. Balsly, manager of Metro, was present at more meetings than any other one man of the business; and he is now seeking to bring about co-ordination of effort, using the experiences of the past month as illustration of his point. He points out that when several exhibitors appeal to various officials, on the ground of business being lost because of restrictions, and the apparent discrimination against the industry, the officials cannot avoid the impression that the exhibitor is appealing for his own personal interests.

Some Counties Still Closed in Indiana.

The ban against theatres and public gatherings because of the influenza epidemic in Indiana still remain tight on a few counties in different parts of the State, but State health officials predict that conditions will soon be so improved that it will be lifted everywhere in Indiana by the latter part of the week. Fort Wayne still has a large number of cases and so have some of the cities in Dearborn, Gibson, Noble and Randolph counties.

Dayton Lifts Ban on Children.

When the Dayton theatres were given permission to open by the health board, it was with the understanding that children under sixteen were not to be allowed admission until further notice, as the influenza was more serious among the children than older people. This ban served to decrease attendance to quite an extent, some of the neighborhood houses being barely able to operate in face of the order. Downtown managers fixed the loss at one-fourth, this being a conservative figure. The ban on children was officially lifted Monday, November 11.

No Date Set for Cincinnati Opening.

After having been closed continuously, on account of the influenza epidemic, since October 5, a total period of nearly six weeks, Cincinnati moving picture and other theatres began making their arrangements to reopen for business sometime during the week of November 10, although the precise date has not been set. As the epidemic seems to have reached its finish, however, and the opening of the schools has been set for November 13, it is virtually certain that the theatres will have been opened by the end of the week.

The closed period has been utilized by the managers of the hundred-odd houses in and around Cincinnati for a thorough cleaning and renovating, in order to remove any possibility of further infection, and they are now in better shape in this respect than ever before. The loss on account of the enforced suspension of business would be difficult to estimate, but it has been tremendous. Employes, exhibitors and film exchanges have all suffered together. An application by the exhibitors for permission to open the week of November 3 was turned down by the Board of Health, which thought the time was not yet ripe for letting down the bars on the restrictions.

Cleveland Ban Lifted.

Cleveland picture houses opened Monday, November 11, the day the armistice was signed, and all did a tremendous business. The theatres had been closed for four weeks, and it is estimated they lost $60,000 a day. This is figured for picture and "legitimate" theatres. With the lifting of the influenza ban, the Miles Theatre, a vaudeville house, changed to pictures.

November 17 Marked Portland Opening.

The closing ban was lifted from Portland, Ore., theatres Sunday, November 17. At a meeting of the theatre managers, the mayor and health officers held Saturday, November 9, it was so decided. Many of the smaller cities have already opened, and the opening of the Portland houses will likely be the signal for the lifting of the ban in the state.

All the houses used the time to renovate and make improvements and a new atmosphere prevails. All the theatres held shows in readiness, so there was no delay. Though some of the employes have sought other employment during this time, it is anticipated all will return to their stations.

Ban Lifting in Northwest.

The influenza ban is beginning to lift quite generally in this territory and moving picture houses in many cities of the northern peninsula of Michigan, North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Iowa opened during the past week. Exchanges in Minneapolis report better business during the past few days than at any time since the epidemic became general. Ralph Parker, manager of the Sunbeam Theatre, of Duluth, who was a visitor in Minneapolis the past week, says business is at a complete standstill in that city, but that moving picture men are expecting that business will be resumed there within a week or ten days.

Hamilton, Ohio, Opens.

The board of health of Hamilton, Ohio, somewhat in advance of similar bodies in other Ohio cities, raised the ban on public gatherings effective November 6, having decided on November 4 that the epidemic of influenza had about run its course. Churches and schools were first permitted to open, moving picture houses being next on the list.

Greensboro, N. C., Closes Again.

After remaining open for ten days following the epidemic of influenza, health officials of Greensboro, N. C., suddenly descended upon the theatres of the city on November 14 and ordered immediate closing. At the same time an order was made again closing all churches, public schools and other places of assembly indefinitely, a sudden reappearance of the scourge in aggravating numbers bringing about the action.

So far as known, this is the first city to be closed again after opening. Greensboro did not close until the epidemic was at its crest, and remained closed only a little more than two weeks the first time. However, it is doubtful whether the authorities will again allow them to open until the last vestige of influenza has disappeared from the city. The five theatres in Greensboro are under the same management, Pryor Brothers having recently bought the R. D. Craver interests here. Mr. Pryor controls theatres in other cities in North Carolina and Virginia, all of which are now open.

Charlotte, N. C., Opened November 7.

Picture theatres in Charlotte, N. C., allowed to open here on November 7, action of the health authorities being suddenly taken after a short session the evening before, and coming as a surprise to the theatre men who had resigned themselves to a wait until at least the middle of the month. The epidemic was checked as suddenly as it began, and there is hardly a case in Charlotte now, notwithstanding the fact that the streets and all public places are constantly congested with soldiers from Camp Greene. Charlotte probably escaped with a lighter dose of the epidemic than any other city in the South of its size, a matter on which the theatre men are congratulating themselves.

PICTURES ARE SOLDIERS' THIRD REQUISITE

Only Food and Sleep Outrank Them in Importance—Screen Girl in Gingham Makes the Hit

IT HAS BEEN the experience of those of us in the field that our troops overseas want three things. These three, in the order of their importance, are: Food, sleep and movies.

Chow comes first. A soldier's mind is never very far from his stomach. Then comes sleep, and after that the movies. Motion pictures are the biggest factor in the war in keeping the men in the field contented. They don't mind putting their bayonet where it belongs if they know that William S. Hart is going to be there at 8.

We are now putting on eleven hundred shows a week for our troops in France alone, with similar work in England and Italy. We are effecting this by means of 350 projecting machines. These films are distributed by the Community Motion Picture Bureau, operating through the Y. M. C. A., which is now the largest consumer of film in the world.

William A. Brady, Carl Laemmle, T. S. Tally and some of the rest of them would get a good laugh if they could see the primitive conditions we have for showing our films to the men. It would bring back the old days. We dump our programs in a camionette, put in our storage battery, tie on our curtain and hit it off in the direction of the Line. I suppose we are the only exhibitors in the world who play to a packed house every time we put on a show.

Every Seat Always Taken.

We call the performance a failure if every seat is not taken and the rafters filled. Every night a thousand men in France see the pictures from the roof, and if any show on Broadway got half the house a single film over here does it would double the price before morning. The men hang on with one hand and whistle through their fingers with the other.

Sometimes it isn't inside; it's out in the open! Our wagon arrives, a screen is stretched between two trees, the storage battery is connected up and heaven is among them. And when the villain blows smoke through his nose and does the girl wrong, it is all the military police can do to keep the boys from drawing on him. And then at the end when the hero takes the girl into his arms and strolls off down the leafy lane the boys get pretty choky around the throat, and half an hour later you can see them sitting under one of the lights looking at a picture in a locket, and if one of the cinema men comes up they will sidle up to him and say: "Here, 'Y', is a picture I brought along with me. She lives in Maryville. I just wish you could meet her once. You know that cooking dress the girl had on in that picture! Well, mine wears one like it sometimes—only my girl don't have to make up to be good looking. She's just naturally that way."

William S. Hart is the favorite, with Douglas Fairbanks a close second. Among the women Mary Pickford is first. The night a Pickford film is on the rafters play to capacity.

Vampires Unfashionable on Screen.

Vampires are not the fashion in France. The boys want a picture that reminds them of the girl they left at the railway station. Riding, athletics and shooting is what they want among the men, and sweet wholesomeness among the women. It is a good sign.

The last thing they want is war. They get all of that they want in the trenches. When a civil war pictures goes on they begin to think about the letters they ought to write. And if it is a play about the present war, they have a good laugh and go out and get in a crap game. A war play may stand them up at the Rivoli, but here it sends them out behind the mess tent to roll the bones. A producer planning on putting out a play that will thrill the boys over here had better confine his attention to a girl in gingham. The last thing they want is an army recruited from an employment agency and drilled behind the car barns. Every time an actor throws up his arms and dies in front of the camera the boys gasp with laughter and shout for more. They would almost as soon see an American-made war play as they would Charlie Chaplin.

Each week the grip of the movies grows on the boys. We who are connected with the cinema work in France sometimes wonder what the legitimate productions after the war is over will do for patronage.

Give us movies, and more movies. We can not get enough. They have helped to win the war.

HOMER CROY.

Ray Bagley Dies Suddenly.

Raymond Bagley, of Wid's Daily staff, died suddenly November 13 from heart failure, following an attack of influenza. The body was taken to Detroit, Minn., on the 15th. Ray was twenty-eight years of age, and was born in Minnesota. He had been associated with the moving picture industry for several years, and came to Wid's from the Triangle's Western publicity department. During the time he worked for his last employer he made an excellent impression on the film men and the picture reviewers with whom he came in contact.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM E. BLAISDELL KILLED

Elder Son of George Blaisdell of the World Falls After Breaking Into Hindenburg Line

THE many friends of George Blaisdell in the moving picture industry will be shocked to learn that his elder son, Captain William E. Blaisdell, of the 106th infantry, was killed on September 29 while leading his men against the Hindenburg line between Cambrai and St. Quentin. A letter from William Pease, Machine Gun Company, 106th infantry, to his sister, Laura Pease, who is employed in the same office as Roland E. Blaisdell, the only brother of the captain, tells the manner of Captain Blaisdells' death:

"You mentioned Major Blaisdell in you letter. Yes, he was in charge of the battalion to which our platoon was attached, and every man was proud to fight under such a splendid fellow.

"He led us over the top and started the taking of an important line that some people thought impregnable. We took the line and went a comfortable bit the other side, but our good major was wounded. While being carried back he thought his men needed him, so he ordered the stretcher bearers to let him down.

Leaves Stretcher and Returns to Front.

"He got up and forced his way back after the men. Unluckily a stray shot hit him for the second time, this time fatally. Every man mourns the loss of this good man, but there is one consolation—he got it in one of the hardest fought battles of the war and he got it with a smile on his face.

"This battle will never be forgotten when New York and Brooklyn hear the details of it."

Captain Blaisdell was a Brooklyn man and a member of the Fourteenth New York Infantry when he was mustered into the United States service a year ago last July. The Brooklyn Daily Eagle, under date of November 14, published this heading: "Brooklyn Troops First to Pierce Hindenburg Line—106th Infantry Won Undying Fame, at a Terrible Price, at Bellicourt." An extract from the article follows:

"It was at Bellicourt, fronting on the Sambre Canal, the key to the whole German position, that the 106th pierced the Hindenburg line. It made its way through a maze of wire, it stormed strongly held trenches with an utter disregard of fierce machine gun fire, and it pressed into service cooks, orderlies, clerks, teamsters—anybody who could hold rifle and bayonet—in order that the attack might go on. Brooklyn was represented there, at the Hindenburg line, by a unit that would not be denied—by a unit whose valor must tug at the very heart of every Brooklynite."

William E. Blaisdell was born at Gloucester, Mass., 31 years ago, and had lived in Brooklyn since his fifth year. When nineteen he joined the state guard and rose to the rank of first lieutenant in the Fourteenth Infantry before he was twenty-three. He resigned at the time of his marriage, but rejoined his regiment in July, 1915, when the Mexican situation was acute. The following winter he was placed in command of Company L, and on June 27 was commissioned captain. After being mustered into the United States service he was named to command and to organize Company M of the 106th Infantry, at Spartanburg, being the senior captain of the battalion. At the beginning of the year he was transferred to the supply company to equip the 3,700 men for overseas service.

the knack of winning the affection as well as the respect of his men They seemed to sense his fearlessness, and the letter of Machine Gunner Pease indicates they had correctly estimated him.

He leaves a wife and two sons, and was known and esteemed in film circles, having joined the Screen Club shortly after its organization. Both of his grandfathers were in the Civil War. In civil life he had been for nine years with Hayden, Stone & Co., bankers.

Captain Blaisdell had been formally nominated for major, had taken his physical examination for that rank six weeks before his death, and shortly after September 1 had been placed in command of the Third Battalion. He was serving in that capacity when he fell.

The writer had the honor of shaking his hand and conversing with him for a moment, before the United States entered the war. Quiet efficiency was his most impressive characteristic. No matter how slight the acquaintance, every person who ever came in contact with William E. Blaisdell knew that he would "carry on" to the end.

Government Will Continue to Release Its War Review

CHARLES S. HART, director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, makes the authoritative announcement that, despite the close of the war, the Official War Review released through Pathe will be continued indefinitely, and that all other Government pictures now issued or being assembled will be released according to schedule.

"It is only fair to exhibitors and the motion picture interests generally," says Director Hart, "that they should know just what to expect in regard to the war pictures that have been announced by the Division of Films. The progress of events in Europe—the evacuation of the various invaded territories, the reconstruction of devastated France and Belgium, the ferment in Germany, the meeting of the peace commission—these are all matters of tremendous historical and news interest, and they will be fully covered by the Official War Review in order that the American people may keep in pictorial touch with the important and stirring events that mark the remaking of the map of Europe. The necessity for its continuance is obvious."

"Under Four Flags" will probably be the last big feature war picture to be issued by the Division of Films, but several two-reel pictures are now being assembled—notably those included in the U. S. A. Series—and they will be issued as announced. The present activities of the Division of Films carries its work up to June 1.

"Under Four Flags" Shown at Both Rivoli and Rialto

THE latest of the big films made by the United States Government opened at the Rivoli and Rialto Sunday, November 17, for a week's run at each house, marking an event in local film annals. Never before has the same feature been "first run" by the same management in two houses at the same time—and if it were running in many more theatres this week New Yorkers would be that much more fortunate in their opportunities to behold Uncle Sam's Victory Army pictured authentically in the very act of winning the war.

"Under Four Flags" appears as a record accomplishment—the nation's picture story to its own people recording the great deeds of the brave Yanks. S. L. Rothapfel edited the picture for the Division of Films and supervised the musical accompaniment. Kenneth C. Beaton wrote the titles. Mr. Rothapfel has been praised for his work in assembling the film. Elsewhere in this issue there is a critical review.

Despite the rain which began to fall just at noon, the Sunday crowds at both the Rivoli and Rialto were of remarkable size, weather considered. The downpour continued unceasingly afternoon and evening. Director Rothapfel has arranged special days for the whole week, and the third U. S. Official War Feature will doubtless be witnessed by thousands at the two Broadway theatres.

"GLAD" TIDINGS FOR PICKFORD FANS

Mary, Mary, Quite Contented, Has Gone Back to Los Angeles with a First National Contract in Her Grip and Rights to Two Record-Breaking Stage Successes

By Edward Weitzel

DAVID WARFIELD is playing in a revival of "The Auctioneer" at the Manhattan Opera House, New York. Henry Miller opened in a revival of "Daddy Long Legs" at his own theatre, November 16, with Ruth Chatterton in her old role. Mary Pickford has secured the Jean Webster story for her first picture under her First National contract. There is a question of cause and effect in these three statements that is worth considering:

Human nature is much the same whether it goes to see "The Auctioneer" or is entertained by "Daddy Long Legs" on the stage or the screen. Certain qualities, common to both stories, are what attract the public. "Pollyanna" was the first stage production to be called a "glad" play, but "The Auctioneer" and "Daddy Long Legs" are closely related to it by reason of their cheerful and simple outlook on life. The undiminished popularity of the Warfield piece and the long-run record of the Jean Webster play indicate the existence of stories that never grow old. When the leading characters are acted by stage or screen favorites long identified with the same class of parts the charm of the familiar themes is doubled. It was this element that kept Joseph Jefferson playing "Rip Van Winkle" for so many years, and permitted Lotta to pile up a fortune with her amusing characterizations. Cinderella under any other name will always remain a fascinating young person, and in whatever guise Mary Pickford chooses to present her, she will continue to be the most popular of the screen star's impersonations.

An Interview by Proxy.

Wishing to obtain Mary Pickford's views on one or two phases of her new contract, and learning that she had left for Los Angeles immediately after signing the document, the writer sought the office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and suggested an interview by proxy. An official of the company, qualified to speak for the highest-salaried woman in the world, consented to the proposition. Most of the subjects touched upon during the interview had been gone over with Miss Pickford and her mother. The official's individual views of the new order of things were also well worth recording. No time was wasted in starting the string of interrogations.

"So, Mr. Proxy, your latest independent star, has paid $80,000 for the screen rights of two famous stage successes. That's hanging up a new record right at the start, isn't it?"

"Yes. But Miss Pickford figures correctly that they are cheap at the price. Both stories have had at least two hundred thousand dollars' worth of advertising in book form and on the stage, and the titles are a household word like Tarzan of the Apes and other celebrated stories that the public was eager to see pictured on the screen. "Daddy Long Legs" and "Pollyanna" have a following that will act as so many advance agents for them in their new form. It was this fact that came second in influencing their purchase,"

"What was the principal consideration?"

"The perfect adaptability of the heroines of both plays to Miss Pickford's line of work. Recognizing that the general run of her screen admirers would rather smile than weep and that the 'glad' play has won a place for itself that can never be taken away, she is content to give her public what it wants. And, I may add, what it needs—the healthful relaxation of innocent mirth and youthful sentiment."

Specializing on the Screen.

"Mary Pickford believes, then, in specialization for the screen star?"

"Yes, indeed! The history of the amusement world shows clearly that humanity never tires of seeing its favorite actors in the parts best suited to their personality. There are songs that will be sung so long as the language in which they are written is still spoken, songs that appeal to the masses by reason of their simplicity and truth, or for their idealization of the commonplace. We have many stories of the same nature. It is this class of screen fiction that Mary Pickford does best, and it is her intention to obtain the best examples of this branch of motion picture material from every possible source. Originality is very desirable, of course, but it is not the most important quality. By taking time to make each picture as nearly perfect as possible the Pickford releases will maintain a standard worthy the position and personal ability of the star."

"Do you, Mr. Proxy, believe that fiction is to remain the leading activity of the screen?"

"Everything points to that conclusion. Although the scope of the moving picture is much wider than the spoken drama, the screen theatre is essentially a place for recreation and entertainment. The news reel, the scenic, the propaganda picture and the historical novel all have their place in making up the theatre programs; but fiction of the tried and true sort—stories of a make-believe world that are none the less convincing because the endings always come out right—is bound to predominate. It is this fact that narrows the range of stage successes every year and keeps such skilled producers as Winchell Smith continually presenting the same old story in a new dress. Three Wise Fools is the latest addition to the Smith brotherhood of plays, and all the New York critics had to admit the charm of the old theme when decked out with fresh trimmings. Smith is a specialist who does one class of play better than any one else. The screen will tend more and more to develop actor-producers who, like Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin, will work along these lines."

Washington City Managers to Meet.

A meeting of the Washington City Exchange Managers' Association is scheduled to be held at the Fox Film Corporation exchange on Ninth street at 12 o'clock noon, November 24. At this meeting a tentative draft of the constitution and by-laws which will thereafter govern the work of the organization will be gone over and other important business will be discussed.

Valentine Grant a War Worker.

ASSOCIATION WOULD AMEND BY-LAWS

Proposes at Quarterly Session to Give Equal Representation to Exhibitor League Officials

THE regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held in the association rooms Thursday, November 14. The meeting was called to order by President William A. Brady at 11:17 o'clock. Among those present were P. A. Powers, Arthur Friend, Paul Brunet, Ricord Gradwell, J. E. Brulatour, W. L. Sherrill, Tom Wylie, P. J. Schaefer, Alfred Black, H. C. Hespe, Ernest Horstmann, Julian Solomon, W. W. Irwin, J. F. Coufal, Paul Gulick and J. L. Hoff.

The most important action taken was the agreement to amend the by-laws of the association so that the recently amalgamated exhibitors' organizations could receive a 50 per cent. representation on the board of directors and all of the standing and special committees of the association.

As the by-laws can only be amended by a meeting of the members of the entire association on receipt of a twenty-one days' notice it was moved that Peter J. Schaefer be empowered to draft the necessary amendments which on approval would be submitted to a general meeting of the association to be held on or about December 10.

The first business transacted was the election of the following companies to membership in the association: Triangle Film Corporation, Photoplay Magazine, Apeda Studios, U. Ono, John Olsen & Company, Robertson-Cole Company, and to reinstate to membership the Triangle Distributing Company.

To Attend Reconstruction Convention.

It was decided to send a committee of five representing the association to the reconstruction convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which is to be held at Atlantic City December 4, 5 and 6. Mr. Brady appointed the following committee composed of a representative of each division of the association: Adolph Zukor, Peter J. Schaefer, Ricord Gradwell, Jules Brulatour and James L. Hoff. All of these accepted the appointment and agreed to attend the convention.

The reports of the executive secretary and the treasurer were read and approved and filed. The remainder of the morning session was then given over to an informal discussion of the recent motion picture exposition held at Madison Square Garden. The meeting then adjourned at 1:20 o'clock for luncheon, and reconvened at 2:57 o'clock.

The afternoon session was taken up almost entirely by a discussion of the manner in which the new exhibitors' branch is to be organized and the manner in which it is to participate in the affairs of the association. Peter J. Schaefer called attention to the fact that the amalgamation between the two exhibitors' leagues—the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the American Exhibitors' Association—and their incorporation as a branch of the association had been brought about as the result of an understanding to the effect that the exhibitors should have a 50 per cent. representation on the board of directors of the association and all of the committees. He stated that it would be impossible to work out definite plans for the organization of the exhibitors' branch until the by-laws of the association had been amended providing for this 50 per cent. representation.

To Call Meeting for December 10.

As only the members of the entire association can amend the by-laws on a twenty-one days' notice, it was decided that a meeting of the members of the association be called for on or about December 10. The motion covering the above action made by Arthur Friend was as follows: "That it is the opinion of the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that to equitably provide for the inclusion in the National Association of the exhibitors of the United States, that the president of the National Association be requested to obtain from Peter J. Schaefer, representing the exhibitors' branch, the plans and desires of the exhibitors with a view to drafting such amendments to the articles of organization of the association and its by-laws in order to effect an equitable arrangement along these lines."

Mr. Schaefer then read a report of the action of the Ohio exhibitors and the preliminary arrangements they had effected for the inauguration of a Sunday opening campaign in Ohio during the coming session of the legislature. On the motion of Mr. Sherrill the report was referred to the Sunday opening committee of the association.

Oppose Action of Music Publishers.

Alfred Black, of Maine, then requested that the association go on record as being opposed to the action of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in discriminating against the motion picture theatres of the country in favor of the vaudeville theatres. Mr. Black described the history of the action of the society in this respect, and was empowered to draw up a resolution condemning the discriminatory action of the society. Following is the resolution:

WHEREAS, The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has publicly announced that it proposes to stringently enforce its arbitrary practice of demanding a yearly license fee from motion picture theatres; and

WHEREAS, Said society has entered into an agreement with the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association whereby no tax is charged in the vaudeville theatres owned and controlled by the members of that association, be it therefore

RESOLVED, That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry go on record as being absolutely oposed to the action of said American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in attempting to enforce a license tax upon the motion picture theatres of the United States; and be it further

RESOLVED, That the discrimination against the motion picture theatres in favor of the vaudeville theatres, from whom we are informed no license fees are collected, is neither fair nor just, and, in fact, against the best interests of the compositions involved; and be it further

RESOLVED, That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry believes that with the vast interest involved it should do everything in its power to prevent the imposition of such license tax, and that a committee of three be appointed to investigate the situation as it exists and recommend such action as may seem advisable suporting the motion picture theatres of the United States against the imposition of any license tax; and be it further

RESOLVED, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the representative of the aforesaid American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The meeting adjourned at 4:20.

Pearl White Climbs Ladder for Lambs in War Drive

Many thousand people, assembled on Fifth Avenue, between Forty-second and Forty-fourth streets in New York City, November 14, as Pearl White, Pathe's famous serial queen, climbed up a seventy-five foot extension ladder, part of the equipment of the New York Fire Department. Miss White who is known wherever films are screened for her absolute lack of fear and her willingness to perform any feat ever doped out by a scenario writer or director, interrupted the making of her next serial "The Lightning Raider," in order to come to New York and do this stunt in the interests of the combined Lambs' and Friars' drive for the United War Work Campaign. Each day of the week the two organizations held a parade on Fifth Avenue and two blocks of the famous thoroughfare were roped off by the police, and the best talent of the two clubs gave an entertainment while other members armed with tin dishpans scouted for change. Miss White climbed the ladder for the Lambs Club and over $1,000 was gathered in on the day she did the stunt.

World Pictures Installs Heating Plant

During the temporary lay-off at the World studio at Fort Lee a large heating plant has been installed. This indicates that the World will be active in the making of productions at its Fort Lee plant during the coming winter. In the past four weeks the scenario department has been able to turn out a sufficient number of continuities that will keep them sufficiently in advance of the needs of the stars, so that a director will be able to give his script several weeks' study before actual operation of filming his story, all of which will result, it is expected, in a betterment of product. It will also give the working staff more time in getting scenery props and other accessories ready for the director's call.

CLOSING COULDN'T STOP TEXAS SMILE

Galveston Exhibitors Still Right on the Job—Texas Amusement Company, with Hulsey at Head, Has Big Interests—How Martini Has Climbed in Thirty Years

Galveston, Texas, October 24.

IN spite of the pressure of war economy, higher prices for help, pictures and overhead, and the piling on of nearly the last straw, influenza, the exhibitors of Southern Texas are still smiling and right on the job. This is convinced by the way in which these men took the recent epidemic which caused them to close for over two weeks. Not an exhibitor grumbled; not one seemed to kick and snort because the health boards saw it necessary to put the lid on public gatherings. On the other hand they tried to co-operate, and instead of three-sheeting their houses they bent their best efforts in selling Liberty Bonds and aiding the city and health authorities.

Just prior to the spread of the disease business was quite satisfactory. Galveston, where I spent more time, was teeming with activity, both military and social. Business was not up to the standard, but it was good enough to cause advertising, competition and the usual propaganda of pictures. Galveston is primarily a seaboard city, and when the submarine war started it dropped to below zero, hence business followed commerce, and likewise the theatres found patronage on the wane. Then the military activity came and it stimulated business. No one can complain, in the face of war, and they all do their best and keep smiling.

Hulsey Head of a Big Business.

The largest firm in this vicinity is the Texas Amusement Company, of which Earl H. Hulsey is president and general manager, and S. T. McDonald secretary and treasurer. This firm owns the Queen theatres in Galveston, Houston and Dallas, three of the finest theatres in this section; also the Zoe in Houston, the Kyle in Beaumont, the Hippodrome in Waco, the Old Mill, Hippodrome and Grand in Dallas. They also control the Grand in Galveston, a combination house, now running big time vaudeville. The Dallas Exchange is also run by Mr. Hulsey.

Until recently Jean Finley, an aggressive young advertising man, had charge of the Queen publicity work in Galveston; but he was promoted to the managership of the Hippodrome in Dallas, then the military service grabbed him, as he turned twenty-one, in time to get into the new draft.

At present Mr. McDonald is running the Galveston end of the Texas interests, and is kept quite busy. He is a pleasant man, an able manager, and a fine fellow. You never can judge the business barometer by his face, for he has one of those smiles that knows no retreat. His grin barrage goes over incessantly. He believes in advertising in the papers, maintaining constant publicity, and advertising the picture rather than the star. This firm is a member of the First National, and runs in addition the big features put out by the larger producers. Business changes here with the seasons; in summer it is light on account of the beach, which is a counter attraction; and winter brings the folks downtown away from the cool beach winds. The Queen is a modern, well-equipped house with heating and cooling plant, large pipe organ, excellent fittings, and uses Power's 6-B projection on a Gold Fibre screen. It seats about 1,200.

The next house in importance here is the Dixie Number One, a 650 seating capacity theatre, modern and well equipped, and run by one man who has risen from the ranks, A. M. Martini, who came over twenty-nine years ago from Italy. He landed in this city with $4.80, and today his investment is over $80,000. He laughs when he speaks of his rise, telling how he had no friends, no kin, no job—nothing. He worked, entered the grocery business, then the show game, and now the name of his theatre is a household word.

Making a Dollar Bring Full Value.

Mr. Martini's policy is to give the most possible for the money, treating his patrons as a storekeeper would; and "keeping the American dollar worth one dollar," which is a rather wise idea. He aims to suit the more popular purse, as his prices indicate; yet the show is high class and worth every bit of the money. Mr. Martini is a regular man and a regular exhibitor. His friends believe in him, and his standing with competitors shows that his policy to the world is that of the good old golden rule. I enjoyed thoroughly my interview with this man. In addition the Dixie Number Two, a smaller and nearby house is run by him. Lately he has taken over the Crystal Number One—here they seem to name the houses the same and then number them. His object in having three houses is to suit the purse of all, and he is doing it regularly.

Mr. Martini is a true patriot of America; yet a staunch Italian. He has two sons in the service. His Dixie No. 1 is the only house to display the picture of President Wilson in place of a one-sheet in a handsome brass stand. He regrets that he has not a dozen sons to send across to enter Berlin and spread liberty.

The Palace, Strand, and Lincoln houses are run by the Bell Enterprises, of which G. W. Bell, Jr., is manager, assisted by his father. They operate other houses nearby and are engaged also in the exchange business.

Business Good in Dallas and Houston.

I made a trip to Houston and one to Dallas, and in both places business was good. Of course it is not up to standard by any means, but it is getting by. Everywhere the theatre is greatly aiding the sale of liberty bonds, the purposes of the government, and everything patriotic. It would indeed be sad if anything happened to the picture industry to close, stop, or even modify business as it is. The film industry is here permanently and its progress must not be hampered in the least. The recent closing of the theatres has shown beyond a doubt that the pulse of business is regulated by the theatres.

CALLS AGAIN DOES PEDIGO OF OKLAHO

Hardly Know Old Highland Now, Says Exhibitor in Telling How He Has Fussed Up His Show House

Guthrie, Oklahoma, Nov. 7.

YOU would hardly know the old place now. Will wonders never cease? Can one believe his own eyes? Miracles are performed at this day and age, and it has always been so. Our Show House, the Highland Theatre, has for many years been in failing health. Its constitution had become weakened by the hand of mother time.

It had withstood June gales, cloudbursts, and the frisky cyclones, with a firm determination to stick to the finish.

It has long needed the tender care of the plaster man and the skilled hand of the noble painter to bring back the bloom of its childhood.

These things are now and for certain taking place. Its abdominal walls are being scraped and given the once over; its system being renovated; its back and front being patched up, and when we last noticed the gallant workmen they were going over the top.

We charged and captured every living microbe, caught them red handed, alone and unassisted. We gained the victory, and boosted them bag and baggage out into the cold and cruel world. At this writing we are not ashamed to look a full grown adult microbe square in the face, and dare him to return. Microbes, be-ware—you enter at your peril. No kidding. It would be suicide. A microbe would be taking his life in his own hands that would dare come here. We have thoroughly fumigated and stinkigated the massive structure from one end to the other, and we now claim it is fit for human beings.

Patrons Now May Sleep in Sweet Repose.

It has always been our high aim in life and our great desire to have a place of sublime comfort, a show where you could sleep in sweet repose, and forget your troubles while you snore gently on. We knew you objected to having cold, slimy, wet water trickle down your spinal column, playing Johnstown flood up and down your vertebra while you were trying to watch the villain steal the railroad or run off with the farm. So we discontinued this part of our program.

We knew you detested falling through the holes in the floor, where you would silently erase several square inches of nice juicy cuticle from your slender shins. Of course you were embarrassed; we do not blame you, and will not even repeat what you said. They all heard you. This thing is no more. We cunningly put the kibosh on this.

Bars Are Up for the Brindle Cow.

No more will the neighbor's brindle cow meander in through the cracks in the wall. These things are closed to her forever. It is better so.

No more will the village stock find a haven of rest within its sacred walls. Nay, nay! This cannot was.

I dare say we could fill our Show House full of hay and that the wind would not blow it out. Yea, verily. It would retain corn in the ear. Did you hear this?

I had worried over this, and we had sighed sighs of different size. We were almost persuaded to turn our show shop into a livery stable. One reason for this thought we have played lots of Barn Stormers in here, and the change would have been easy. Foolish boy! We knew not what we wanted.

Even Pedigo Couldn't Duplicate House.

Alas, the old place is on the road to recovery. A great change has taken place. This place will be a work of art, and I trust a joy forever. This building could not be duplicated by the hand of man. I doubt if I could make one like it myself. It is the collection of a lifetime. Boards from everywhere: some of them from boxes of groceries for which I have never paid. But we are strong-headed and determined to put her in proper shape, even though it costs us sixteen dollars. We have men with weak minds and strong backs now mowing down the weeds in front of the show, that the howling throng may enter six abreast, as soon as the ban is lifted. Then when we insert ourself in our little thirty-two caliber overalls we will have something to put in our pockets other than our little brown hands.

It is not well to live in Vain.

So we shall remain in Guthrie.

Don't crowd gen-tel-men, take your time. NED PEDIGO.

"Hearts of the World" Again.

D. W. Griffith's spectacular production, "Hearts of the World," after a record of five hundred and six performances in Greater New York, is again to be seen in New York, this time at the Victory Theatre (formerly Miner's), at 156th street and Third avenue, the Bronx, where it opens a special engagement on Monday evening, November 18, with all the orchestral accompaniment and tremendous stage effects that made it so popular at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre and the Knickerbocker earlier in the season.

More than twenty separate productions of "Hearts of the World" also are being shown throughout the country, with the result that Mr. Griffith already has passed the remarkable record he made with "The Birth of a Nation."

Philip Kearny Mindil, Jr., Falls at Hindenburg Line

PHILIP KEARNY MINDIL, Jr., 3 Monroe place, Brooklyn, a private first class in Company B, 107th Infantry, was killed in action on September 29, in the attack on the Hindenburg Line (on the Cambrai-St. Quentin front). He was shot through the heart and died instantly. He was just nineteen, having enlisted at seventeen early in the summer of 1917. Young Mindil was a grandson of Major-General George W. Mindil, U. S. V., deceased, who was twice decorated by Congress for distinguished bravery in action during the Civil War. He was aide-de-camp to General Philip Kearny, and the young man so recently killed was named after "Fighting Phil" Kearny, who was his grandfather's idol The soldier's father is Philip K. Mindil, a newspaper man, and his mother was formerly Miss Rosemonde Allen West.

Mindil was a graduate of De Witt Clinton High School, a Y. M. C. A. man and a member of Sea and Field Lodge, F. & A. M. He was No. 1 man in a machine gun section. In a recent letter to his parents, he wrote: "And if I do go, why it's only one of the millions in the fight for right. In the army we have learned to sink our ego."

Pictorializing the Allied Spirit.

The Division of Films of the Committee on Public Informaton has adopted as the pictorial background for its publicity for "Under Four Flags," the third Official War Picture, which had its first Government showing at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, in New York City, Sunday evening, November 17, the stirring military group which has adorned the uptown front of the "Flatiron" building at Twenty-third street and Broadway for several months. It is called "The Allies" and the four heroic figures represent the fighting men of America, France, Great Britain and Italy. The idea of the group was suggested by Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Co. It was designed by Nelson Greene, private in the Ninth Coast Artillery, New York Guard. The sculptor is Philip Martiny. The group has attracted a great deal of attention and embodies the spirit of "Under Four Flags" in a surprising degree.

Indianapolis Prepares for Next Loan.

Indianapolis has discovered a way to anticipate and stir up interest in the fifth Liberty Loan drive, which is scheduled to take place in January, and at the same time to stimulate audiences for "Under Four Flags," the third Official War Picture, issued by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

"Under Four Flags" will be shown at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, during the week of November 24. The Marion County Legion, in charge of the local war loan drives, has circularized its 6,000 lieutenants, urging them not only to see this new Government war picture, but also to use every effort to get the public in their districts to attend the presentation at the Circle. The showing of the picture will be utilized to call attention to the next Liberty Loan drive and to urge the public to prepare for it.

WEISS TALKS SENSE TO EXHIBITORS

First National Manager in Chicago Outlines His Views on the Best Way to Advertise Motion Pictures and Says Many Things Well Worth Reading

By HARRY WEISS

Manager First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange, Chicago

Early to bed
And early to rise;
Work like hell
And advertise.

THE exhibitor's creed, if ever there was one, is embodied in this slang saying. A close study of the conditions attending the activities of any successful exhibitor will result in one outstanding, unmistakable result; that he is a convert to, a student of and a practitioner in advertising.

No matter from what angle you view commercial success measured in dollars and cents, no matter what product you pause to think of, no matter what company the word "success" calls to your mind, you will find that back of every known, recognized individual, brand, business or product stands the bulwark on which rests its prosperity: Advertising.

Why do people ask the grocer for Uneeda Biscuits in packages of eighteen costing eight cents when, for the same amount of money they could buy twice the number of crackers in bulk? It is because Uneeda Biscuits are advertised. The same crackers, in bulk, are not. There is a popular association in the public mind—the result of advertising—between the ads in the street cars, on the billboards, in newspapers and in magazines, and the package crackers on display in grocery stores. The relation is obvious, and advertising makes it so.

Advertising as an investment is one thing, and advertising as it is practiced by some exhibitors is another and different story. To be successful, and to return a profit to the exhibitor, advertising must be continuous; it must have just as much common sense and appeal in its text and physical appearance as the exhibitor would have in his conversation and personal appearance if he journeyed to Los Angeles for the express purpose of meeting Charlie Chaplin or Mary Pickford.

He wouldn't make the trip in overalls or a suit three years old. Nor would he have any mental doubts about whether he should say "I ain't" or "I am not." Yet he will contract for space in newspapers, and then throw a heterogeneous mass of copy together to fill it, and if there are any little white spots showing in the first proof they are promptly filled with type. Isn't he buying the space? Why shouldn't it be filled?

Always Something New in Pictures.

Advertising can be applied to motion pictures more easily than to any other thing of which I know. The motion picture business is a changing product. There is always a new picture to talk about in advertising. It offers new angles, different from those that have gone before. It has its own individual characteristics. In many other industries, a product, once made and copyrighted, becomes established and remains unchanged for years. There advertising men confront a real task in thinking up new arguments for it, in extending its fields of usefulness, in getting sufficient variation and change into their copy appeal to avoid monotony of repetition.

Harry Weiss.

Consequently, no exhibitor can complain of a lack of material for advertising purposes.

The first principle of successful theatre advertising is to select or originate a slogan or a trade mark which can remain standard. Show me a prosperous theatre and I will show you a manager or an owner behind it who has done that very thing. They impress this trade mark or slogan upon the public in all of their advertising. It is like the theme in a story. Descriptions, dialogue, divergence from the main track always center back or refer to the theme on which it is written.

After there has been an amount of advertising sufficient to make the trade mark or slogan known, the next thing for an exhibitor to do is to advertise what he has to offer the public. It is in this second phase of theatre publicity that the slogan or trade mark begins its usefulness. If it has been impressed upon the public as an emblem of quality, the mark of merit, or the stamp of confidence, it imparts immediately to whatever production with which it is associated in advertising the thought or purpose for which it exists.

A Theatre Nothing but a Store.

A theatre is nothing more nor less than a retail store. Its picture offerings are like the merchandise in a dry goods store, meat in a butcher's shop, or foods in a grocery. But there is one particular distinction between a theatre screening films and other kinds of retail stores. The latter handle nationally advertised brands of merchandise—things that are brought to public attention week after week the year round. The majority of motion pictures do not have the benefit of either national advertising or national publicity. It is therefore up to the live exhibitor to do his part in the progress of the average picture from the manufacturer to the public.

Local conditions must govern to a great extent just what advertising is necessary. The exhibitor's finances, the capacity of his theatre, the quality of the particular production and local conditions must combine to govern the amount he spends, and the kind of advertising on which he spends it.

Light Up and Let Heralds Work.

It is better not to advertise at all than to use careslessly gotten up copy, poorly placed for public consumption. If you want to reach only the patrons who attend your theatre, then advertise exclusively in your theatre. Slides are always effective, if not too many are used. Heralds passed out to patrons when they enter will invariably be read during an intermission, even if they are not taken home. And it has always appealed to me as a good investment for exhibitors to arrange their shows so that there is a three or five-minute intermission, with full lights, so the heralds can get in their work on forthcoming productions. If intermissions are not possible, a neatly lettered sign, preferably illuminated, placed where the people leaving the theatre will see it, will have the desired effect. But it has ben my experience that heralds put out proprly, with personal supervision by the manager, are one of the best methods that has ever been devised for sure results.

Manufacturers spend fortunes on press matter and publicity men, and the results open up big possibilities for exhibitors who want to install small publicity and press departments of their own. Scarcely any production is sent out today without a full complement of press sheet, publicity matter, specimen ads and other adjuncts to exhibitor exploitation. It provides a nucleus for material for a neat little house magazine or weekly program; it gives the basis for a newspaper campaign, and it offers possibilities for lobby treatment.

Newspaper Work Must Be Well Done.

Newspaper work is effective if it is done properly. It is worth a whole lot of thought and attention from the exhibitor, because, in a great many instances, it represents the chief connecting link between himself and his patrons and prospective patrons. Cuts and press matter and even complete ad copy are ready for newspaper use in the press sheets on most of the big pictures, and all that is needed is for the exhibitor to clip these copies, modify the text whenever it does not jibe with local conditions, and hand it to the newspaper editor.

The lobby is one of the most important of the physical advertising assets a theatre has. Properly treated, it can always be depended upon to give big results. The main thing to remember is that variety is the spice of life in advertising as well as in anything else. If too much advertising is done along one line the attractions advertised lose their value and individuality. For instance, if an exhibitor advertises one attraction over another, in the same ad, or at the same time in the lobby, neither one will profit by it. There is a division of interest and a confusion in the reader's mind that does not leave him impressed with any one particular thing. The average exhibitor will realize a better result by playing up strong one attraction a week, and using a smaller amount of space on other pictures booked for the same week.

Don't Advertise Heavily for One Day.

It is money thrown away to feature a production heavily in theatre advertising if it is to be shown for only one day. Anything that is worth advertising well must have merit, and any production that has merit will surely draw paying receipts for two days or more. Meritorious features advertise themselves. Patrons talk about them, and word-of-mouth publicity is the most valuable and productive of all advertising. In many instances where features like "My Four Years in Germany" have been played for two days or more, business was invariably greater on the second and succeeding days than it was on the first day. The reason was that the people who saw the first performances went home and talked about it.

Advertising, in its last analysis, is salesmanship of a high order. To sell any product, whether it is pictures or soap, one must advertise. For an exhibitor to sell a patron an admission ticket he must first reach that patron through advertising, whether in the lobby, slides, window displays or newspapers. To reach the public the exhibitor must advertise something that appeals to them.

Why is it that hens' eggs are bought universally to the exclusion of duck eggs? When the hen lays an egg she is heard all over the lot, and she cackles so loudly that she arouses the enthusiasm of every other hen, with the result that her own little ad becomes a chorus. After a duck lays an egg she waddles silently away, without a sound to announce the fact. And still scientists and dietitians claim that duck eggs are possessed of a great deal more nourishment than hens' eggs.

Vitagraph Engages George Chester.

George Randolph Chester, the well-known author of the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories, has been engaged by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, to assist as literary adviser at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn. Mr. Chester assumed his duties last week and is now actively concerned in giving to scenarios the sort of snap and sparkle which have made the Chester writings so popular with readers during the last few years.

Mr. Chester is not treading new ground when he takes his place as literary counselor for Vitagraph, because he has been a frequent visitor there since the production of his novel, "The Enemy," and "The Message of the Mouse." The latter was an original story written by Mr. Chester and his wife and was produced by Vitagraph some time ago with Anita Stewart in the leading role. Ever since the production of his first story on the screen, Mr. Chester had been a keen student of motion picture construction and production and henceforth he will divide his time between fiction writing and motion picture work.

Lehr Institutes Reforms in Management of Studio

IN full charge of the Goldwyn studios at Los Angeles is a man who less than a year ago had never been behind the scenes in a motion picture manufacturing plant. He is Abraham Lehr, vice president in charge of production for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, which has just moved its studio and producing staffs from Fort Lee to the coast.

Abraham Lehr,
Vice-President in Charge of Production, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

A year ago Mr. Lehr was a successful business man, a friend of Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn. When Mr. Goldfish cast about in his mind for someone to take the then vacant business managership of Goldwyn's plant at Fort Lee, he recalled that Mr. Lehr had spoken of his interest in motion pictures and his desire to enter the industry from the producing end. Presently Mr. Lehr took a desk at Fort Lee.

Shortly after Mr. Lehr reached Fort Lee the big studios on top of the hill began to feel the effects of his presence. A few days after his arrival he installed a system of charting production that has proved a remarkable contribution—almost a revolution—in the conduct of a cinema studio. Graphic charts of productions under way were hung on the walls of Mr. Lehr's office, and almost without getting up from his chair he was able to tell at any moment what had been accomplished and what remained to be done if a certain production was to be finished in the time alloted to it.

For a few weeks the studio staff fumed under the imposition of system. But the charts remained. Before long, when they had begun to save thousands of dollars, do away with night work in the studios, cause stars and players to report for 9 o'clock calls at 9 o'clock instead of at noon, outspoken opposition simmered down.

So marked was Mr. Lehr's success that within a few months he was elected a vice president of Goldwyn and placed in full charge of production under the supervision of Mr. Goldfish.

Quinn Would Institute His "Housecleaning Campaign"

J. A. QUINN, owner of the Rialto Theatre of Los Angeles, is making preparations to put what he calls his house-cleaning plan into practical application by forming producers and exhibitors into an organization which will seek to eliminate bad acting, bad stories, bad direction, inflated stories, and regulate rentals and films from script to screen.

Mr. Quinn says that the exhibitors, being vitally interested in the success of each picture, should have competent representatives in the shape of committees collaborating and acting in an advisory and supervising capacity at the studios during the production of all films. These representatives should be in a position to pass on scripts, cast, direction, attend previews as the picture progresses, watch the cutting and editing, and at the end be able to guarantee a first-class picture that the producer can rent to the exhibitor at a figure that will give him a conservative profit and which the exhibitor can show at his regular scale.

Quinn says that the time is ripe for such a campaign and that he has the assurance of co-operation from exhibitors and several leading producers, and feels sure that the plan can be put into successful operation to the satisfaction and ultimate good of the industry.

The Theatre Owners' Association of Los Angeles and Southern California indorsed the campaign at a meeting held on November 4, by the passage of the following resolution:

"Whereas, the exhibitors of this association have in the past felt the burden of overproduction and excessive waste in the moving picture industry, and whereas J. A. Quinn, a recognized authority on production and exploitation, with a wide and varied experience as a successful exhibitor, has propounded to us a movement for the regulation of production and elimination of waste, and whereas, said movement has been found to possess merit worthy of the support of all exhibitors throughout the country;

"Therefore, be it resolved, that this association extend to him its enthusiastic indorsement and full support of his plan for the betterment of the conditions now existing."

Los Angeles News Notes.

"Buck" Massie, who has been covering the West Coast in the interests of the Fox production "Salome," has returned to Los Angeles to stay until the Flue epidemic is over.

THE DETAILS OF SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITION

With Bernard Depkin, Jr., of Baltimore, the Hero of Dwight S. Perrin's Interesting Contribution

NAME: Bernard Depkin, Jr.; address, Parkway Theatre, Peabody Theatre, McHenry Theatre, Wizard Theatre, Strand Theatre; City, Baltimore, Md.; Occupation, Motion Picture exhibitor, general manager of Baltimore's chain of leading motion picture theatres; Age, about 29; Hobby, hard work.

When some enterprising person compiles a book on "Who's Who" among motion picture exhibitors, the above description is going to fit snugly over or under the photograph of Bernard Depkin, Jr., right hand man to W. C. Webb, president of the Parkway Theatre Company, hustler par excellence, advertiser de luxe and commonly known as "everybody's friend." Dwight S. Perrin, of Goldwyn, takes up the story from here:

The writer had occasion to visit Baltimore the other day. Mr. Depkin had attached his signature to a contract calling for the entire output of Goldwyn's Star Series productions, and it was our assignment to hop over to Baltimore, look things over, and offer such co-operation and service as was required.

We first met Mr. Webb, a typical business man yet in his forties, who has the mark of knowledge and experience written all over a forceful countenance. He is president of the Parkway Theatre Company, stockholder and director in several public utility corporations of Baltimore, leader of many civic movements, booster of patriotic propaganda work, personal friend of municipal and social dignitaries of his city, a staunch advocate of educational progress—and a pioneer trail-blazer in the motion picture business.

Mr. Webb hesitated, modestly, when we asked him for his policies and systems in showmanship "See Depkin—he's the one who does everything—that boy is one of the hardest working, most upright young men I——"

And so Mr. Webb went on, telling us so many splendid things about his confidant and general manager that we were all keyed up for an introduction to a really different and extraordinary young business man—and we were not disappointed: Bernard Depkin, Jr., has one of those handshakes you read about; he has a smile that rivals that of Doug. Fairbanks.

In business Bernard Depkin is all business. Motion picture salesmen and branch managers are his warm personal friends, but he never permits his friendship to influence the direction and execution of his business by-laws. He buys motion pictures with the eagle eye of a sharpshooter, and he is considered as shrewd and accurate a trader as ever was known.

Mr. Depkin is afflicted with what might be termed workmania. Work is his pleasure, his hobby and his mission in life. His energy and capacity is nothing short of remarkable, and attending to his business for fifteen and eighteen hours at a stretch is an everyday occurrence with this Baltimore exhibitor.

Mr. Depkin's methods of showmanship are linked solidly with the principles and systems of his company's head, Mr. Webb. In the first place, he plays strong for the comfort and convenience of his patrons. The Parkway Theatre, which, by the way, is a replica of the famous West End Cinema Theatre of London, is a model of efficient construction and efficient management.

When you enter this theatre you feel like staying there ever so long. You breathe the spirit of comfort and enjoyment as you enter the exquisite lobby. In the auditorium and you behold a panorama of artistic beauty that appeals irresistibly to the eye and the mind. Simplicity is the keynote of the architectural construction of the Parkway. The designs are of the Louis IX. period. The lighting effects are truly inspiring. The lighting display is changed with the projection of various types of pictures. For instance, if a comedy is screened, the lighting switches to bright, dazzling colors, if a dramatic subject is shown, the lighting at once becomes soft, mellow—alluringly impressive of the character of the picture projected.

The Parkway's orchestra, too, is a feature of every performance. An augmented group of excellent musicians and an organ of mammoth size, built into the walls of the theatre, provide all that is best in music.

The attendants of the Parkway, and all other theatres under the company's control, are human beings who know that courtesy and accommodation must be observed at all times. Young women ushers, recently engaged to release men for war service, are in attendance at all theatres.

Mr. Depkin is a practical and intelligent advertiser. He uses space daily in three Baltimore newspapers, and on Sunday he comes out with an extra big display ad, ranging in size from a quarter page to a full page, to announce a big feature attraction. When the Parkway opened, with Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel", a half-page ad was used to tell the news. The ad was designed especially for the occasion. The same plan was followed in announcing Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde" and other Goldwyn productions which have first-run in Baltimore at the Parkway Theatre.

Mr. Depkin studies his lobby and exterior arrangements. He frames or panels all portraits and scene photographs. A staff artist, and a good one, is employed to provide the artistic touches to the photographic layouts. Mr. Depkin probably obtains more newspaper publicity than all other Baltimore theatres combined. He is constantly in touch with the newspaper men, motion picture editors, etc., and personally calls on them and presents photographs and editorial material for publication.

The programs he gives are the very best and most varied it is possible to provide. A feature drama, a good, clean comedy, a war or news weekly and an educational reel generally comprise the Parkway's offering. This, of course, is supplemented by the orchestra's contribution and by soloists.

Mr. Depkin issues advance announcement cards in original layouts, and always in two or three colors. Conservative yet spicy, humanly appealing copy, is the rule for this form of exploitation.

There is a beautiful and luxuriously furnished library on the mezzanine floor of the Parkway. Fresh cut flowers adorn the centre of a huge mahogany table, in period design. These flowers are furnished daily by a local florist, who, in exchange for a season pass to the Parkway, is glad to offer the floral bouquets. This library is well applied with the best magazines, daily newspapers, etc. On matinee days, tea and wafers are served to the patrons, who, it may readily be guessed, come in capacity numbers.

In general, Messrs. Webb and Depkin conduct their motion picture theatres with the same refinement, comfort and service that may be found in the best of hotels. Their judgment and broad policies have won. Baltimore boasts of the Parkway Company. Mr. Depkin and Mr. Webb are known as the finest business gentlemen and most able showmen in their city.

Exhibitor Holds Film; Exchange Brings Suit

A UNIQUE test case in which the question of whether or not an exhibitor who has a claim against an exchange may lawfully withhold film in his possession and refuse to give it up as a means of forcing settlement or "getting even" is soon to be decided in Minnesota.

The case arose out of dealings between Louis H. Coen, manager of the Minneapolis exchange of the Universal Film Corporation, and R. H. Byron, proprietor of the Dream Theatre at Redwood Falls, Minn. Mr. Byron some time ago secured film from the Universal and refused to give it up at the conclusion of his contract, claiming that he had an account with the Minneapolis exchange and that he would only return the film when it settled with him.

Mr. Byron has held the film for eight weeks and in the meantime the Universal has been obliged to disappoint other exhibitors who had booked it, according to Mr. Coen. The film, however, has since been replevined by the Universal exchange, which is suing for $2,400 damages in the district court because of loss of business through the exhibitor's action and depreciation in the film.

The Universal exchange claims that instead of being indebted to Mr. Byron its books show that he owes the distributing agency in Minneapolis $40.

Henry Returns to General.

General Film Company has bulletined its organization that a change has been made in Denver, where the office is now in charge of T. Y. Henry, who had been connected with General for long periods during the last six or seven years in the Denver territory.

After a long service with General Mr. Henry became manager of the Paramount office, later branching out with an office of his own. In renewing his service with General Film Company he does so as a sales executive already in intimate touch with the field, in which he has a most extensive following.

PARAMOUNT TO RELEASE DREW FILMS

Famous Couple Will Resume Making of Delightful Domestic Comedies—To Issue a Two-Reeler a Month

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will distribute the Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew Comedies to be released once a month commencing next January, and to be known as Paramount-Drew Comedies. The contract between the distributors and the V. B. K. Film Corporation, producers, was arranged through W. E. Shallenberger.

Through mutual friends, Amedee J. Van Beuren, actively connected with the Van Beuren Bill Posting Company and in control of various motion picture theatres and places of amusement in the United States, was brought in touch with Mr. and Mrs. Drew, with the result that a contract was executed, the V. B. K. Film Corporation was formed and the production of two-reel ultra-comedies was commenced.

Thus with the signing of the contract for distribution through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is also announced that three attractions are already finished for release. They are "Once a Mason," written by Albert Payson Terhune, an adaptation from a story published in the Green Book; "The Amateur Liar," by the same author and published in story form in the same magazine, and "Romance and Rings," by Emma Anderson Whitman.

These productions, as is the case with all the pictures in which the Drews have appeared, have been directed solely by Mrs. Drew and edited by her. The interiors were screened at the Biograph studios, the exterior locations having never before been used in photoplay productions.

In connection with the future producing plans of the two popular screen stars, Mrs. Sidney Drew said: "Comparisons are ofttimes odious, but I want our host of friends to know that we are doing bigger things than my fondest ambitions ever hoped to realize.

"In the pictures to be released through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation there will be no limit to expense, so long as we get what we want. The first three releases already completed in each instance cost more than five times what we expended on our other productions; not a single prop, whether furniture, costuming or anything that goes to an interior set, has ever been used in pictures before, and not an exterior location used by us was ever photographed for the screen. This will give an idea as to what detail and originality we are employing in our new films.

"I feel that the time has come when new ideas and brains, unhampered by studio traditions, must be engaged and no expense has been or will be spared to realize the last word in quality of production. All our interior sets are made up from drawings worked out by the best interior decorator we could engage, and one who never before has seen the inside of a motion picture studio. The color schemes, not alone of sets, but even of the gowns worn by the cast, are worked out only under expert supervision.

"When we tour the country in the stage production, 'Keep Her Smiling,' in which Mr. Drew and myself appear, we shall carry with us a complete equipment of portable lights, a property man, camera man, and other necessary assistants, and scenes, interior and exterior, will be taken en route, where I believe they will best fit into the stories we are making."

In connection with the distribution of the Drew comedies, Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of this department, said: "The contract with the V. B. K. Film Corporation for the distribution of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew's comedies includes the foreign as well as the United States rights. The comedies will be booked on our star series plan, and our agreement, which calls for a minimum distribution of one hundred prints in the United States, gives an idea of what a great circulation these films will have. A big advertising and exploitation campaign, prepared along novel lines, is already under way, based on the widely established popularity of these splendid artists. The two-reelers will be released one a month, starting in January."

Tefft Johnson Outlines Defects in Picturemaking

TEFFT JOHNSON, the director who lately finished the production of "The Love Defender," in which June Elvidge is the star, for World Pictures, having had experience as a director covering a number of years, is in a position to speak authoritatively on the subject of making pictures. Mr. Johnson says:

The most material defect in the present method of making pictures is to my mind the haste in putting on the film the story as outlined to the director in the continuity. On the legitimate stage the director is given the manuscript several weeks before the company is called for rehearsal, and this gives him plenty of time to study the play, both as regards the nature of its message to the audience and the manner in which it must be conveyed by the actors, through interpretation under the guidance of the director.

With picture production it is different. In ninety cases out of one hundred the director is given his script a day or two before he begins work. He is able to get only the barest notion of the general idea of the story and then goes to work with a company that is selected overnight. On the stage the company rehearse scenes over and over again until they are thoroughly familar with lines, business and general connection of their role with every other part of the play.

Screen work as practiced compels the director to group his people as quickly as possible, and they shoot each scene without much more than a few minutes' instruction to the actor of just what is expected of him. This makes the actor an automaton and the director nothing more or less than a human signpost. One method is the result of deliberate concentration, while the other in a way represents the efforts of an orator who is not given his subject until he mounts the rostrum.

No appreciable improvement in the making of pictures can ever be attained until the producers so shape their affairs as to secure scenarios and continuities weeks in advance of production, and thus give the director ample time to study and digest his script. The scenic accessories of pictures will also be improved if the working staff is given plenty of time to get their end of the picture in shape before actual shooting begins.

Eddie Polo in New York.

Eddie Polo, known as "the Hercules of the screen," arrived in New York this week and had a triumphal visit among the exhibitors. The circus stunt man, who has just completed a thrilling serial entitled "The Lure of the Circus" for the Universal, was called to Gotham from the Coast by requests of the War Work campaign officials and exhibitors to put his prowess back of the recent fund drive. He stopped off on the way, in Chicago and other cities, and aided the campaign with special performances.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

CHARLIE IS MARRIED.

BECAUSE R. S. "Cupid" Sparks, marriage license clerk of the city of Los Angeles, says it is so, we feel that it is safe to say that Charles Chaplin is married.

Several days before the wedding, according to Sparks, Chaplin's secretary, Thomas Harrington, appeared at the marriage license bureau to see what the prospects were for keeping quiet the matter of procuring a marriage license for one Charles Spencer Chaplin and Mildred Harris. Later Chaplin himself conferred with the license clerk, and obtained his promise to keep the news of the wedding from the public as long as possible because neither Chaplin nor Miss Harris desired any publicity.

Sparks arranged for the wedding to take place at 7 o'clock in the evening of October 23, in the living room of his own home at 2646 South Normandie avenue; and the license was issued just a few minutes before the ceremony was performed by the Rev. James I. Myers.

Harrington and Sparks were witnesses to the marriage, and the newly wedded pair left immediately for the home of the bride's mother for the wedding supper, at which only the immediate members of the family were present. Chaplin gave his age at 29, and Miss Harris as 17.

Both appeared at their respective studios the next day as if nothing had happened, and they have been working ever since, but now that the fact of their marriage has leaked out, it is thought that they will go away for a short honeymoon.

The Chaplin's have taken a house in Laughlin Park, a very beautiful residence district of Los Angeles.

Theatrical Man from Australia.

George Smith, a leading exhibitor and theatrical man of Melbourne, Australia, who came to the United States several weeks ago in company with "Snowy" Baker, Australian athletic promoter, is now in Los Angeles after a lengthy stay in New York, where he has booked new vaudeville acts for his circuit. Mr. Smith is interested in an even dozen playhouses in Melbourne and its surrounding district.

"Australia is ripe for live wire picture people," says Mr. Smith. "The people over there are movie-mad, and just as soon as matters can be arranged, Mr. Baker and I plan to launch a producing unit. The country is rich in romance, and the atmospherical conditions are much the same as in California."

Mr. Smith sails from San Francisco for Australia on December 3.

Parsons Engages Walthall.

William Parsons, who has just returned from New York, announces that he has signed up Henry B. Walthall to star in a number of productions to be filmed at the National Studios in Hollywood. These features will be released through the Robertson-Cole Company.

The National studio is being enlarged, in the meantime, for the accommodation of the three companies that will soon be at work there, the Parsons Company, Billie Rhodes and Henry Walthall.

According to Mr. Parsons, the Billie Rhodes pictures were enthusiastically received by a large number of exhibitors and critics to whom they were shown in New York.

Metro Plant Started.

Work has been started on the new Metro studios to be built at Romaine street and Cahuenga avenue in Hollywood. The new plant will occupy an entire block, with a frontage of 280 feet and depth of 605 feet, and will represent an outlay of $180,000. The buildings alone will cost approximately $150,000.

As Metro is to transfer all studio activities to the west coast within a few months, space and equipment for eight or ten companies must be provided in the new plant.

The three large stages, two of which will be open and one enclosed will be ultra modern in design and equipment. The open stages will cover 70 by 100 feet of ground, and the inclosed stage 70 by 195 feet.

At present May Allison is the only Metro star in the west, since Bert Lytell has joined the army, but Mme. Nazimova is expected soon, and other stars, including Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Hale Hamilton, Olive Tell, Viola Dana and Emmy Wehlen, are booked for before the first of the year.

Haworth Wants Film Stars.

The Haworth Pictures Corporation, which was organized to produce and exploit the Sessue Hayakawa productions, is now looking about for two feminine stars to add to its roster. The success of the two Hayakawa pictures already released under the Haworth plan, decided the company to increase the organization to the extent of two more stars for the time being.

Fannie Ward, whose contract with Pathe expires in a short time, may affiliate herself with the Haworth Corporation if suitable arrangement can be made.

Gish Sisters Contract Flu.

Lillian Gish, star of D. W. Griffiths productions, was stricken with Spanish influenza while working in special scenes at the Sunset Studio on Sunday, November 3. The actress had been working all day, when suddenly she complained of a severe headache, and was taken home. A physician was sent for and pronounced it "Flue." On Tuesday, Dorothy Gish came down with the same malady, and by night the sisters were encased in pneumonia jackets as a precaution against threatened pneumonia.

Marjorie Daw, another popular film ingenue, contracted the disease at the same time as Dorothy Gish, and was also threatened with pneumonia. However, all three of the girls were well on the way to recovery within a few days.

Eltinge Becomes Male Impersonator.

Julian Eltinge, who is getting ready to begin on a film production entitled "The Fascinating Widower," declares that his entire wardrobe in this picture will be masculine. Corsets, wigs, poudre de riz and high heeled pumps, will all go into the discard for that one production, at least as far as he is concerned. He will appear as a man all through the play, for once! June Mathis has written the scenario for the coming production, and Robert Thornby is said to have been selected as director. Sylvia Ashton and Charles Butler have been engaged for important roles.

A New Griffith Star.

Sarol Dempster, a popular Ruth St. Denis dancer in the West, has been given one of the leading roles in the new patriotic production now being filmed by D. W. Griffith for the Artcraft program. Miss Dempster has never been seen on the screen, but the fact that Griffith selected her for an important part in his picture speaks well for a promising future for her. Other well known players in the Griffith cast are Clare Seymour, who has graduated out of comedies into drama; Richard Barthelmess, Robert Carson, Kate Bruce, George Fawcett and Syn de Conde.

Camp Kearney Entertained by Film Players.

In spite of the flu and the closing orders of the Health Department, the 20,000 soldiers at Camp Kearney did not have to forego all theatrical entertainments during the quarantine. In response to an appeal made to the Motion Picture War Service Association, that organization agreed to provide a nightly show, lasting an hour and a half, the players leaving Los Angeles in the late afternoon in motor cars provided by the association, until the ban is lifted.

A stage was built at the camp on the exact limit of the quarantine reservation so that the players remained out of quarantine, while the audience was within the limits. The soldiers wore masks, but the players remained unmasked.

The first entertainment was given by a company from the Lasky studio in charge of Jeanie MacPherson. Each studio agreed to give a show for the soldiers.

High Society Doings.

Kitty Gordon no sooner arrived in Los Angeles than she became the rage in society circles, and has been deluged with invitations to all sorts of social events. Last week, however, Miss Gordon took it upon herself to give a party, in honor of Mrs. T. M. O'Brien, a friend from the East. Most of the film notables were invited, including Julian Eltinge, Charlie Chaplin, Fannie Ward, Mae Murray, Bessie Barriscale and many others, besides a number of society leaders of Los Angeles.

A few evenings later Fannie Ward entertained almost the same persons who graced Miss Gordon's affair. Dancing was the chief entertainment of the evening at both parties.

Film Folk to Aid War Work.

The motion picture people of Los Angeles have pledged themselves to raise $75,000 as their quota of the city's allotment for the United War Work campaign. The Motion Picture War Service Association will handle all subscriptions from the stage and motion picture theatres and exchanges for the purpose. On account of the quarantine by the Health Department the money will necessarily have to be raised by personal subscription instead of through entertainments, which have been so profitable in the past.

Arbuckle Rents Space at Sennett's.

When Fatty Arbuckle gets over the spell of tonsilitis from which he has been suffering for some time and the flu ban is lifted he will begin the production of his future Paramount comedies at the Sennett studios, where he has arranged for space and the use of the studio equipment.

Double Trouble for Mix.

Tom Mix considers that he saved a lot of valuable time by having the flu during the time he was in the hospital convalescing from the operation of having a fifteen-year-old bullet taken from his knee. He took the flue at the same time that his doctor and several nurses got it and made one big spell of it, and by the time he was well of one trouble the other had ceased to bother him.

Sister of Robert Harron Dies.

Anna Harron, sister of Robert Harron, the Griffith film star, died of the fluenza at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Harron, in Hollywood on November 8. Miss Harron had been ill only four days when the end came. She was nineteen years old, and had entered the film world when she was given a minor part in "Hearts of the World."

Comedian Dies in Camp.

He will offer Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane" as the Broadway's first attraction when the theatres are permitted to reopen.

California Organ Installed.

No less than seven experts are working to install the big organ that will form part of the orchestra in the new California Theatre when that house is ready to open about Thanksgiving. The organ is one of the largest ever made by the Robert Morton Organ Company, and will occupy space on both sides of the stage. Fred Miller, one of the officials of the California, is in correspondence with a number of notable pipe organ artists, with the object of securing one to manipulate the complicated instrument.

Theatre Owners Protest.

A meeting of some fifty prominent film exhibitors was held at Quinn's Rialto on Nov. 8 to discuss the influenza situation. Theatrical men and picture producers were present, and all agreed that the burden of the influenza epidemic has been borne entirely by the theatres and the churches and that unjust discrimination had been shown.

The consensus of opinion at the meeting was that all exhibitors were glad to co-operate with other businesses in an effort to stop the spread of the disease, but they objected to the restricted rulings that now prevail. A committee was appointed to confer with the health officers the morning after the meeting, and a petition to the Health Department, calling for a general closing or a general opening of all business houses, was signed not only by the members of the association, but by representatives of the large studios in the Los Angeles district. D. W. Griffith, the Lasky organization and Metro are actively co-operating with the theatre owners.

The death of Sergeant Anderson places the first gold star on the service flag of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Impeccable Was the Word.

An error in the article "The Greatness of Woman," printed in the issue of November 23, changed the meaning intended and robbed the production of its just due. The incorrect sentence should have read, "The Heloise-Abelard and the Cyrene-Fisherman episodes are wellnigh impeccable."

Soldiers Depend Upon Films for Recreation

GEORGE BALSDON, who resigned as manager of Vitagraph's New York branch to become active in Y. M. C. A. work in the war zone, has written an interesting leter to the Moving Picture World, from which we quote in part:

"I am very busy on a man's sized job here, but the work is so interesting and the soldier boys appreciate our efforts so much that it is a pleasure to work fourteen to sixteen hours a day. The Y. M. C. A. does wonderful work here for the boys. They provide the link between home and the front. No matter where the boys move to, there they will find the Y. M. C. A. with canteen supplies, books, periodicals and some sort of recreation for them in their hours off duty.

"I have just been to a place where a lot of heavy fighting is going on. After a spell in the trenches, our boys are marched to rest camps just back of the lines. The Y. M. C. A. at this point is in part of an old monastery. The place is all shot to pieces, but we took a trailer with a Delco gasoline engine mounted on it to generate electric current (which is stored in accumulators) and rigged up some electric lights for them to read by and write letters home. Also set up a Power's portable projection machine and gave them pictures.

"It would do your heart good to see how pleased the boys were, after their grind in the trenches, to find real comfort and recreation right up at the front lines. We also sent a small suitcase machine with battery right up to the trenches and gave a show in dugouts to about a dozen boys at a time. It's a risky business, but the boys are entitled to it and they run bigger risks.

"My term with the Y. M. C. A. was up on September 5, but I cannot drop the work here. It is so vitally important to keep the boys in good spirits and give them recreation. There is nothing that can fill the bill or that the boys so much desire (except mail from home) as the motion picture. It vizualizes home and things American. I want the trade to know what an important item pictures are to our soldiers, and no one knows better or had more experience than 'Your Uncle Dudley.'

"I've been from one end of the fighting front to the other and have lived with the boys under every condition, good or bad. I am sending a photograph of my outfit and 'home.'"

U. B. O. to Program All Red Cross War Films

A deal is announced by which the United Booking Offices, the dominant source of vaudeville attractions, will program the American Red Cross war work films in hundreds of theatres. This arrangement is dated to begin generally at once. It means that the Red Cross films will receive immediate and distinctive exhibition in all the big cities through the foremost vaudeville theatre circuits and the most prominent independently owned vaudeville houses.

It is due to the active interest of John Murdock, manager of the U. B. O. in Red Cross aims, that this arrangement was possible. Mr. Murdock and E. F. Albee, of the U. B. O., have joined in co-operation with the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures, after a similar action a few weeks ago when the U. B. O. accepted the initial release of Red Cross film, "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris."

W. E. Waddell, director of the Bureau of Pictures of American Red Cross, reports that there are over 20,000,000 American Red Cross members, and the purpose of the war work film distribution through motion picture and vaudeville houses is to secure the most direct, effective and prompt contact with this membership.

Charles Burr Marries.

Charles C. Burr, assistant general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's distribution department, on November 14, deserted the bachelors' union without giving notice to his friends. Mr. Burr is one of the popular men in the industry and has become a factor in the distribution affairs of Paramount and Artcraft pictures. The bride was Miss Clemence Amy of Westfield, N. J., where the wedding took plice in St. Mary's Church. The matron of honor was Mrs. Herbert MacDonell and the best man Jack Eaton, president of Town and Country Films, Inc., producers of the James Montgomery Flagg comedies.

CROY WRITES MOTION PICTURE HISTORY

Well Known Writer Tells of Moving Pictures in a New Book and Gets His Facts Straight

EVENTUALLY it was reasonably certain that someone would write a history of the motion picture that would be authentic in its facts and not a mass of glaring misstatement. For years the leading authority has been the Talbot work, which is both inaccurate as to its facts and biased in its statements. Rob Wagner has contributed a series of clever stories of the various phases of studio life, but it has remained for Homer Croy to clarify the history of pictures and present the facts in their proper light.

This has been done through the medium of "How Motion Pictures are Made," which has just been published by Harper and Brothers. The author passes lightly over the early toys of the Wheel of Life and Zoetrope type, and after assigning them their proper places comes more directly to the real origination of motion pictures by means of the experiments of Dr. Coleman Sellers, of Philadelphia. He does not, however, mention that the Sellers machine, which was of the peephole type, was apparently enlarged into a projection apparatus, as is shown from an old Philadelphia program of 1870.

From Sellers he passes on to Muybridge, Marey, Edison, Jenkins, Armat, Paul and Lumiere in their proper order, giving to each the credit for what he has done toward the development of pictures in motion. It is the first work to deal accurately and exhaustively with these facts, and as such should become standard.

Mr. Croy's work is not impeccable, but in his history he is in exact accord with the facts as they have been developed in the past few years. He goes back of Muybridge for pictures motion, where Talbot apparently had never heard of that investigator.

It is in his later history that Mr. Croy fails slightly in that he does not present his facts in chronological order. He speaks, for example, of the good old days when infringing cameras were masked, but puts this before the formation of the Patents Company, whereas most of this trouble accompanied the growth of the independent concerns. In the same way he fails to give other happenings their proper place in point of time, evidently having failed fully to digest the facts he gleaned. It is to be regretted that he does not include the late William T. Rock in the formation of the Vitagraph company, and he falls into the popular error when he announces 114 Nassau street as the birthplace of this company. Vitagraph's first address was 140 Nassau street, and it was on the roof of this building that its first pictures were made. Removal to 114-116 Nassau street was not made until the studio was removed to Flatbush. Just in passing the first Vitagraph stage was not pivoted, as was the Edison Black Maria, but was merely a board platform.

Coming to the actual making of pictures, Mr. Croy is on more familiar ground. He covers this more clearly than his predecessors and gives information more up to date, including chapters on war photography and news weeklies, though, unfortunately, he does not go into the history of the latter. He does not apparently know that in England and France the news weekly was known some time before it was brought to America and that for years the racing classics have been shown on the screen of London theatres the same night, whether the race was run at Esher, on the Epsom course, or at Liverpool, developing and printing being accomplished in a special car on the way to town.

On the other hand there are chapters on advertising and talking pictures and full and interesting chapters on cartoons and underwater photography. In the section on talking pictures he decides upon the light ray as the best source of speech for the picture, bringing this feature into a book for the first time.

Mr. Croy's work is not the final word in motion picture literature, but it is by far the most up-to-date as well as the most authentic, and a few changes and rearrangement in the second edition will give a book that will be the first to give the facts correctly and without bias. It is a decided advance upon anything hitherto produced and shows care and labor in its fabrication. It is lavishly illustrated, and the illustrations are germane to the text and not merely put in to fill up. Each illustration has a direct bearing upon some portion of the text. As a recital of early history and late methods the book disarms criticism. It is only in dealing with the period between that Mr. Croy fails to speak with full authority, and here he fails only in that he does not follow chronological order.

Winnipeg Exchange Managers Fight Proposed Fire Measure

THE film exchanges of Winnipeg, Manitoba, were given some encouragement, in connection with their fight against the proposed civic by-law, which provides that all exchanges must be housed in one-story buildings of fireproof construction and also provides for various appliances for the handling and storing of moving picture films, when Mayor Davidson announced that he does not expect the measure to be passed by the city council in the form prepared by the fire, water and light committee. It will probably be late in November before the proposed law will reach the city council, and in the meantime the local exchange managers are using every method to block the passage of the measure. They have already notified the city and all local theatres that they will close up the Winnipeg branches if the law becomes effective.

Law Would Drive Exchanges from City.

A strong delegation of the local exhibitors waited upon the Winnipeg Board of Control on November 8 with a request that the by-law be not approved, as it would force the exchanges from Winnipeg and would put small theatres out of business also. The deputation also asked what the city intended to do toward granting theatre employes financial relief because of the long ban on public gatherings. Winnipeg theatres were closed on October 12, and there was a likelihood that they would continue closed until the end of November. The controllers declared that they were waiting for statistics which the legal department was preparing as to the number of people affected by the closed theatres and their financial position, etc.

Trade Board Intercedes.

The Board of Trade of Winnipeg has also interceded in behalf of local exchanges, and a circular letter has been sent out to all members of the board regarding the objectionable features of the proposed law. It is pointed out that such a law would force the exchanges from Winnipeg, and that such a move would throw 500 persons out of employment. The annual payroll of the Winnipeg exchanges is $500,000, it was stated, and the local exchanges expend $37,500 annually for office supplies, $25,000 for repairs and additions to offices and buildings, $40,000, for electricity, $50,000 for advertising, and $37,000 a year for expressages. It is also mentioned that a local film exchange manager has provided the information that Winnipeg exchanges and picture theatres pay taxes to the city, province and country amounting to $964,335, annually at the present time. The Board of Trade has interested itself in the matter because it believes the subject vitally concerns the public interests of the community.

Miss Turnbull's Book.

Harper and Brothers have published "The Close-Up," a novel of motion picture life by Margaret Turnbull, of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario department. The title is obviously an effort to make use of a technical term in order to gain interest, but the story is commendably free from any effort to laboriously explain the workings of the studios. The color is full and accurate, but it is merely the background to a well-planned story, not overdrawn, of the making of a star. Through clever plotting the interest is well sustained, and keeps the reader in suspense until the last chapter. You know the man the heroine should marry, but you are by no means assured that the story will end as you anticipate. The volume is interesting not only as a glimpse into pictureland, but as a red-blooded romance.

Canadian General Film Man Praised.

At a meeting of the Area Committee of the Y. M. C. A. military service department in Toronto, a special vote of thanks was passed for the hearty cooperation of Manager T. S. Cooper, of the General Film Company, in the entertainment of soldiers at various camps and hospitals. Booker T. E. Bedard, of the Toronto exchange, was also mentioned in the resolution.

Supervisor Percival J. Lee in reporting this action wrote: "Only the entertainment committee know to what extent you have sacrificed personal gain to the country's good by your great work in this way, and I am sure the glorious morale of the Canadian troops is due in a large measure to the recreation given them by you. So we are glad to add our great appreciation to the feeling you must have of a good work well done."

Big Finish for "Hands Up."

"Hands Up," the Pathe Western serial, starring Ruth Roland, comes to an end in a big climax the week beginning November 24.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Everybody Feeling Better, the Flu Is on the Wane, and Humorous Stage of Epidemic Is Reached

By Giebler

FILMLAND is feeling better. We are getting over the Flu. The number of new cases reported to the health officers is growing less and less all the time. The news coming in from other points on the map, to the effect that the germs are fleeing like the Germans, fills us with joy.

With the exception of those who are suffering from weak chins and squirrel teeth, few people are now wearing masks.

Everybody feels that the worst is over. Bugles that have been blown in the service of the enemy are now being tooted with notes of victory. We have arrived at the humorous stage of the epidemic. Local Joe Millers are kidding the Flue along with jest and merry quip. The poets have busted loose. Richard Willis is said to have a list of words that rhyme with epizootic.

All of which is very good. A people who can joke and sing about as serious a situation as the Flu can never be vanquished by such a tiny thing as a germ, no matter how bad the jokes and verses may be.

According to some, however, the most trying and dangerous time of the plague is at hand. Many declare the wheezes are far worse than the sneezes, and many of our most influenzial people are suffering from this new phase of the epidemic.

Louise Fazenda says that several persons have tried to rhyme her name with influenza.

Roscoe Arbuckle declares the story that he is afraid to go down on Broadway for fear of being taken for a crowd and dispersed is in bad taste.

How to Disperse the Flu.

Tom Geraghty is writing a play to be called "The Gauze Mask," and the subtitles, which will be in verse, will run something like this:

Your eyes are blue
And I feel for you,
Before I knew
You had the Flu.

Jimmy Tynan, who writes pieces for Charles A. Taylor's new studio, buttonholes innocent pedestrians and pulls this on them:

"If everybody will eat a Spanish onion twice a day, it will be impossible to get enough people together to form a crowd, and the Flu will get discouraged and fly away like a Spanish fly."

Priscilla Dean, in speaking of the closing order, said: "In-fluenza, out flew business."

Dave Morrisey gets innocent visitors at the Fox plant into his office and tells them with a great air of seriousness that he knows a large section of the city where every house has been harboring a case of Spanish Flu for years. Then he leads them to a map and points a long lean forefinger to that portion of our fair city known as Sonora Town, and laughs a laugh of hollow mockery.

Spanish Flue Is Located.

Old time residents and native sons get this wheeze at once, but to newcomers Dave has to explain that, as Sonora Town is the Spanish Quarter, and as every chimney in the section is of Spanish design, therefore every house has a case of Spanish flue. This explanation takes the edge off the joke, but Dave has a good time with it just the same.

Outside of this jokemaking tendency, the colony is about the same, and as normal as it ever is.

I heard that Smiling Billy Parsons and Isadore Bernstein had got back from New York and went out to look them over.

We had had several reports that Mr. Bernstein had died while in New York. I asked him about this, and he declared there was not a word of truth in the reports.

Billy Parsons smiled his usual smile and told me a lot of good news about our own Henry Walthall, who we all feared had been lost to the legitimate, coming back to the screen to work at the National Studios, and about the big new stages they were going to build for him and Billie Rhodes to act on.

Sees Wilfred Lucas on a Bust.

After this I went down on the lot and saw Wilfred Lucas on a bust. It was a good bust, too, because Technical Director M. J. Doner, who knows all about busts, was making it.

The bust was to be used in a play called "Gal," that Mr. Lucas was making with himself and Cleo Madison as the stars. Lucas as "Terry," a bad gambler with a good heart, is supposed to die in the play, and the bust is to ornament a monument erected to his memory by his friends.

Lucas told me to stick around a while and I would see a good fight scene, and I stuck. Frank Brownlee was the heavy of the piece, and I thought maybe he and Lucas were going to do the fighting, and as they are pretty well matched as to heft it would have made some fight.

But instead of that, Brownlee and Cleo Madison went to the mat together, and still it was some fight. Of course Brownlee got the best of it, because it was written down that way in the scenario, but that little "Gal" surely did put up some scrap.

Lucas hollered "Cut" at just the proper time to save Brownlee a good sized bunch of moss from the part of his head where he hasn't so very much hair to spare.

Mary Has Her Little Joke.

Speaking of jokes, Mary Talbot is the official jokesmith of the Lucas company. Here's a sample of her work. Everybody remembers the H dropping cockney who said. "Hit's not the 'orse's 'oofs, but the 'ammer, 'ammer, 'ammer on the 'ard' ighway."

Well, Mary would recite that, only she would wind up with "'ard pavement" instead of "'ard 'ighway." Then, of course, some one would "call" her, and say: "That's not right, it's the 'ammer, 'ammer, 'ammer on the 'ard 'ighway."

And then Mary would smile sweetly and say, "But this didn't happen in Iowa, it happened in St. Paul, which is in Minnesota."

Some of those who fell for it said it was pretty bad, but a lot of us fell, including Vera White, Harry Rattenbury, B. Johns, who is an Englishman himself and told me how to pronounce "Trafalgar Square" just like a regular Britisher; Harry Fowler, the cameraman, and M. S. Goldaine, who was helping Lucas direct the picture.

Has Been a Villainous Week.

This was certainly a villainous week. After I left Brownlee and his heavy work I went over to the Hampton studio, where they are making a play called "The End of the Game," with five villains in the cast.

J. D. Hampton lined them up all in a row. "Look 'em over," he said.

I did, and a worse looking lot of plot-

ters and devisors of dastardly doings at the old mill at midnight could not be found anywhere.

Jack Richardson was the worst villain in the bunch. He admitted it. Said he'd been "heavying" for nine years And then Bert Apling said that years didn't count in a game of that kind, and George Fields and Milton Ross and Joe France got in the argument and it looked as if the whole bunch of them were going to mix up a nice little villain muss, when along came Jack Kerrigan.

"Do these guys think they are bad?" he wanted to know. "Watch me."

And then he held the whole gang up with a two-inch derringer with one hand while protecting Elinor Fair with the other arm.

I believe "The End of the Game" is going to be good. It is a story of the Forty-niners—regular Bret Harte stuff. George Perry plays the part of a chap who is so tame he is called "Wild Bill" in derision, and George is always good.

In addition to the five villains, Al Whitman, Lois Wilson, Elinor Fair, Joe Hazleton, and a big bunch of miners, gamblers and dance hall girls are in the cast, and the locations are scattered all over Southern California.

Mrs. Franklin K. Lane Gives Benefit.

Mrs. Franklin K. Lane, wife of the Secretary of the Interior, was sponsor for one of the best attended benefits when on November 19 all Washington society turned out to witness the exhibition at the Knickerbocker Theatre of "Lafayette, We Come." Members of every branch of official life in Washington, including the diplomatic corps, Congress, the courts, the army, navy and marine corps, as well as the Cabinet. The tickets sold at from 50 cents to $1.50, and the large sum obtained from the sale is to be used in caring for the soldier boys, former employes of the Department of the Interior, returning from overseas. Barry Bulkley, one of the stockholders in the theatre, as an associate of Harry M. Crandall, himself prominent in the political activity of the city, recited a patriotic poem and Secretary Lane delivered an address during which he praised the boys who had participated in the war.

TO BUILD $2,000,000 PICTURE HOUSE

Stanley Company's Philadelphia Theatre Will Be One of the Most Beautiful in the Country

WITH the modification by the United States Government of the rules laid down for building operations during the war, architects, contractors and builders are getting plans into shape for millions of dollars' worth of new work in Philadelphia, and one of the biggest contracts to be awarded as soon as conditions permit will be that for the new Stanley Theatre, which will be erected at the southwest corner of Nineteenth and Market streets.

This announcement was made recently by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Theatre, and he further stated that had it not been for the war the erection of the new theatre would have been begun two years ago and completed by this time. When the Government made its call for labor and materials of all kinds the Stanley company felt that it was its patriotic duty to postpone the building until the war was over, Mr. Mastbaum stated. Now that the conditions are changing, plans for the new house, already prepared, are being gone over to the most minute detail, and as soon as matters are settled in the labor and material fields the contracts will be awarded and the erection of the new Stanley begun.

The new theatre, according to the plans which were prepared under the personal supervision of Mr. Mastbaum, will be one of the most elaborate motion picture houses in the country. It will cost $2,000,000 and will be modern in every respect, occupied with all the latest scientific appliances for sanitation and also for the comfort and convience of patrons. The plans call for no stairways in any part of the building, approach to the balconcies and to the main floor being by ascending and descending inclines. There will be a seating capacity of 4,000 and an innovation will be a roof garden for patrons during the summer.

The new Stanley will follow the policy of the present popular house at Sixteenth and Market streets—that of being the headquarters in the East for first run of all photoplays. As at present, music will be an important adjunct to the pictures—in fact a distinct adjunct in itself. In the present Stanley there is an orchestra of twenty-five high class musicians. In the new theatre the orchestra will be augmented to fifty in addition to the organists, and besides these it is the intention of Mr. Mastbaum to have from time to time vocal soloists and possibly choruses.

Brunet Makes Statement Regarding Pathe Weekly

THE Pathe News was never known as the 'Hearst International News.' It has always been identified with the name of Pathe since its inception over ten years ago, and it always will be." This is the keynote of a statement by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in reply to a recent announcement regarding the separation of the Hearst and Pathe concerns.

"To clear up any misconception that may exist as the result of this statement," said Mr. Brunet, "it may be well to give a brief resume of the history of the Pathe News, which for the last twenty-three months has been united with the International's news film, the combination being known as the 'Hearst-Pathe News.'

"The first news film to be devised, assembled and released was the Pathe Journal in France some twelve years ago. The innovation proved to be so successful that the Pathe organization in this country about ten years ago started a similar news film, released weekly in one reel, called the Pathe Weekly. Four years ago, in the spring of 1914 to be exact, it was changed to a daily short reel of 200 or 300 feet, and the name became the Pathe News. As the Pathe News it continued until January 1, 1916, when by terms of a contract entered into with International Film Service, Inc., the name of Hearst was added, and it was called the 'Hearst-Pathe News.' But though the Hearst name was added the Pathe News remained the sole property of Pathe, controlled, published, edited and distributed by Pathe. For reasons deemed good and sufficient by us, the contract, originally drawn for the period of two years and which will expire on December 24, has not been renewed."

Fox Closes Offices on Victory Day.

In celebration of the end of the war, William Fox gave orders that the home office of the Fox Film Corporation, at 130 West 46th street, New York, be closed at noon, so that the employes could go out and celebrate. The stenographers of the various departments hired a huge truck for the afternoon and joined in the festivities, the truck proclaiming the girls' exhuberance with such signs as these: "The Prussian Cur Is in the Pound," "They've Knocked Old Bill to Holland Gone," "Closed for the Day—Me and Gott—Without Gott."

EDDIE POLO PAYS CHICAGO BRIEF VISIT

Universal Serial Star Interviewed—Will Make Motor Tour for Personal Appearances

EDDIE POLO, director and star of serials for Universal at the present time, arrived in the city Tuesday, November 12, from Los Angeles and stopped over several days before proceeding to New York. During his stay he appeared at a number of theatres, by arrangement, where he delivered addresses on his work in serials and especially on "The Lure of the Circus," which he recently completed and which will be released November 23.

This serial has eighteen episodes, of two reels each. Mr. Polo takes the part of the "King of the Air" throughout, and Eileen Sedgwick plays opposite him in the role of leading equestrienne of the circus.

As "King of the Air" Mr. Polo gives a real circus performance, which abounds in numerous hazardous feats and thrills. Each episode has at least two or three thrills, and while talking to me Mr. Polo found it difficult to state which of these death-defying feats was the most dangerous, as nearly all of them can be placed in that class.

During the run of the eighteen episides Mr. Polo also engages in numerous real, tough, fistic encounters, with an opponent worthy of his steel in each case, in addition to his circus stunts. One of these opponents is Duke Lee, a strapping six footer, who has a prize-ring record and is classed as one of the roughest fighters of this type in the game. In several of the episodes Mr. Polo is seen in a regular ring battle, and in each case his opponent is a man of reputation in the squared arena.

Miss Sedgwick, the woman star, is the subject of many exciting adventures and hairbreadth escapes during the story of "The Lure of the Circus," and in all these Mr. Polo arrives in the nick of time, in his character as "King of the Air," to rescue her.

Not a Tame Spot Anywhere.

"There is not a tame spot in any one of the episodes," said Mr. Polo, with much emphasis. "I broke two fingers in one episode, two ribs in another, and tore a ligament in my right knee in another, in addition to receiving sundry cuts and bruises all over my body, on various occasions."

During his stay in New York Mr. Polo will arrange to drive back to Los Angeles in his own automobile. He will stop at all important centers on the way, at the request of numerous exhibitors. He will appear at their theatres and give interesting talks at each concerning his work in "The Lure of the Circus." The trip will last about three months, beginning about November 21.

Mr. Polo left the Barnum and Bailey circus four years ago, having made up his mind to try his luck in moving pictures. Since that time he has been wholly engaged in moving picture work, but has never before appeared in a part which showed any of the work done by him during his circus career. His character, the King of the Air, in "The Lure of the Circus," is, therefore, really his first attempt to perform any of his circus feats before the camera. His long experience in circus work, together with his prominence as leading aerial wonder of the Barnum and Bailey shows, leads one to expect a collection of feats of daring, of the break-neck type, never before seen in moving pictures.

Eddie Polo.

Mr. Polo is an Americar of Italian descent. His father was a prospector for gold away back in the early days, and was always accompanied by his wife on his travels. This accounts for the fact that the subject of this sketch was born out in a desert, in the family wagons. When Polo was four years of age his parents joined a small wagon circus, his father having been a circus performer before he came to this country. Eddie contributed his share to the family earnings by doing his little part.

Mr. Polo has never touched a drop of strong drink in his life, and has always led an outdoor life. These facts account for his strength, agility and daring for a man of his years.

Manager Nehls, of American, Returns from Santa Barbara

R. R. NEHLS, general manager of the American Film Company, returned to the home office last week after a month's absence, during which the organization's studios at Santa Barbara were visited. On his arrival at the Coast Mr. Nehls decided to close the studios for a month, and work on William Russell's productions and Margarita Fisher's were stopped at once. The Mary Miles Minter Company was in the middle of a feature, so work on it was continued until finished.

Mr. Nehls states that after making a close survey of the general conditions of the film industry at present he is of the opinion that the exodus of producers and photoplayers will continue from the East until very few are left remaining.

Outside of the general business and production affairs of the American Film Company, Mr. Nehls attended to additional improvements on the equipment of the Santa Barbara studio to facilitate still further the fighting of the influenza epidemic. He states that at the time of his departure from Santa Barbara the percentage of sickness among American's studio forces, generally, was perhaps lower than that prevailing at any other.

While in Santa Barbara Mr. Nehls also looked over the sites and plans for several improvements and extensions which will probably be made in the spring. These include stages, additional offices and dressing rooms.

Before leaving, Mr. Nehls saw the finishing work on William Russell's next feature, "Where the West Begins," and conferred with the scenario and directing staffs about that star's next feature, "Some Liar," the story of which was written by James Oliver Curwood.

Great Impetus Given Sales of American Productions

THE president of the American Film Company, Samuel S. Hutchinson, announces that great impetus has been given to the sales of his organization by a new arrangement recently made with Pathe Exchange, Inc. By this change more than 150 additional salesmen have been added to American's selling forces.

After conferring with Vice-President and General Manager Brunet, of the Pathe organization, a clause was added to that corporation's contract with the American Film Company to the effect that all Pathe selling representatives will also push the sales of "Flying A" productions. By this means the American product will be handled by nearly 200 active sales representatives.

Each of these salesmen, American and Pathe alike, will be equipped with the complete sales paraphernalia of the American, such as campaign books for exhibitors (issues for each feature), the general pamphlet which treats of American stars, productions, etc., and a newly issued volume entitled, "One Hundred Reasons Why Exhibitors Should Book the 'Flying A' Productions."

"Shoulder Arms" Captures Chicago.

"Shoulder Arms," Chaplin's latest comedy, has taken Chicago by storm, paralleling in its effects, in a way, the first reliable news received announcing the signing of the armistice "over there." Kitty Kelly, in the Herald-Examiner, writes about it, in part:

"'Shoulder Arms' is very, very funny. Mr. Chaplin, with his sad seriousness, makes a delicious doughboy and gets into situations amazing even for him. Laughter follows on his every movement and loud aplause when he bags the person who is seeking safety in Holland.

"It's a bravely jolly little picture, excellently done, and a concentration of brilliances, in a comedy way, like the light-shooting facets of a diamond."

Ralph O. Proctor Moves to Coast.

Ralph O. Proctor, formerly Pathe's district manager for the middle western states, with headquarters in Chicago, was recently appointed to a similar position for the Pacific Coast, with headquarters at Los Angeles. He was obliged to leave for the Coast several weeks ago on account of poor health, but the Los Angeles climate has completely restored him. Mr. Proctor is well known among exhibitors and others in the trade all over the middle west, and it is safe to say that every one of them will be glad to hear of his success in the new field. For myself I have no fear that he will repeat on the Coast the pronounced success achieved in this neck of the woods. Mrs. Proctor accompanied him to Los Angeles during his illness.

Lightless Nights Lifted in Chicago.

Lightless nights for picture theatres in Chicago, on Mondays and Tuesdays, were called off since last writing, the order taking effect Monday, November 11.

Fuel Director Durham, of Illinois, issued the order November 9. He explained that a surplus of screenings, which is the sort of coal most used in generating electric current, made the order possible, stating besides that indications are such as to exclude the possibility of there being a shortage of this kind of coal during the winter. The order prevails throughout the entire state.

Mr. Durham said that four nights a week in the East and two a week in Ohio and Michigan will continue lightless.

Chicago exhibitors should be, therefore, very thankful that the "flu" ban as well as the "lightless" has been lifted about the same time.

General and Kleine Officials Confer.

A conference was held Tuesday afternoon, November 12, in George Kleine's executive offices between M. A. Smith, general manager of the George Kleine system; Douglas H. Berg, personal traveling representative for George Kleine, and W. F. Rogers, sales manager of the General Film Company, from the home office, New York; Walter S. Reid, western division manager, and H. L. O. Rear, central western division manager of the G. F. Co. from Cincinnati.

The subject of discussion was the general conditions and future plans for the George Kleine system in connection with the distribution of its product through the G. F. Company.

Death of M. S. Ludick, Chicago.

M. S. Ludick, owner of the Melrose Park Theatre, and formerly owner of the Crystal Theatre at Milwaukee and Grand avenue, died Thursday morning, November 14, in his home at 2650 North Sawyer avenue. The cause of his death was anemia. Mr. Ludick had been ailing for eight weeks, and leaves a wife and a daughter to mourn his loss.

The funeral services were held Saturday morning, at St. Sylvester Church, on Shakespeare avenue, and the interment was at St. Adelbert cemetery.

Mr. Ludick was an unright man and a good business man and was held in high esteem by a large following of exhibitors. He was a member for two years of the executive committee of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A. He built the Melrose about three years ago and conducted it so skillfully since that no opposition has ever been attempted in that locality, which is considered a very fine one.

A committee of Chicago exhibitors, members of the League, attended the funeral and forwarded a set of resolutions deploring his death and extending sympathy to Mrs. Ludick and her daughter.

Health Conditions in Chicago Normal.

Health conditions in Chicago were declared normal Tuesday morning, November 12, for the first time since the influenza-pneumonia epidemic started. The death rate for the 24 hours ending the time mentioned was 101, from all causes.

On Wednesday, November 13, however, the number of new cases of influenza was 148 and the deaths 21; also the number of new cases of pneumonia was 79 and the deaths 69. City Health Commissioner Robertson attributed these conditions to the big Victory celebration on Monday, November 11, when many thousands walked the streets with their hats off. He issued a warning to all who exhausted their strength on that day to take a good rest so as to restore vitality and consequent resistance to the "flu."

Dr. Drake Returns to Springfield.

State Health Director Drake closed his headquarters in the Hotel Sherman about the middle of the week, and returned to Springfield. This shows that in the northern section of Illinois the quarantine has been practically lifted. The middle section has steadily improved and is also nearing normal conditions. In Danville a large increase in the number of new influenza cases was declared Friday, November 15, and the question of reclosing the schools was considered.

From what can be learned of conditions in the southern part of the state they are improving, but quarantine may be maintained in many communities for a week or longer.

Norbert Lusk Goes to Coast.

Norbert Lusk, for more than a year a member of Goldwyn's publicity staff, is on his way to the coast to take charge of publicity at the company's Los Angeles studios. His duties there will include the preparation and placing of newspaper material in Los Angeles and the handling of special feature matter for the motion picture magazines. Headquarters of the Goldwyn publicity department will continue to be maintained at the company's home office, 16 East Forty-second street, New York City.

November 17 Attractions at New York Theatres

STRAND—Billie Burke in a Paramount production, "The Make-Believe Wife," was the screen star at the Strand Theatre the week of November 17. Most of the scenes are laid in the Adirondacks, and the outdoor views are very fine. The picture was adapted from a story by Edward Childs Carpenter. David Powell heads the supporting company. The Topical Review, Allied War Review, a travel picture and an educational completed the film part of the program. The entire fifth act of Gounod's "Faust" was given, with Alys Michot as Marguerite, Ralph Erolle as Faust, and Yon Collognon as Mephisto.

RIALTO and RIVOLI—"Under Four Flags," the Third Official War Picture issued by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, which was assembled under the supervision of S. L. Rothapfel, was the exclusive screen feature at both the Rialto and the Rivoli. The musical setting was an important and elaborately carried out portion of the entertainment. The Rialto Male Quartette at the Rivoli and Greek Evans at the Rialto were the vocal attractions.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET—First half, William Desmond in "The Pretender"; latter half, Enid Bennett in "When Do We Eat."

BROADWAY—Mildred Harris in "Borrowed Clothes" and Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms."

World Pictures Holds Open Places.

World Pictures has sent a letter to each of its employes now in service in the army, navy or marines to the effect that their former places with the company are being held open for them until they are mustered out of the service and ready to resume work in civilian life.

The World hopes that each of its former employes will return to its service when the nation's fighting forces are demobilized, and it is for the purpose of communicating this fact in an unmistakable manner to such employes that the general letter regarding this matter has been written.

Over eighty men who at the outbreak of the war were in the employment of the World in various capacities, either at the studio, at the home office or in the branch offices, are now in the army, navy or marines. While a few of the number have been wounded, not one has been killed, so far as the World is aware.

Rex Beach Suggests Goldwyn Title.

Because of the discovery that the title had recently been used for a motion picture, Goldwyn has changed the name of Mae Marsh's next release, now completed, from "Southern Pride" to "The Racing Strain." The new title incidentally was suggested by Rex Beach, who happened into a Goldwyn staff conference while the subject was under discussion.

"The Racing Strain" is a romantic story of Kentucky and the race-tracks. It was written by Tex Charwate especially for Mae Marsh, and is said to give a scope to her unusual gifts not hitherto afforded. Many of the scenes were photographed in the South, others at New York's famous Saratoga track at the height of the recent racing season.

CONFIRMS CROMELIN'S CONCLUSIONS

American Motion Pictures Are Familiarizing Foreign Countries With American Habits and Customs

THE spirit of "I-Told-You-So" seems to pervade the Inter-Ocean Building this week. The publicity department points to a statement by President Paul H. Cromelin printed in the Moving Picture World last August, which Collier's Weekly, in a special article on the international value of the motion pictures, sees fit to verify as it stands. Mr. Cromelin's August statement in this paper was occasioned by the remarks of Chairman Hurley of the Shipping Board before the National Security League of Chicago. Commenting on this speech, Mr. Cromelin said in the World:

"Chairman Hurley declares that this merchant marine must not be allowed to go to rot in peace time. He told the assembled business men that they must plant American wares so successfully in the foreign market that all the new ships would keep busy. Meantime the American film is acting as publicity agent for this superb idea. It is showing in all neutral lands, familiarizing them with American success-tools. The demand for these tools exists wherever ambitious men are forging to the front. This, I think, takes in every land! Establish American supremacy thus and the orders for American goods will flow in. And what channel other than our films could get such a result? A paid advertising campaign that would attain anything like it would cost our manufacturers a billion dollars."

This point is taken in its entirety by Collier's in its article dated October 19 and entitled, "Internationalizing the American Idea," even the Hurley statement being used in connection therewith. The extract follows:

"After the war is won, as we all know, America's overseas trade must be developed enormously. It is not only an opportunity but a necessity. As stated in this page not long ago, Chairman Hurley of the Shipping Board says we will have twenty-five million tons of shipping to be employed.

"Well, consider what the American motion picture is doing in other countries. It is familiarizing South America and Africa, Asia and Europe with American habits and customs. It is educating them up to the American standard of living. It is showing them American clothes and furniture, automobiles and homes. And it is subtly but surely creating a desire for these American-made articles. It is paving the way for the trade which must be developed when our factories and shops are no longer busy with war work. The modern version of 'Trade follows the flag' may very well be expressed as 'Trade follows the film.'"

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation is sending copies of these remarkably similar World and Collier's statements to a list of prominent Government officials as part of a plea that increased shipping facilities should be accorded exports.

Director Hart Sails for England.

Charles S. Hart, director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, sailed for England Tuesday, November 19. He will be absent several weeks, and during his sojourn abroad will visit France, Italy, Holland, Switzerland and Sweden.

Director Hart's trip is made for the purpose of looking over the film situation in England and on the Continent and studying the possibilities of the motion picture in working out President Wilson's idea of bringing the nations more closely together. It is believed that the films which did so much to arouse interest in the European struggle throughout the United States would be equally effective in creating a sympathetic interest between the various countries of Europe and the United States.

Outdoor Pictures for Ottawa at 3 A. M. on Victory Day

UNDOUBTEDLY one of the most unusual moving picture shows ever held in Canada was the outdoor performance held on Connaught Square, Ottawa, immediately after word was flashed to the Canadian Capital that an armistice between the Allies and Germany had been declared. The news was received about 3 a. m. on Monday, November 11, and within a few minutes pictures were being thrown on the improvised screen which had been used all during the previous week for Victory Loan demonstrations because local theatres had been closed. Several pictures and slides were screened at this early hour.

War Map Across Which Canvas Was Stretched.

Camouflaged Projection Booth in Connaught Square, Ottawa.

Another incident of the early hours of the big peace celebration in Ottawa was the grabbing of posters, special signs and still photographs in the lobby of the Strand Theatre, which were being used to advertise the reopening attraction at this house. This was the war feature, "To Hell With the Kaiser," and, naturally, this material proved to be highly desirable for the impromptu parades. The lobby display was soon stripped by the enthusiastic crowds. The advance advertising apparently made such an impression upon Ottawa people in general that the title of the picture, "To Hell With the Kaiser," was adopted for many banners and streamers.

Kashin Institutes Novel Light Effect at Broadway

M. KASHIN, manager of the Broadway Theatre, accomplishes another strikingly original achievement last week. It was that of presenting the spectacle of lighting effects that merged the screen with its surroundings.

The lighting was handled in such a way that the coloring of the scenes in the picture seemed to be cast by reflection out of the screen upon the pit and the surrounding theatre sides. The result was an illusion that virtually brought the screen scene into actuality before the eyes of spectators.

Mr. Kashin conceived some months ago the idea of devising light radiances that would act realistic in this fashion. Since then he has been experimenting with his electrician on the subject. Finally they hit upon mechanical arrangements that produced the desired effect.

The project was put into action for a remarkable scenic picture of the Yosemite Valley which was included on the program. The film shows scenes of zigzag woodland trails, of tumbling waterfalls and surging rivers. The sun played beautiful rays of colored light through the mists that rose from the waterfalls and cast reflections and shadows through the leafy foliage and the surface of the streams. As the scenes changed, the lights and shadows and colored radiances seemed to extend beyond the limits of the screen, by reason of the mechanical devices that the theatre manager had employed. The illusion is declared to have been flawless.

No Delay on "America's Answer."

Dennis J. Sullivan, manager of Domestic Distribution for the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, is enthusiastic over the reception of "America's Answer," the official war picture, by exhibitors throughout the country.

"Nothwithstanding the delay in releasing 'America's Answer,' caused by the influenza," says Mr. Sullivan, "the work of booking is steadily progressing, and indications point to an unprecedented showing for this Government war picture. One of the most gratifying features of the campaign is the way in which local exhibitors have been getting together. Competition is being ignored, and in scores of towns moving picture houses are arranging day and date exhibitions, in order to insure a simultaneous showing."

FACTS AND COMMENTS

WITH the probability that the revenue bill now under consideration in the Finance Committee of the United States Senate will be revised there should be an opportunity to obtain some relief for the motion picture business. When the Ways and Means Committee of the House first took up the work of framing the tax bill it was with the understanding that eight billion dollars would be required. Efforts will be made by the Government, now that peace is so near, to reduce its estimate of expenditures and thus lighten the tax burden. Surely the motion picture business is entitled to consideration when the schedules are revised. Take off the tax on rentals and reduce the admission tax to the original ten per cent. basis. This reduction will not materially affect the total revenue collected, but it will be of great relief to the motion picture trade, which is now bearing its full share of the nation's burdens. What is the N. A. M. P. I. doing with this matter?

ONE of the first announcements following the modification by the Government of the restrictions on building operations is of the awarding of contracts for the construction of a two-million-dollar motion picture house in Philadelphia. The Stanley Company demonstrates its confidence in the business situation as it affects the motion picture industry. That confidence is bound to have beneficial effect on other theatre men who are contemplating expansion of their holdings. And Jules Mastbaum has the reputation of being a shrewd business man.

WHILE the action of Mary Pickford in determining to make pictures upon her own account is not new to this business the fact that one so prominent among the picture favorites has taken such action calls attention to a growing tendency among so-called screen stars. Chaplin was probably the first to take this step. Others have followed. Just where the movement will end is a question that is bothering quite a few producing companies that have large distributing forces under their direction. Under the new plan stars are privileged to make as few or as many pictures as they wish so long as the product is up to the mark in quality. To get a top price for their productions they have only to make them of the highest value. They have no schedule to work to, and they have full control of their actions; their good pictures will find a ready market, their poor ones—if they make any—will be shelved and not put on the market to plague them. We believe that distributing companies will find this plan to be an advantage.

TAKING the stand that the practice of reissuing old pictures in the guise of new ones is calculated to deceive and defraud exhibitors and the public, the Federal Trade Commission has summoned at least one firm which, it is charged, has practiced such methods, to appear before it in Washington on December 23. A decided stand was taken against the practice of reissuing old subjects under new titles by THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD some time ago. Our contention then was that a deception was being practiced on the public. It is gratifying to know that the Federal Trade Commission holds a similar view, and that it will endeavor to put a stop to the deception.

EXPORT conditions should improve from now on. While there is still a great necessity for ships to move supplies for our men in Europe, the cessation of war restrictions and the releasing of neutral shipping will provide bottoms for the needs of general commerce so that the embargo that has existed against motion picture film in particular should presently be raised. There is great danger of serious trade loss if it is not raised at the earliest possible moment. Already New York exporters are receiving cancellations of orders from all parts of Latin America. This means that they will take their trade to London, where it was before the war, if we do not wake up. All such things as Navy and Army censorship, necessary in war times, should be abolished at once. To wait for the formal declaration of peace would be fatal to trade. Efforts are being made by the motion picture exporters of this country to induce Government authorities to take some action that will mitigate the present situation. One thing is certain, if trade with our South American neighbors is not facilitated we shall lose what little advantage we gained by reason of the war.

OPEN YOUR EYES WIDE

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHAT are we going to get out of this war, pestilence and famine in the way of social benefit and national betterment? In what particular way is the motion picture industry, its science, its artistry, its essentiality to be enlarged and improved? These are questions to engage our attention at all times, but especially now, when they are emphasized by tremendous changes taking place in ourselves and in our methods of living.

For the sake of better times let us shake off stupidity!

It is staggering to realize how thick-headed we really are!

"It is an old and melancholy subject," says the Saturday Evening Post of October 26 in its leading editorial, referring to our density in the matter of modern education. "It is an old and melancholy subject—this scholasticism of most of our public school instruction, its obstinate detachment from life." The editor goes on to illustrate how children sit half stupefied while listening to colorless accounts of past history, expressing regret "that education must begin with the old stuff," whereas, when the subject matter is vital, "children sit breathless, there a boy with parted lips, his eyes rapt and shining, here a girl whose slim throat is contracted with emotion."

One would think he was talking of the effect of moving pictures.

He was referring to the receptivity of youthful minds.

It is keenest to grasp what is going on now.

So is the mind of the grown-up at the moving picture show.

The stories we are showing reveal an obstinate detachment from life.

Grown-ups sit half stupefied through most of the old stuff we are showing on the screen, just as children do through a dull lecture or a reissue of old stuff in a pulpit sermon. The vigor and life of this splendid young art of expression depends upon the vigor and vitality of what is expressed THROUGH it. It is a language. There must be ideas quite as well as means of communicating them forcibly and clearly to millions of others.

We are profoundly interested in changes taking place.

Our minds are occupied with what has occurred since 1914.

We are paying the penalty of being unprepared for events.

Why not prepare for conditions which must follow the war?

We are getting rid of erroneous conceptions of a few years ago; new forces are carrying us away from our old bad habits; we are giving up our pernicious practices as individuals and as social groups; we are being made over new. All this is taking place at a tremendous cost of noble lives and hard-earned fortunes, a dramatic series of incidents, covering a limited period of our history, that of four years, but so broad in its scope that a man must have wide-angled vision to comprehend its full meaning.

In the panorama being unrolled before our eyes are the events, themes and situations of drama for the next hundred years.

There are no proprietary rights in all this dramatic material.

A man may have the brain of genius, but he is a dolt if he does not use it.

So we are numbskulls not to use the genius and material of our day.

The important thing is to make that genius distributive.

We have the greatest known medium of distribution.

Open your eyes wide and look at this question from all points of view.

If we are not an intelligent people let us become so.

If we are, why not, in the name of common sense, address that intelligence?

Give the millions of people who love moving pictures the best that can be communicated through that or any other known medium. The degree of happiness they enjoy depends upon differences in condition, the more intelligent enjoying proportionately more, but we need not hold ourselves responsible to the shockeads and mental weaklings in an audience, as we have most religiously done in the past, but let all who can see light know through the pictured story and drama how to make the best of this new life as we find it, and even what effect it is to have on our future happiness and progress. The means near at hand, the end clearly in view, the easier we will succeed with large results—open your eyes wide—to achieve great results quickly the means must be within easy reach. Use the materials near at hand for the great drama of today and tomorrow.

PEACE AND RECONSTRUCTION

By Robert C. McElravy.

AS these lines are being written the great siren whistles, built to warn New York City of possible air raids, are proclaiming the dawn of peace. Germany has signed the armistice terms. One by one her allies dropped away and now she herself has capitulated. The great war is over and merely to have lived through it, to speak mildly, is to have encompassed more than comes in the ordinary lifetime of man.

In these four years of unparalleled strife the moving picture has wonderfully developed. It has brought the war to one's very door, and generations to come will thank the screen for the record of these world events.

There is scarcely a phase of the struggle that has not been caught in some form by the screen. Brave men have carried the camera into the trenches and across No Man's Land to give civilization this priceless legacy. Their names should be blazoned high in the roll of honor, for their risk has been like that of soldiers in battle and they have served a great cause.

But it is not entirely as a purveyor of pictured events that the work of the screen is to be valued. Its work along the lines of special propaganda has been equally great. It has carried messages of hope and cheer into Russia, where the revolution has left its trail of darkness. It has inspired the fighting men of all Allied nations by its revelations of the work of preparation going on behind the lines. It has buoyed up the faith of small non-combatant countries, some of them clinging bravely to the hope of justice under the very heel of Germany and her allies.

People have come to look to the screen for an intimate delineation of all the news events of the world, and in this regard has come to be a tremendous educational force.

Now that the actual fighting is at an end, the work of the screen takes on a new importance. When peace is assured the world will enter upon a reconstruction period such as has never been seen in the annals of history. Prior to this there will be weeks, perhaps months, of peace preparations and deliberations, but the terms of the armistice may be taken almost as an absolute guarantee that there can be no further fighting.

American audiences are going to be greatly interested in this rehabilitation of the Old World. Our part in the great drama has been such that it gives us special rights; we are both participants and spectators. Many of our soldiers will remain on foreign soil for months and perhaps years. Our food and money will flow into the stricken countries for the immense relief work to be undertaken. Already the devastated regions of France are being rebuilt and those of Belgium will speedily follow.

It might well be said that the field of the moving picture has been immensely broadened by the war, but it would perhaps be nearer the truth to say that the conflict has broadened the outlook of our people. What home is there in America that will ever forget Chateau-Thierry, or the second Sedan? What man or woman who went overseas during our part in the war but will have come away with a wider viewpoint?

There are interesting and important years ahead for the moving picture.

FETTERS AND SCREEN

By Edward Weitzel.

SOMEONE is continually attempting to put the motion picture in the straitjacket of his own limited vision. It is time wasted. The motion picture escapes from all sorts of mental fetters with ease. What Houdini accomplishes through skill the art of the screen achieves by reason of its inherent and rapidly developing strength. It refuses to be restrained by any make of theoretical handcuffs. Every form of shackles is shaken off with a calm indifference that must be very irritating to the inventors. The gentry have only themselves to blame. They persist in not recognizing the variety of types that the screen owns in common with the printed or spoken mode of expression.

Screen Fiction in the Lead.

The term moving picture is generic and embraces every form of dynamic reproduction thrown on the screen. At the present time fiction comprises the greater portion of the product of the silent stage. The proper classification of this branch of the screen art has never been attempted. The news reel, the scenic and the educational have been recognized, but every form of story telling by the camera is classed under the head of photoplay. This is an error that becomes more apparent with every advance made in the creation of screen fiction.

With a clearer understanding of the difference between the screen novel and the photoplay and the proper division of the latter form of the moving picture into as many grades and degrees of intellectual standards as mark the fiction of the spoken stage will be born a wider freedom for the screen author, actor and director and a deeper respect for the efforts of all three.

Banishing the Half-Truths.

When the real truth is understood the half-truths will disappear from the daily press and the publications devoted exclusively to exploiting the moving picture. As a result of this momentous forward stride two such cursory opinions will rarely appear on the same page of a Sunday newspaper as those expressed by Haywood Broun and William Nigli in a recent issue of the New York Tribune.

Haywood Broun—"When the short film has come into favor, as it should and may, we will be rid of scenes in which the heroine feeds pigeons and does other perfectly meaningless things just to give the audience a run for its money."

William Nigli—"A good play could run for ten acts and not become monotonous. The majority of plays should run only ten minutes."

The first statement is the snap judgment of a man who has made only a superficial study of the screen; the second statement shows its author to be quite as poorly informed in regard to the stage. As to the Haywood Broun contention:

The five reel moving picture will become the standard drama form of the screen when a school of motion picture playwrights has been developed and the pigeon feeding scenes and other decorative but action-destroying interruptions are left to the screen novelists.

Motion picture director Nigli's "wild and whirling" words about a play running for ten acts and not becoming monotonous is as misleading as his assertion that many so-called great stage artists fail before the camera because they cannot act well enough for the screen. Unbiased evidence will prove the fallacy of both statements. No normal brain could stand the strain of—much less enjoy—sitting in a theatre from 8 o'clock at night until 2 the next morning and watch a play in which the suspense was sustained at the proper pitch for six hours.

The assertion about stage artists not being able to act well enough for the screen is another half-truth that should have been fully explained or left unsaid. If the dictum that "the majority of plays should run only ten minutes" be true of the stage it is equally applicable to the screen. Neither allegation is correct.

Phrase making is a graceful accomplishment, but it is bound by the same law against bearing false witness that governs a court of justice. Mutual respect should be the attitude of the screen and the stage. Both are built on firm foundations of honorable achievement and both are too vigorous, too near the heart of humanity, to be bound down by mental fetters of any description.

Picked Up On Broadway

Ray Physioc, whom we met on Broadway last week, told us he had qualified for the Signal service of the Army, had secured his passport for overseas, and was about to sail when peace was declared, and he is detained in New York. He had even stored his furniture and sent his wife out west to remain with her folks while he was away.

Allan Hale, who has been playing in the road company of "Friendly Enemies" for the past four months in Chicago, is now in New York City at liberty. The company was withdrawn on account of the epidemic. He will now direct his attention to moving pictures so he can be near home and his wife, who is undergoing treatment for her sight, which has recently been impaired.

Tom Brett has been deterred in the releasing of his much-advertised comedies on account of the epidemic and general shutdown. He says he will release about December 1.

We asked Sam Trigger if he was a candidate for the presidency of the New York League. "I am president of the Pawnbrokers' Association of America, and that's presidency enough for me," he said.

N. Y. State Federation of Women's Clubs Discusses Film Problem and Resolves to Fight Poster Evil

A BRIEF discussion of the moving picture situation, particularly as it concerns the child, took place at the Tuesday afternoon session of the Twenty-fourth Annual Convention of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, Nov. 11 t 14. The discussion followed the reading of a report by Mrs. Charles M. Dickinson, recording secretary, of a survey of motion picture houses throughout the State, made by a committee formed in February, 1917, for that purpose. Evidences were not lacking that the women of the state are realizing the responsibility which rests largely on them of aiding the survival of the fittest in picture production by directing their efforts toward the financial assurance which alone makes it possible for the exhibitor to run his theatre on programs of desirable pictures. It was made clear to the large audience in the Grand Ballroom of the Astor that the great necessity in the movement for better films is encouragement rather than condemnation—the patronage of the best rather than isolated condemnation of the worst.

Miss Mary Wood, chairman of the Department of Legislation of the General Federation, made the most encouraging and emphatic statement in favor of the motion picture. She drew attention to the unlimited usefulness of the motion picture, to the aid it had given in preserving the morale of our troops abroad, and closed with the declaration that it is the greatest factor we have for the spread of propaganda and patriotism.

A resolution to fight the poster evil was introduced by Anna Maxwell Jones, and carried. It was stated during this discussion that frequently it had been discovered that the picture was alright when the poster advertising it was all wrong.

The educational matinee was voted a success in some sections and not in others. In some instances it was noted that the pictures were not wisely chosen; and it was suggested that differences in children made more difficult the task of choosing programs which would interest all.

While this discussion failed to take a concrete form, the friendly exchange of ideas which took place on a subject of such vital importance is bound to bear fruit sooner or later. The following is the report which was accepted unanimously by the convention:

In February, 1917, your board, meeting in New York, decided to form a new committee to be known as the Committee on "Motion-Picture Survey." Our dear Mrs. Helmuth was deeply interested in this, and suggested the name of your third vice-president to head the committee. The other members of the committee are as follows: Miss Anna Maxwell Jones, Mrs. John J. Soble, Miss Ida J. Butcher, and Mrs. Asa Wynkoop.

At our convention last year in Albany the following resolution was presented to the convention and it was passed unanimously:

"Resolved, That the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs protest against the insidious and demoralizing pictures which are being shown in many moving picture houses in this country, and also, that we as a federation use our influence with manufacturers and producers of films and their patrons to make the motion picture a greater agency for good by depicting the better and brighter sides of human nature and life."

This resolution reached every producer and manufacturer of motion pictures throughout the country; this I know, because of the letters which I received from them after tbe couvention.

Having obtained the sentiment of the women of the State Federation, your committee decided to make a careful survey of conditions in New York State. Consequently, a letter enclosing a questionnaire was sent to one or more club presidents in every village and city in the State.

The second week in March was designated, so that a report of this work might be sent to the biennial in Hot Springs, which was done. Every day during this week a committee in each place visited the movies, thus a survey was made of all films in circuits at one time.

Of the questionnaire cards sent out, 190 were returned. Five villages report no moving picture theatres: one village reports one entirely satisfactory house; 12 reports show irreverence depicted; 9 reports show gambling made attractive; 35 report objectionable and suggestive love scenes; 51 report disregard of the marriage vow and infidelity; 34 report serious sex plays; only three saw habit-forming drug using made attractive; 22 report instructive ideas on criminal methods; 19 report that the total effect of the week's survey would be good; 25 report the effect to be neither good nor bad, and the remaining 86 say that the total effect would be decidedly bad.

The report concerning local conditions in the theatres are very satisfactory, only four observed inadequate fire protection. During the week of the survey the theatres were not filled except for Saturday matinee and evening and at these times the places were overcrowded. Many noticed a shocking number of young, able-bodied men attend the movies in the afternoon. Several reported children under sixteen years of age outside the theatre asking adults to take them in, later those same children came in unattended.

In some cases the manager is willing to cooperate and eager to improve conditions; he wishes to give the people who attend moving pictures just what they want in so far as he can afford to do so.

Many of our committees report that the vaudeville is always demoralizing. The suggestion comes from several that better movies be shown for Saturday matinee than at any other time for the sake of the small children who attend in such large numbers. A campaign of education should be carried on to teach the parents to witness the play before taking young children to see it.

One report shows that not one performance during the entire week was sufficiently clean all the way through for a child to see. In cases where a good picture was shown there were one or more short reels unfit to be seen. The general opinion obtains, however, that conditions are improving, and that women's clubs with their "Motion Picture Committees" help largely to keep the managers up to some sort of a standard.

The question of better movies is claiming the thought of our club women all over the state, so that Committees on Motion Pictures are being formed in very many of our clubs. I have received helpful personal letters from members interested in this branch of our federation work and I shall take the liberty of quoting from a letter written by the "Ladies' Village Improvement Society" of Sag Harbor, N. Y.

"All our members are in the heartiest accord with the movement taken by the federation, and carried a motion that I write you to that effect. There has almost no movement been made lately that has pleased us like this action against the pernicious influence so many of the moving pictures must have on the minds of the young people, or older ones also for that matter. We are so thankful there has been started so grand a movement, please never give it up until the end is accomplished."

Your Committee on Motion Pictures wishes to emphasize to this convention the importance of pictures of a high moral, educational and patriotic tone. With the additional use of the motion pictures in community centre work, in camp recreation, and for patriotic education, the necessity for intelligent and conscientious regulations of the industry increases. Juvenile restlessness and delinquency always accompany war conditions. Motion pictures should, therefore, offer safe recreation for all.

Our civilian population here at home requires diversion and relaxation as never before, we are highly nervous and easily impressed, and therefore susceptible to actual scenes visualized through the film.

Our foreign population and small children especially receive through the movies their only impression of American life and ideals and the reasons why America is at war today.

Women's clubs have improved conditions immensely, no one can possibly measure the value of our united effort, but there is much work yet to do. Let us never be satisfied until we have wiped off of the screen every unclean, unwholesome, and demoralizing picture, and substituted in their place the beautiful, the artistic, the patriotic and the educational.

MRS. CHARLES M. DICKINSON,
Chairman for Committee on "Motion-Picture Survey, 1918.

Wide Distribution for Ford; Griever's Latest Is "Eagles"

FOR the benefit of our readers who some time ago learned that the Ford Educational Weekly had been entrusted to the Griever Distributing Corporation we wish to state that this firm has installed itself in the ninth floor of the Mallers Building, 5 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill. They have also established exchanges in 22 cities and are therefore able to serve all territories with this excellent Educational Weekly, the latest issue of which gives a two-reel detailed account of the manufacture of the Ford Eagle.

One of the most striking things in connection with the manufacture of the "Eagle" is the simple and practical system upon which it is based. Throughout the entire length of a steel and glass structure more than 1,700 feet in length, situated at River Rouge, runs a railroad equipped with a series of flat cars. On each car the keel of a vessel is laid, and each day sees one of the invincible Eagles shifted to a powerful hydraulically manipulated elevator capacity, and lowered to the river and launched.

It is a thrilling sight to look down on the long line of ships being "made to order," to see as one is finished the entire line moved along to fill in the gap, and on the end car now vacated by the shifting forward of the line a new keel is immediately begun. We also remember in looking at a fleet of the Ford made chasers of the enemy submarine, that we are looking at one of the long arms of American efficiency that helped dethrone the Hun.

Shamrock's Animal and Travel Subjects.

Following the announcement of the educational work entered upon by the Shamrock Photoplay Corporation of San Antonio, Tex., in last week's issue, there has been sent to us a list of films on natural history and travel subjects which they now have ready for circulation. The natural history subjects have been recognized by the public schools of San Antonio and will be used by them as well as by other educational institutions and colleges of the city. The films are as follows: Deer, various kinds; Eagles, American and Mexican; Owls, various kinds; Hawks, Texas; Sheep, mountain; Elk; Buffalo; Coyotes; Wolves, black, grey, Lobo; Hogs, Javeline, mule foot; Bears, black grizzly; Lions, African; Cats; Coons; Monkeys; Tapirs; Sea Lions; Sacred Cattle; Camels, Llama; Sheep, Persian; Pheasants, golden, ring neck, Mongolian, silver; Ducks, wood, mallard, mandrake; Pea Fowl; Wild Turkeys; Pigeons, fan tail, white wing; Parrots; Parakeets; Rabbits, various kinds; Doves, ring neck, Texas, Mexican; Laughing Jack-ass; Water Rail; Jac-a-Lack; Quails, Bob White, hybrid, California, valley, scaled Mexican blue, mountain blue; Catfish and Eels; Dog, Mexican hairless; Armadillo; Gila Monster; Ostriches, black and white swans. The Alamo; San Ferdinando Cathedral; Missions of San Jose, San Francisco Espada, Concepcion, San Juan Capastrano, and Chapel of Miracles; Japanese sunken gardens.

"The Far Flung Battle Line" (Pathe).

The son of the famous Italian general, Garibaldi, is shown in this number, talking with British Tommys on the Italian front. The Tommys are seen making their afternoon tea and helping the Italian girls draw water from a well. Numerous German airplanes, wrecked behind the Allied lines, are also shown. The subject is very interesting throughout.

"Along the Crimson Gash" (Pathe).

This number is filled with a varied lot of scenes from the Western front. Close-ups of trenches and dugouts on the Alpine front come first. Views of the French Poilu traveling to and from the front are shown; captured prisoners; how the doughboys are fed; target practice from dummy whippet tanks; the cavalry in action and other topics are also included. These numbers increase in interest, as they give so many intimate details of army life that could not otherwise be comprehended.

"Scenes in the Malay Archipelago" (Post).

The island of Sumatra furnishes the larger part of the interesting material from which this picture is made up. Apart from the scenes showing the customs of the natives and various types, those covering the rubber industry of Sumatra will be found perhaps most interesting by way of information contained therein. Here we see the plantations of rubber trees being tapped. The juice is then run off, and finally, after treatment by a heating process, is rolled into flat strips and boxed for shipping. The lace making industry in which the women engage is also illustrated.

Airplanes Exploit Official Picture.

Director Charles S. Hart, of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, and Manager S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, arranged with Major Hitchcock, at wing headquarters, Mitchell Aviation Field, Mineola, L. I., for a squadron of airplanes, to be utilized in exploiting the initial official showing of "Under Four Flags," the new Government war picture, which is being presented during the week beginning Sunday, Nov. 17.

The planes left Mineola at 3 p. m. Saturday, each with an air pilot and observer, and carrying 200 pounds of paper bombs. The planes flew singly and in battle formation the entire length of Fifth avenue and Broadway, dropping the "bombs," which opened in mid-air, scattering announcements of the first presentation of the new official picture.

Member of Parliament Acts Before the Camera

ON October 15 the Right Hon. John Hodge, M. P., Minister of Pensions, paid a special visit to the studio of the Hepworth Manufacturing Company, Ltd., at Walton-on-Thames, Surrey, England. He had two objects in view, the first of which was to play a leading part in a short film dealing with the Kings' Fund for Disabled Soldiers.

The Hepworth Company is also interested in training disabled officers and has offered the use of the studios and works for the purpose of training them in all departments of film production, under the personal supervision of Cecil M. Hepworth, and the picture play in question had reference to the King's Fund for disabled men.

John Hodge in this film played opposite Britain's three leading picture players, Alma Taylor, Chrissie White and Henry Edwards. He was accompanied on his visit by Major Mitchell, O. B. E., director of training, Ministry of Pensions.

John Hodge's second object was to discuss with Cecil M. Hepworth, founder of the company which bears his name, a scheme for the training of disabled officers in the many branches of the production side of the cinema industry. The scheme originated with Cecil M. Hepworth and Paul Kimberley.

This is the first time in history that a member of the English House of Commons has actually played in a film, although less than two years ago Cecil M. Hepworth filmed individual members of the War Cabinet at work.

The story of the film, which is called "Broken in the Wars," deals with the problem of the disabled soldier who finds it difficult to obtain work.

News of Training Camp Activities.

Raymond C. Mayer relieved Matt Whitham as southeastern picture representative Monday, November 11.

Through the co-operation of George Kleine "The Unbeliever" has been donated free of charge to all the War Department's Commission on Training Camp Liberty Theatres.

"America's Answer," the second official United States War Films, is being circuited throughout all the Liberty Theatres and is going over in great shape with the soldiers.

This commission is thoroughly co-operating with the morale office of which General Munson is the head. It has received the first release of the single reel issued by that office, entitled "Absent Without Leave," which pictures to the soldiers the folly of taking leave without permission just before going over seas.

Frank McIntyre, the comedian who has just completed the Rex Beach picture "Too Fat to Fight," has offered to appear in all camps where the picture will be shown through the patriotic co-operation of the Goldwyn Picture Corporation.

Steve and Cleo.

STEVE Farrar has been flirting with Cleopatra and wrote that it was the biggest clean-up he ever played. He got from 25 to 50 cents for it, too, because the picture played through that section of the state as a road attraction with a dollar top. Steve didn't bother with the press book. He had his own campaign all lined up, for he writes:

There is nothing new about this stuff, as I stole every line of it from McCormick. I am sending it to you to show that the same stuff that gets the money in big towns can be adapted to the small ones. And that if an exhibitor will only watch your department he can pick out the stuff that's good and then use it when he gets the picture. I filed this stuff away a long time ago and waited until the picture came to me in regular service, used the "ads" and cleaned up.

Steve was several months behind McCormick with the feature, but he didn't let that worry him. The McCormick stuff appeared in the issue dated May 4, of this year. Steve simply salted it down until the film came within his reach and virtually had McCormick as a press agent. That's pretty costly press work if it is done as a special job, but the service costs Steve three dollars a year, plus a little care in keeping track of the pages.

A Three Tens and Three Elevens, After McCormick, Used by Steve Farrar for "Cleopatra."

And Steve got pretty good work out of his printer, too. The first cut shows a four sevens, using the McCormick copy. He took three eighteens for the text of the long display used by McCormick, and took tens and elevens, in three, for the tonights. And it is worth nothing that the methods of the big town theatre worked just as well in a smaller place. Steve took three tens where McCormick could afford to take half pages, but he worked on the same lines with the same copy and got the same results. He packed his house. McCormick could do no more. Steve apparently had but the two cuts shown, but he worked them well. He also used the small spaces, telling how much it cost long ago to see "Cleopatra" as compared with the present. He used these in three-inch panels.

From Faribault.

The Grand, Faribault, Minn., sends in a file of papers to show their regular activities. And they are decidedly active, though they are the only motion picture advertisers. They have the right idea. Just because they are in possession of the town they do not suppose they can get all of the business with a two inch announcement. Their average advertisement is a two tens, of which half is given to the current and half to the coming attraction. One shown is for Thursday and the other for Saturday. Where a film stays two days they use a double five to seven inch space for the "today and tomorow." The sample shown is not the best of series, but forms a good study in composition. The idea is all right, and it attracts attention, but the lines are brought too close together in the title, and this makes it difficult to read. This is a 72-point letter set solid, and the only spacing is that left on the metal for the descenders, which is not used in the case of capitals. Another pica between the lines would have made the title much more legible and inviting to the eye. It would be easy to gain two picas, without spoiling the white space in the rest of the display, by setting the top line smaller and cutting down the bank of ten point to an eight point Roman, instead of full lace. The trouble is that the printer doesn't stop to think and the manager probably saw it when cuts for "The Whip," and the text is as good as the cut. If all stuff were as well laid, there would be less need for this department. The paper—there is but one—is generous in the matter of reading space. Often a scene cut will be run, and there is not an issue that does not carry from half a column to a column and a half of special text for the house; an unusual showing in a four page sheet. But some of the cuts supplied for this use are almost impossible. This for Mary Pickford is atrocious. It is plainly to

Mary Pickford and Conway Tearle
In a Scene From "Stella Maris"

In "Stella Maris," the Artcraft picture now at the Grand theatre, Mary Pickford plays a part wonderfully adapted to her. In fact, the illustrations in the novel by Wm. J. Locke, show Stella Maris as a replica of Little Mary, golden curls and all.

The work of Mary Pickford as Stella Maris is overshadowed by that of the character of Unity Blake, a homely girl, uncouth and misshapen, who creates big moments in the photoplay, and whose emotional work is a revelation. The superior work of Unity Blake is apparent in scenes where Unity and Stella Maris appear together on the screen.

Miss Pickford frankly admits that Unity Blake more than shares the honors with Stella Maris, and that she, herself loves the part of Unity Blake. This may seem a strange confession for a star to make, but the fact is that Mary plays both parts herself. The dual role is made possible by clever photography, and Miss Pickford is seen talking to herself, and walking off the scene with herself.

A poor scene cut supplied for a big attraction.

be seen that Miss Pickford has a mouth, and her eyes may dimly be discerned, but her nose must be taken on trust. Tearle gets a nose because he is in profile, but you have to look twice to see whether it is his mouth or a scratch on the cut. Of course, poor press work adds to the effect, but scene cuts should be made proof against poor press work, for it is not to be expected that country towns can turn out marvels of printing. The cuts should be carefully etched. Printers are finding that they can make more money in the cities with so many gone in the draft, and the country town publisher is fortunate in being able to bring out a paper at all.

Tells What Will Sell.

H. B. Beckwell, of the Palace, Los Angeles, seems to look on pictures as something to be advertised. In a recent 24-sheet, for example, he gives the same space to a one-reel Christie comedy that he does to a five-reel Fairbanks. He has been running the Christie comedies for more than a year. He knows that they will draw money to the house, so he tells that he has them and gets what he pays for. It pays to advertise all that you have, if the stuff you have is worth while. If you run junk, there is some reason for not bragging about it, but if you have worth-while stories and news reels, tell all about them instead of advertising the five-reel "and others," as most exhibitors do. Now and then there is some one attraction that should get all the space, but it is very seldom that it does not pay to tell the full program.

plays are column width, that for the Masonic being 3¼ inches and the other 2¼. They class, however, as a five-inch space, a clear gain of half an inch across. In point of display, we think that these advertisements have been painstakingly set by a compositor who is unfamiliar with show work. Most of all, however, he has been handicapped by the layout of the space. The better plan would have been to take four nines instead of seven fives. This would have been only an additional inch, and would have permitted a better proportioning of the layout. A three-inch space so wide is too thin. There is no depth. You must talk clear across the page or break into panels, as has been done in the lower display. In the top space, for example, the line is not worth the eighteen point in which it is set, but it looks a bit short even in that. On the other hand, three announcements are run in the second line. The fact that there is a Paramount feature and a Sennott comedy run together and is still further complicated by the price tag. They would have shown better as a two fours with the 24 point.

Paramount Feature — Arbuckle-Sennett Comedy
See them both for 10c

The latter line could then have gone in a 10 or 18 point, raising the display of the program line while still working with it. It cannot be done as it lies. Throwing the signature off to one side is not a good scheme, but it must be followed here to get the display. It is at least better than that for the Athens Show Shop, which make a complete break between two of the leading features. On the left you read of a war picture and a Billy West, and are told you can see "all three" pictures for a dime. It is confusing until you read the other wing of the space and connect it with the left to get the three titles. With the signature in the middle, it looks like three advertisements at first glance. It would have been worse, perhaps, to have followed the Masonic with the Showshop just below. It is awkward either way. The display is poor, but it would take an expert theatrical compositor to get anything better. The text is not as well written as it might be. There seems to be a tendency toward large sounding phrases rather than real selling talk. That "3 big pictures in all for a dime" is a better seller than the first or third lines of the Masonic panel. These sound well, but they do not sell seats save in a most general way. The seven fives is a good size, if taken for one house only, but a four fives is apt to work better than a three sevens, and often a three sixes will be still better and less costly. It will generally give a better balanced display.

Try This Folder.

The Danforth Theatre, Jersey City, uses a folder that is well worth copying if you want to make a permanent out of a transient visitor. It is a card folder, neatly printed on the face with "Pie before soup." There is no other text on the outside. If you open it, as most persons will, you read:

You will not fully enjoy a dinner if you eat the pie before the soup.

And it's the same way with a picture show.

Coming in after the feature has started and looking at the last part of a good picture before you have seen how the story opens is all wrong.

Don't do it.

We are giving you a little schedule of how we time our shows.

If you cannot get to the theatre in time to see the beginning of the feature at the first show, our little time table will tell you the best time to come.

	Matinee	Evening			Matinee Saturday
News Picture Education or Comedy	.2.30	4.15	7.00	8.45 10.30	1.30 3.15
Comedy or Serial	.2.45	4.30	7.15	9.00	1.45 3.30
Feature Attraction	3.15		7.45	9.15	2.15 4.00

At the matinee the short subjects are repeated after the feature picture has been shown, making a complete show after 3:15 P. M.

At the second evening show the first subject is repeated after the feature, making a complete show after 9 P. M.

The house signature appears in display at the bottom of the second page. It might be well to explain that because of the varying lengths of the feature it is not always possible to run to schedule, but that the feature will invariably start at the times given, and that the smaller reels will be run approximately at the times stated.

Paste Them.

Don't buy brain tonics, start a scrap book.

Keep Going.

You can fill your house tomorrow on today's advertising, but how about the day after? Keep on going.

Booming Johanna.

S. Barret McCormick has done some of his best work for "Johanna Enlists." He has not taken as large spaces as he used for some other productions, but he reasons that the star and play should sell themselves if advertised, and he gets along nicely with the smaller allowance. The first cut shown is only six and one-half inches deep across three columns, yet it will sell as well as four times that space, for there is a large attractor cut, and the text is briskly worded. Through all the copy the star is referred to as "Colonel" Pickford, in reference to her honorary commission as godmother of the regiment which posed for the military scenes in the picture. This is a better selling point than the story itself, and is taken up and played through all of the advertising. The other spaces are twelves and thirteens, the centre space being set into white spaces. On the left hand is shown the full cut of which a part is used for the smaller display. The centre space is devoted almost wholly to the adoption of the regiment. None of the spaces alludes to the use of the story by the Saturday Evening Post. Possibly Mr. McCormick thinks that it is hurtful, but we personally think that to recall the story to the many readers of the Post would help rather than hurt business. Many who were charmed by the story will wish to see it realized on the screen. It is, at any rate, a guarantee that it is a story and not like some studio made stuff.

Dayton Doings.

Here are three displays from the Dayton Theatre, Dayton. The first, for Joan of Plattsburg, has a rather non-committal frame. It means nothing in particular, but if you will look just above the lower edge you'll find a nice suggestion for summer advertising. The "coolest spot" can be made into a summer trade-mark. The space is a double five and a half, but it overlays all of the other advertising in the same issue, as the Dayton generally does. The two twelves for A Pair of Sixes uses a supplied cut instead of an original drawing, but it shows the cool spot, the arrow pointing to the name of the house. The three tens for the Naulahka overplays the Nautch girl. The suggestion of an Indian landscape in the black mass is much better for color. The Kipling story (of which he was only part author, by the way) was published long ago and has been forgotten and too strong a suggestion of the dancing will suggest a show along the lines of a burlesque "turkey."

A Birthday.

Celebrating its fourth anniversary, Harold B. Franklin raised the prices at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and he did not apologize for this, either, but explained:

> The management has fixed the above prices not that they reflect the full value of the entertainment given, but that they represent the least price for which it is possible to continue the high quality demanded by Hippodrome patrons.

That's the way to go about it. Don't apologize for a raise. Tell that the price

Louisville Advertising.

Here is the Sunday advertising for the Louisville papers. In the original form the Alamo rises above the Majestic, but has been taken over to the other side to make a better layout. The largest spaces are for the Strand and Keith's, each 4½ inches across two columns. From there it drops to three-quarter inches for the three houses in the right-hand lower corner. The Strand took a three sevens for the same subject in a Saturday issue, but the Sunday spaces are sized the same for all the sheets. The Keith house dominates the displays through the use of 36 point rule for a border, with the name inset, but we do not like the idea. The McCauley gets about the same display with only three inches and an 18 point semi-border. We do not like the Strand space. It does not mean much, not half as much as their three sevens, in which the book suggestion is better conveyed through the illustrative matter. The Sunday showing, with its hard-to-read hand lettering, does not do much talking, and the selling talk is not as good. And the design does not work as well. It is far too late in the day for a man with a pair of guns in his hand to get business.

Has Gone the Route.

Sam B. Blatt, of the Owl, Philadelphia, had a fifth anniversary the other day and took two pages of his house program to tell the people what he thought of them. He recapitulates his experiences since the house opened, tells of the excitement that the first two-reelers caused, and comes right down to date with a brief but interesting history of the advance. It makes good reading and it has a real value in making people realize how great an improvement has been made in the pictures in the past few years. Most patrons have forgotten the days when a two reeler had to be put out in two parts on different days because the exchanges were not organized to handle more than one reel a day from any releasing organization on the programs. He wrote better than he knew. Tell your own patrons some time.

The Photoplaywright

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Notice!

Questions relating to the writing of photoplays and photoplay synopses will be replied to by mail where a return envelope, properly stamped, accompanies the inquiry. No attention will be paid to questions relating to the market, nor can manuscripts or parts of manuscripts be criticized.

Looking Ahead.

ALTHOUGH it may be some years before the ideal condition is created, it is only a question of time when a photoplay will be a production and not something that a director hired by the week has done in a pre-determined number of weeks. Already we have a few such plays, and there will he more when there are a greater number of directors who are play producers instead of mere instructors in mechanical movement. These plays will be state-righted at first, but gradually it is to be presumed that tbe old line program companies with their set release dates will have to give way to new concerns releasing with fair regularity, perhaps, hut releasing only such plays as are really worth while.

This may sound like a dream of Utopia, but it is bound to come in the long run. The director whose value ls judged by the speed with which he can complete a production or the "jazz" he can put into the action cannot last forever, though the probahilities are that he will never become extinct. He must give place to the man who ls an artist at heart; to whom play production is something akin to a religion. This does not mean that he must he a time waster, nor yet be contemptuous of expense, for time and money will always be factors to figure on, but he must be a man who does not make something merely for the sake of holding his job, nor will he seek to impose his will upon the author. He will rather seek to work with the author in a realization of the latter's ideas. He will try to give to each production the flavor of tbe author rather than the impress of his own thought. Such a man will not attempt to make the play written by a man or woman he has never seen. He will want to get the ideas of the author, and, if possible, have the writer at hand wbile the story is being made for consultation as to changes. This does not mean that he will follow the script and nothing more, for he will not he that sort of a director. Rather, he will seek to amplify the author's thought through the creation of business and situations that shall carry forward the author's ideas and yet add effectiveness. The photoplay is not like the stage play where the author's lines and general business may be followed. Photoplay at its best will be a combination of author and director, in which the two shall share the credit. The author will give the idea. The producer will realize it in action. The result will be joint work ratber than the mechanical production of the author's work from the minutely written script of stage directions. Then, and not until then, we shall have plays that will really be worth while; that will be good for runs and re-bookings, not for a career of months, but for years; just as the best plays can he presented season after season to practically the same clientele; but, first of all, they must be real plays and not merely what the director thinks the author should have written nor yet what the author thinks the director should do. The story, written and printed, is fixed and unchangeable. The photoplay is more elastic. A pretty background may suggest a bit of business the author may never have thought of. The lnvention of good business is the task of the producer. He cannot be expected to give deep thought to the improvement of the script and then turn all credit to the author. The public must be educated to realize that author and producer alike are sharers in the credit, and then producers will give their hearts and souls to their work. But neither the author or producer can be coaxed to this point until the professional cutter can be coaxed to keep his hands off the film and the title writer ls persuaded that he is not lnvariably the savior of the play. Today the cutting man and title writer have entirely too much to say and the director and author entirely too little.

Be Natural.

Play for natural action in your synopses. Do not think that by forcing your characters lnto unnatural situations you are making a good story; you are simply creating an unconvincing plot that will lack appeal and interest. Samuel Merwin's Henry Caverly stories, which have been running in the Cosmopolitan offer a unique character, and yet Henry ls so human that he makes his adventures seem real. The character was retained for two sets of stories, and a novel will carry him still further in his career merely because Mr. Merwin has given us a chief character such as any of us might have been at Henry's age. Study real people rather than the impossible types. It takes a Dickens to make the unusual interesting, but you will have better luck with every-day people, though the highest test of authorship ls the man who, like Mr. Merwin, can make his real people seem unusual while retaining their reality.

Try Press Work.

If you live ln a small town and want to keep ln touch with plays, why not try to get a job with the local house as press man? The pay may be small, but it will not take all of your time, and you will have access to the house and to the vast amount of material sent ln by the companies. If you have a regular source of income you can afford to do this work without pay in coin for the sake of the information you acquire and the experience you get. If you can write, you can learn to write advertising, and in time you can widen your field and become a local advertising writer to perhaps half a dozen concerns, none of which may be able to afford an individual press man. In the aggregate the pay should be good, and you'll be in business for yourself; a business that never gets dull. Try it out, if you can, and you may hit into something that in the end will pay better than photoplay.

Keep Posted.

Keep posted on the conditions of your business. Today we got a request for the address of the Artcraft studios; presumably that scripts might be sent there. The inquirer should have known that Artcraft is not a making but a releasing organization, handling the higher-priced product of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., and some other allied companies. He should have known that it does not make film itself, but deals principally in the Pickford, Hart and Fairbanks releases. He should also have known that these players head their own companies, that they work in Hollywood and that they have their own staff writers. Knowing these facts, he would have lost interest in the Artcraft. The news pages of this paper are to be read just as regularly and just as earnestly as this department by all who hope to sell, and all information should be applied to the selling end. In this way, and only in this way, may the author keep posted as to his market. No one can help you to market information. You must learn for yourself just how conditions are, and you must keep this information up to date by reading all the news and the advertisements each week.

Action Plus.

The demand for psychology in plots is not to he understood as replacing action with thought. There must be psychology and action as well, the action getting over the thoughts. But, on the other hand, do not understand action as mere running around. Action in photoplay is the movement of the plot more than the movement of the players, though, of course, the players must move to advance the action.

Will Increase.

Don't mind if you can't sell your scripts right now. Manhattan Island once sold for $24, and now look what New York real estate is worth. If you have a really good idea hold on to it. There will come a demand some day, and it is not probable that prices will decrease meanwhile. Of course it's nice to get checks right now, but if you can't have them now, don't think you're never going to get any. You will, if you keep on plugging.

Study Stories.

Do not confine your study of stories to the screen. Study fiction, too. When you read a story you think particularly good, sit down and reason out why it seemed good to you. The general rules of charm are the same for fiction as for photoplay. They appeal to the same emotions, but perhaps in different ways. Study this, too, in your analysis. Some stories are pleasing because of the manner in which they are told. Style cannot be reproduced upon the screen. These must be set aside, hut if a story, through its plot, stirs you to anger, to patriotism or any other emotion, find out how the appeal was made, and you'll be able to use the same principle in your own plotting. Hundreds of stories depend upon their success upon the fact that you want Henry and not George to get the girl. The stories are all different, but the principle is the same. Find out the principle and you can vary the appeal. It is just as essential that you should know these rules as that you should know how to spell. Study the rules.

Fillers.

It's a long time since anyone wrote about fillers. Yet here is a chance to make postage money if you have a nimble wit. Watch magazines like System, Popular Mechanics, and similar issues, and try to hit them with stuff. If you can get the idea you'll reap a lot of small checks that will keep the more important pot boiling.

Keep Simple.

Don't wear out your brain trying to think of "unusual" stories. These are apt to be too unusual. Give your time to making the commonplace really interesting. That's what counts with an editor. The best sort of story is the story you might have lived yourself if only you can give it the charm that makes other people think that they, too, might have lived it.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

From Toronto.

Marion Long, whose letter criticising Toronto projection raised quite a storm a year or so ago, has thrown away her hammer and purchased a horn. Here is what she has to say now:

There has been a decided improvement in the quality of projection in several Toronto theatres. Have been reading the back numbers of the World which I missed in my absence, and one letter in your department read so very much like press agent dope that I just had to investigate. But I was delighted to find the author of the letter really had not done full justice to the Strand theatre. The improvement is really wonderful. An absolutely steady picture, no distortion, no flicker, no ghosts, beautiful definition. In short, a brilliant, sparkling picture, but not dazzling to the eye; also, of equal importance, was the fact that it was projected at proper speed, with appropriate music and good floor management. Could one ask for more? I hunted (correct word, and it was some hunt) up the manager and found Mr. Robson to be a courteous, well-versed gentleman, though all my wiles and smiles failed to gain me entrance to that projection room while the show was on. Next morning, however, before the box office opened, I was on the job. Attached is flash I took of the projection room. The young man is Ernest Smithers, one of the projectionists, who showed me several useful devices, two of which I will name, as follows: Inside the lamphouse is a 25-watt tungsten lamp controlled by a switch, so that opening the lamphouse door lights, and closing the door extinguishes it. The other device which particularly appealed to me was a change-over signal, so arranged that at the proper time warning is given the projectionist that the time for changing projectors was near.

These and other improvements have been figured out by Mr. Dentelbeck, chief projectionist, who was away on his vacation. I was sorry indeed to have missed him. Mr. Smithers tells me: "Charlie is some fisherman, especially after trout."

The improvement in the Strand has brought it into the premier class. People now speak of the Strand and Regent as the standard of projection for this city, though the York, Crown and the Madison are right near the top. The Globe keeps up its good screen results and shows decided improvement in management. There is certainly some one always on the job there. The Allen Theatre, our newest downtown house, is first class in every respect. It has latest equipment, new film, first-class projectionists and musicians.

By the way, speaking of surprises, I was taking a few hundred feet of film at the military hospital at Guelph and found time to explore the "Temples of Silent Drama" of that city. There are three, viz.: Griffen's, the Apollo and the Regent. In the first named there was good film, but awful projection. In the second the film was not so good but the projection better, but the place was decidedly "smelly." The Regent was the surprise. It is a beautiful little house, seating about 1,000—one balcony. Ventilation excellent, comfortable seats, cozy retiring rooms for women, a polite door man with a war service medal, and lady ushers. The Regent would compare favorably with any theatre in Toronto. But what I paid my money to see was the picture on the screen. It was perfect. I have already exhausted my vocabulary in describing the Strand projection, so just refer back and read what I said about Strand projection and apply it all to the Regent in Guelph. In the Regent box office I noticed an attractive brass sign announcing the fact that the Regent employs a union projectionist, also that he is a member of Local Union 173 (Toronto Union). Hence we can claim the Regent projection for Toronto.

Brother Richardson, your visit to this city has certainly left its mark. A person watching a game of checkers often sees obvious openings for moves which the player does not see, and I firmly believe your visit woke the men up and brought forth the improvement in this city. Your visit and speech is still being talked of, and I have heard several express the wish that you may come again soon, and stay longer next time. We have fought a good fight, but in the end it was the legions of the United States that have assured the victory. My brother is finally home, but, ah, what a change. Double amputation, and the lines in his poor face show what he has suffered. The Hun butchers don't bother giving anaesthetics in any case. And now, Freddy, another brother, has enlisted in the flying corps and soon will be gone. It is hard, but mother says she wishes she had thirty sons to give instead of only three!

I am more than glad to hear the good report on Toronto; also of the Regent in Guelph. I am also well pleased that my visit to Toronto bore good fruit. I fully intend to visit that fair city again, probably next summer. I was charmed with what I saw and want to see more at a more favorable time of the year. Dentlebeck is a real projectionist, as differentiated from a machine operator. Toronto has many other good men, only they have, apparently, such an ingrowing fear of writer's cramp.

A Mighty Poor Excuse.

In a recently received letter a projectionist tells of an operator who remarked to him: "I could do better work, but they are not paying me enough to justify it."

In writing the foregoing I had not the heart to call this brand of castiron dome a projectionist. It is almost an insult to machine operators to call him one of them. Imagine a man having such perverted ideas! How in heaven's name does he expect to get "paid enough" if he produces a screen result not worth more than he is getting? Men with such mistaken ideas should be made chief engineer of a number two dirt shovel; a position where brawn, not brains, is the chief and only requisite.

Difference in Generators.

John O'Sullivan, St. Louis, Missouri, suggests that we ought to increase the projection department to three times its present size and asks:

> Will you be good enough to explain to me the exact difference between the shunt, series and compound wound generator? Please make the explanation as simple as possible, as I am a novice, and have not very much education.

Righto, friend O'Sullivan. But I always try to make things as simple as may be, fully realizing that I am not, as a general thing, talking to men to whom $C O^2$ and "Inversely with the square of the distance" is an open book.

The windings of the three types of generator named are shown exceedingly well in the accompanying illustration, taken from "Conversations in Electricity," by Joseph Branch. The first is series wound. Its field magnet coil carries the entire volume of current generated by the machine. Such a generator will not maintain constant voltage, and is only used where the current (amperage) is to remain practically unchanged. Change in voltage has no effect on operation of a series wound machine, but change in amperage has instant effect. The series machine is used mostly in series arc lighting. The system is often called a "constant current" system. The shunt wound machine is illustrated at "2." It is what is known as a "constant potential" type generator and has the peculiarity that under heavy overload it will lose its voltage entirely. The windings of its field coils are connected with the main circuit at any convenient point, usually close to the brushes. The voltage produced will depend, within limits, on the amount of current passing through the field coils, which same is regulated by what is known as a "field rheostat" (indicated by "R" in illustrations), which is connected in series with the coils. This rheostat is adjustable. The compound wound generator, sketch "3," has the shunt winding, as shown in illustration 2; also a series winding carrying the entire amperage generated, but with less turns than the regular series wound machine shown at the left. It has the advantage of giving a much closer voltage regulation than that supplied by the shunt wound machine. The regular shunt coils serve to build up the voltage when running at no load, while the field coils strengthen the field as the load comes on. There are many variations of compound winding, such as over-compounding and under-compounding, each one suitable for a specific class of service. The compound winding does not increase the field strength in direct proportion to the increase of load. Without increase of field strength as the load comes on there would be a drop in voltage.

This, it seems to me, answers your query, neighbor, and should make the matter at least fairly clear. Incidentally, is the St. Louis local sleeping, or merely taking a vacation? We never hear from them.

Rheostat Problem.

A Los Angeles, California, projectionist, who requests suppression of name, submits the following:

> Am balled up over following simple rheostat problem, and not even the handbook proves sufficient to stralghten it out for me. Therefore I ask you to explain how to find total resistance of three 25-ampere, 110-volt rheostats hooked up in multiple.

The thing is simple. Suppose we have one rheostat of given capacity. It will have wires or grids of given length and area of cross section. The law is that, length remaining the same, resistance reduces as the area of cross section is increased. Now if we add a second rheostat of equal capacity, connected in multiple, what have we, in effect, done? Think a moment. We have exactly doubled the area of cross section of the wire or grid, without altering its length, have we not? Moreover we have done it in a way which does not in the least alter the heat radiating properties of the conductor. What then is the effect as to resistance? Think a moment! It is exactly half what it was before, is it not? That is the principle involved. Now if we add a third rheostat of equal capacity, we have again reduced the resistance, viewing the combination as one rheostat, so that the area of cross-section is three times what it was, hence the resistance is but one-third that of a single rheostat.

From pages 93-94 Elementary Electricity and Magnetism I quote the following, verbatim, if offering perhaps as lucid an explanation of this matter as anything I have to date read:

"CIRCUITS IN PARALLEL.—If two wires are connected in parallel (that is, so that a current divides between them, the current flowing in each is equal to the pressure between their common terminals divided by their individual resistances. For instance, if the two wires have resistances of 4 and 6 ohms, respectively, and the pressure between their terminals is 12 volts, the current flowing through the first wire is $\frac{12}{4} = 3$ amperes, and that through the second is $\frac{12}{6} = 2$ amperes. We have already seen (in matter not quoted. Ed.) that the current which flows through any resistance on account of a fixed pressure is inversely proportional to the resistance. This is shown by Ohms law. Accordingly, the current flowing through the two wires of this example should be in the proportions of ¼ and 1/6. This is true since 3 is ¼ of 12 and 2 is 1/6 of 12. The total current flowing through the circuit containing the two wires in parallel is evidently 2 plus 3, or 5 amperes. Since the pressure causing these 5 amperes to flow through the wires is 12 volts, the resistance of the circuit between A and B, or the joint resistance of the two wires in parallel, must be $\frac{12}{5}$, or 2.4 ohms. This may be conveniently calculated directly from the conductivities, which, it will be remembered, are reciprocal or inverse to the resistances.

The joint capacity of two or more pipes which deliver water between two tanks is equal to the capacities of all the separate pipes added together. Thus, suppose, in figure B, X, Y and Z are three pipes connecting the two tanks. Evidently more water will flow through two pipes in a given time than through one alone, and still more will flow through three pipes; hence as pipes are added between the tanks the resistance to the flow of water is decreased; that is to say, the conductivity is increased. The capacities of the pipes for carrying water, that is their conductivities, must therefore be added together to get the total conductivity for the flow of water from the higher tank to the lower one. We also say what means exactly the same thing, though put into different words, when we say that the reciprocals of the individual pipe resistances must be added together to give the joint capacity of all pipes. As this sum gives the combined conductivity of all the pipes, its reciprocal will be the combined resistance. (Reciprocal means unity, meaning one divided by the quantity, thus, the reciprocal of 6 is 1 divided by 6, which is 1/6. Conversely the reciprocal of 1/6 is 1 divided by 1/6, which is 6. Ed.).

"In the same way the joint conducting power of electric circuits which are connected in parallel, or divided circuits as they are ofen called, is equal to the conducting powers of the parts added together. The joint conducting power or conductivity in the example under consideration is therefore ¼ plus 1/6, or 5/12. The resistance of the divided circuits is the inverse of this, which is equal to 12/5, or 2.4, as previously calculated. This shows that simply adding together the resistances of the individual parts of a circuit will not always give the total resistance of the circuit. In fact, such an addition gives the total resistance only when all the individual resistances belong to parts of a circuit which are connected in series.

"A little consideration of what precedes will show that when two wires of equal resistance are connected in parallel (multiple, we usually call it. Ed.) their joint resistance is just half as great as the resistance of either wire. If three wires of equal resistance are connected in parallel, their joint resistance is just one-third as great as the resistance of one of the conductors, and so on. If wires of equal resistance (In this just substitute the word "rheostats" for "wires." Ed.) were connected in series instead of in parallel, the resistance would be two, three, and so on, times greater than that of one wire."

The foregoing quotation may and should be of aid to you and others in understanding this somewhat puzzling question. I dealt with it as fully in the handbook as was possible in the space I was able to allot to that subject. You will probably have matters made more clear for you if you remember that in a sense "conductivity" or "capacity" and resistance are very largely interchangeable terms.

Died a Borning.

Joseph E. Bliven, New London, Conn., says:

> Can you supply information as to device illustrated and described on page 1285, Feb. 27, 1915, issue? Wish to personally thank you for your assistance in explaining to draft officials in Washington that projectionists are engaged in essential work. Tried to get out to Point o' Woods to see you last summer, but trolleys don't run close enough, and I've no bubble. Got as far as Niatic one Sunday, but could get no further. Will make it next summer if I have to walk.

No need to walk. Just tell me when you want to come, and I'll bring Nancy Hanks over and fetch you. The device you name never reached the manufacturing stage. It died a borning. It was a device for projecting a band of light around the picture, which same could be colored or decorated with various designs, the band being projected by means of stero attached to projector and taking light from the same arc the motion picture was projected with. There were several somewhat similar devices projected by inventors at about that time, but they failed to reach the commercial stage. Personally, I was not at all enthusiastic about such devices, because I take the position that anything of that kind merely serves to detract from the picture itself.

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

"Le Roi est Mort, Vive Le Roi," Is a Thought for The Leader

THE King is dead! Long live the King! Kaiser War is finished at last and the Prince of Peace, though long delayed, has come to his own. All the uncertainty and anxiety consequent upon the past unsettled conditions are out of place now and should cease; doubts and fears should no longer harass the mind; and the brightness of the future should be an incentive to greater endeavor everywhere—particularly in the realm of picture music.

The picture industry is here to stay. There can be no doubt about that. Its stability is a guarantee that the field for musicians will not only remain open but will increase in breadth and opportunity. Orchestras will be enlarged; more attention will be paid to the musical portion of picture programs; and the chance for fame and fortune will present itself to those who love their art—whose clearness of vision and industriousness prove paramount.

There is no greater educational medium along this line than the photoplay theatres that feature music. For little money, every one can hear music of some kind. It lies with the musical director whether that music shall be good, bad or indifferent. Poor music will not only kill the opportunity of the leader for advancement but will retard the upward growth of an art that has suffered much and sorely needs cultivation. Too many leaders of mediocre ability have undertaken the work of fitting music to pictures. When their positions have seemed secure, they have lost all ambition to provide something of merit and simply carried out a musical routine—in other words, got into a musical treadmill grind. Over the graves of such the last rites should be solemnly spoken "for the good of the service."

Every leader has a grave responsibility and a momentous mission to perform, the shirking of which will stamp his as a traitor to his fellows and unworthy of the trust which has been imposed upon him.

His technical duties consist of fitting and playing the picture music. For these duties he receives a salary commensurate with the size of his library and the musical ability he displays. The salary provides his livelihood, and the fault rests with himself if his wages are not adequate for his needs.

His moral duty, as a man and a lover of music, is to educate the people to an appreciation of the best classics of this and by-gone days. Beethoven, Bach, Berlioz, Verdi, Liszt, Handel, Tschaikowsky, Dvorak and the host of musical masters should become readily comprehensible to the audiences through the efforts of the picture player. The prevailing admiration for rag time and "shoo-fly" music should give place to a deep respect for music of a better class. The hearts of the populace should be touched by the grandeur of songs that have stood the test of time, and the symphonic works should become as familiar as folk songs.

Nothing musical is too big for the picture theatre. Symphonies are being played in the larger houses where large orchestras handle the music, and simplified arrangements have been made to meet the requirements of smaller combinations of musicians. The publishers will gladly co-operate with the leaders throughout the country, in order that music shall be raised to a higher standard.

Moreover, the war being over, the European countries will enter into active competition in the presentation of pictures. We have decidedly the big advantage and should retain it at all hazards. There is possible an American School of Music if the efforts of our composers be firmly fostered. But in order to bring this about, the classics must be thoroughly understood and appreciated by the masses. The fundamental principles of good music must form the basis of American art, and from the people of this country must arise a prophet who will lead America into a musical fold all her own.

"The old order changeth." Let it change! Become the instrument that forces the change, but be certain that the change shall be for the better. Regard not your responsibilities lightly lest days of regret become your reward. Put into your work every ounce of energy and every mental effort of which you are capable. Have high ideals and live up to them. Thus, through industry and conscientious devotion to your profession, the joy of service will be yours in the greater musical uplift movement which is sure to be the ultimate result.

"A Life on the Ocean Wave," by Sargent.

The author of this stirring sea song, Epes Sargent, was born in Gloucester, Mass., in September, 1812. Many years of his life were spent in Boston, where he acquired eminence as a journalist and an enviable reputation throughout the country as the writer of much distinctive prose and poetry, and the editor of several fine collections.

Henry Russell, the English composer and baritone singer, came to New York in 1833, and a friendship was established between Mr. Russell and Mr. Sargent that was conducive to a mutual satisfaction. The former gentleman appreciated the literary ability of his friend and requested him to write some verses which could be set to music by himself.

A few days later Mr. Sargent was taking a constitutional along the Battery in New York. As he looked out over the ships and small craft, he evolved the words of "A Life on the Ocean Wave." To quote Mr. Sargent directly: "Having completed my walk and the song together, I went to the office of the 'Mirror,' wrote out the words and showed them to my good friend, George Morris. After reading the piece, he said: My dear boy, this is not a song. It will never do for music, but is a very nice little lyric; so let me take it and publish it in the 'Mirror.'" Mr. Sargent and dismissed the subject from his mind.

Some time later, he chanced to meet Mr. Russell, who reminded him of the promise. Mr. Sargent confessed that he had tried to write a song and had failed. When his friend appeared a bit skeptical, he explained that Mr. Morris had passed adverse judgment. Mr. Russell was not so easily convinced and replied: "Is Morris infallible? Hand me the piece, young man, and let us see what we can make out of your lines."

The two gentlemen went into Hewitt's music store at the corner of Park Place and Broadway. Mr. Russell seated himself at the piano, read over the verses thoughtfully, hummed a bit to himself and then sat seemingly lost in thought. Suddenly, the inspiration came and a melody floated into his brain. He began to hum it, while his body swayed back and forth to the rhthym of the music. Then striking the keys, he launched out into the air. "I have it," he exclaimed, and the work was finished.

From the first, the little song, so optimistic in tone and a bit unique in its character, was very popular. It was sung everywhere and even the street musicians picked it up and could be heard playing it day by day.

In England it was as popular as in this country. Song publishers were not slow in seeing the commercial value involved. They vied with each other in getting out editions of the song. Mr. Sargent says. "A year or two after its publication, I received from England copies of five or six editions that had been issued there by competing publishers."

Of course this popular favor created a market for the song and made it very valuable commercially, yet Mr. Sargent did not receive one cent from it. This statement is so true of practically all creative work of a similar nature that it seems almost superfluous to comment upon it. We have come to accept as granted the unpleasant fact that the person with the inspiration is seldom the one to reap any monetary gain thereby.

"William Tell" a Sensation at the Strand.

The Strand featured "Little Women," presented by Wm. A. Brady, during the week of November 10, and the music that accompanied it was a treat. Those who have read Louisa Alcott's popular novel know the story and will readily understand the difficulties to be encountered in fitting music to the homelike atmosphere.

An elderly lady, sitting close to the writer, exclaimed in sotto-voce: "If the orchestra doesn't stop playing such heavenly music, I'm going to cry,"—and later she wept. No stronger encomium is necessary.

Miss Hoffman sang "Pearl of Brazil," by David, as only she can render such coloratura numbers. The tremendous applause forced her to respond to an encore and she sang "The Last Rose of Summer." There is only one fault with Miss Hoffman's singing—her poor diction; and in her case, it is only a minor weakness.

The Review, Scenic and Comedy were well fitted and excellently played. Better synchrony prevailed and closer attention was given to detail.

The real treat of the evening was the rendition of that old favorite overture, "William Tell." Berlioz characterized it as "a symphony in four parts" and had he been privileged to hear it performed with superb lighting effects, his praise would surely be stronger.

Peacefully the music started with the cello solo and we saw a beautiful back drop showing a sparkling river winding among verdant hills. As the second movement was ushered in, the clouds began to gather, and distant thunder was heard, followed by flashes of lightning. Darker grew the scene, louder the thunder, and fiercer the lightning, until the rain began to fall. First only a few drops; then, as pandemonium broke loose, the heavens seemed to open and torrents of water fell—(and applause from the audience). The storm subsided with the music. The rain stopped, the sun peeped out from behind the clouds; amber hues appeared and blue patches of sky were visible. Slowly a rainbow flung its prismatic arch across the scene, (another burst of applause). As the music finished, the river was again reflecting the sparkling sunbeams and all was peacefulness and brightness. The ovation which followed bespoke the appreciation of a large and enthusiastic audience.

Music for "The Cannibals of the South Seas."

Sooner or later every exhibitor who desires to please his patrons will book "Cannibals of The South Seas," produced by Martin Johnson, and released by Robertson & Cole.

It is not an ordinary feature in any sense of the word and it will make a lasting impression upon those fortunate enough to see it.

No mawkish love twaddle mars its mission, nor is there any blood and thunder melodrama to offend the sensitive. Exciting adventures there are in plenty—real man-eating savages in their native haunts, clothed in smiles and beads, are not friendly in their attitude toward the white man. The scenery is beautifully wild and, from the educational standpoint, the picture conveys a thorough knowledge of the customs and conventions of the Solomon Isles.

What about the music for this picture? The question is most natural in view of the unusual atmosphere found in the feature. Oriental music would be out of place; Indian dances would detract from the picture; therefore, nothing must be used that will not hold the wild and wierd sense of savagery.

The special musical score prepared by Mr. Beynon for "Cannibals of The South Seas" contains many original compositions hitherto unheard. True to type and intensely atmospheric, they will enhance the picture and enthrall the auditors. Every exhibitor should see that his leader gets the score for there is but little typical Cannibal music to be obtained, and suitable music, unquestionably, means bigger box-office receipts.

A Musician Who Comprehends His Art.

When the screen version of "Salome" was presented at the 44th Street Theatre, New York, the musical score was the work of George M. Rubinstein and this gentleman conducted the orchestra. It became apparent at once that a master craftsman was conducting; a man who had devoted much time, energy and endless research to collecting the material for the musical setting of Oscar Wilde's famous play.

Workers in this field need not be told that the setting for such a picture requires the most careful adjustment, not only from the standpoint of timing and rhythmic flow, but from the atmospheric conditions of the play. The selection of the compositions to be used in a big picture not only needs a wonderful repertoire, but the careful working out of the score requires the hand of genius. Most of the score is original; the remainder is compiled from some of the most famous musical works of times past and modern.

Mr. Rubinstein is now devoting much of his time to the scoring of feature pictures. He also oversees the musical end of the Fox activities, which means controlling music and musicians in some twenty large theatres.

Mr. Rubinstein is very popular among musicians and has long been actively engaged in musical work. He is a master of the clarinet as well as an orchestra man of long experience. This especially fits him for his new work.

Not the least item in Mr. Rubinstein's prominence in the field of musical work, is the fact that every film he has scored has been a success. The list includes some of the most famous productions of the present time. Among them are "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables," "Revelation," "The Spy," "The Conqueror," "Jack and the Beanstalk," and the "Wives of Men." Nothing succeeds like success, and earnest work, coupled to a gift for scoring pictures, have made Mr. Rubenstein successful.

It was at the Rialto-Rivoli Theatres that Mr. Rubinstein, as an assistant conductor, became known as a picture expert. Ever since the opening of these two houses, Mr. Rubinstein had been connected with the musical forces, both as a conductor and an arranger. The music critic of the Dramatic Mirror had this to say about his work last season: "A shining example of how to accompany a picture was given at the Rivoli last week, when the Drew Comedy was shown. I was quite astonished at the care for detail in the orchestra. Mr. Rubinstein was conducting when I saw this picture. Here was an excellent chance to see varying tempo carried out. It worked. The music followed the action instead of being held down to quarters and halves, measures and bars. While this accompaniment was for a comedy, yet the principle is just the same for a more serious picture." Mr. Beynon of the Moving Picture World paid a high compliment to Mr. Rubinstein's scoring of "Salome." He said: "William Fox is presenting his biblical drama, "Salome," at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, accompanied by an orchestra of twenty-four musicians directed by George M. Rubinstein. Mr. Rubinstein arranged the score, and we can conscientiously say that it ranks with the best in all points, and sets a new standard in some."

Aside from Mr. Rubinstein's fine mental equipment, he possesses a fine library. This music has been accumulating for many years and covers the whole range of musical expression. It is ideally catalogued for the motion picture worker. Everything is ready for the scoring of a most complex picture at a moment's notice. The library contains also much that is original with Mr. Rubinstein, scored and ready for use. He realizes the importance of the practical application of music to pictures, and his scores bear none of the ear-marks of the amateur. His advent into the wider musical activities, which he has recently taken up, is a distinct addition to that world which has for its purpose the ideal presentation of the motion picture.

Original Musical Contests Encouraged.

Musical originality is being encouraged and developed at all of the training camps. There are "Song Contests," in which the various regiments compete for prizes offered by public-spirited citizens. In some of these "Songfests" wonderfully good original songs have been sung for the first time by their composers. A few of them are parodies like the Camp Devon gem, "Where Do We Go from Ayer, Boys?" and many similar ditties, but others are wholly original, both words and music.

According to Major General Leonard Wood, as a tonic for fatigue and depression, music has no competitor in army life. "It is just as essential," he says, "for soldiers to know how to sing as it is for them to carry rifles and learn how to shoot them."

Our boys are singing. A singing army is invincible.

Gaskill Sends Lyrics from the Front.

Clarence Gaskill, who has written some very popular songs in the last year or so, is just doing his bit with the rest of our boys in the trenches. He is attached to the 311th Machine Gun Battalion, but in the midst of his strange surroundings he finds time to write a song.

From "Somewhere in France" he sent the song to Witmark & Sons, writing: "I think you can see the possiblities for a nice little song, hence I am submitting my attempt at it. The boys seems to like it and sing it a whole lot."

Its title is alluring: "As You Were When I First Met You, That's How I Want You Today." There is a simple, catchy little melody and a charming story told. It is not a war song, but just a singable ballad that all the world will want to sing. M. Witmark & Sons are enthusiastic over it and predict that it will develop into a tremendous success.

Rialto Theatre Loses Belgian Cellist.

Gaston Dubois, the Belgian Cellist, whose remarkable virtuosity has evoked praise from many of the prominent music critics, has severed his connection with the Rialto orchestra to accept a position in the first chair of the Philharmonic orchestra. Mr. Dubois has won many friends among the orchestra men and it is with a sense of deep regret that the musical director, Hugo Riesenfeld, releases him.

The Dulcimer Changed to the Tympanon.

All of the few collections of early musical instruments include the dulcimer. In the collection at the Conservatoire in Paris, there is a beautifully decorated instrument of the time of King Louis XIV which is described as a "dulcimer or tympanon; ornamented with roses; carved in wood; the case of which is gilded and set with paintings."

Nevertheless, in that brilliant period of France, the dulcimer had already fallen into disfavor. It had been popular in the boudoir and in the salon, but music as an art, and a science, was rapidly developing, demanding more extended powers than could be provided by the dulcimer. Newer forms of instruments had come into vogue, so that by the early part of the XVII century, the dulcimer, which poets and painters had immortalized, became the companion of wanderers, and was to be heard chiefly in the village taverns.

But for the connoisseurs, it still retained its charms. Pantaleon Hebenstreit, a well known musician of Leipsig, was responsible for its restoration to fashionable favor late in the same century. It was he who first invented the wooden hammer, covered with leather, which which the dulcimer (very shortly thereafter rechristened and called the tympanon) was rehabilitated. It became very popular at the court of Louis XIV.

Hebenstreit created a Court sensation by his playing of the tympanon, and it was not long before manufacturers sought to introduce the hammer stroke into the mechanism of the piano. It was the great French Monach who renamed this instrument. He had a Royal Tympanon made, which, upon the occasion of the marriage of the musician to a beautiful Maid of Honor, was presented to Hebenstreit. His famous descendant, Sacha Votichenko, brought this instrument from its repose in Russia and introduced it to the European world and to America.

Harry Bataille, the distinguished French dramatist and critic, has compared the tympanon to "a little casket in which are enclosed popular melodies, old songs and dances, of antique charms—delicious and soul-stirring"—while Tolstoi, who heard it a few months before his death, likened its tone picturesquely to "the far-away echo of the voices of the bards of old."

Seasonable Song Composed by Caro Roma.

Anticipating the sure approach of peace, M. Witmark & Sons have issued a song which they have had in preparation for some time. It bears the title, "Ring Out, Sweet Bells of Peace!" and is one of the most satisfying and beautiful songs of its type. The lyrics are by Wm. H. Gardner, and the music by Caro Roma, who were jointly responsible for that remarkable Southern song success, "Can't Yo' Heah Me Callin', Caroline?" The new peace song meets every requirement—it is imbued with the spirit of thankfulness, and simple and easy to sing. Also the music is melodious and appropriate to a degree. "Ring Out, Sweet Bells of Peace!" is a song that will live long after the dawn of Peace has passed; and it is particularly good for use at Christmas.

Carli D. Elinor, Musician and Patriot.

As an example of true patriotism, it is interesting to learn that Carli D. Elinor, who is considered the most successful creator of musical scores for moving pictures, is now over seas with the 157th Ambulance Company, 115th Sanitary Train, 40th Division, A. E. F., which recruited at Camp Kearney, California.

Mr. Elinor has to his credit the musical scores of "The Eyes of the World," "Ramona," and the present Griffith success of "Hearts of the World." Several smaller productions bear his autograph as well, but the three mentioned above, all of which are remembered for their musical attainments, deserve special mention.

With the good news of peace, it is earnestly hoped that in a few months we will find him arranging scores for future motion picture productions. In this field he made ten thousand dollars a year, but was willing and anxious to forego it for democracy's sake. A Roumanian by birth, but an American by adoption, he lost no time in getting "Over there" to do his bit.

Influence of Music Upon the Soldiers.

Biased by tradition, many people are inclined to think of music as a luxury to be foregone in wartime. In the first offcial book of life in American Training Centers, the authors point out that music—especially singing—plays a large part in the Government's program for preparing men to fight.

The book is called "Keeping Our Fighters Fit—For War and After." It was written by Edward Frank Allen with the cooperation of Raymond B. Fosdick, Chairman of the War and Navy Commissions on Training Camp Activities. Although authoritative, it sparkles with human-interest anecdotes, and is very readable and entertaining.

In the chapter entitled, "The Fighters Who Sing," the author says: "Patriotism is no hollow, empty thing. It wins battles. And the music, be it instrumental or vocal, that awakens or feeds it, is scarcely less potent than high explosives."

"Singing has long been recognized as an aid to efficiency, but it remained for the Commissioner of Training Camp Activities to develop it in the army and navy with that end in view."

In speaking of the value of music in arousing the fighting spirit, Mr. Allen points out that although "authorities do not lay stress upon it in military textbooks, they talk a good deal about morale and esprit de corps on both of which singing has powerful influence."

"'O Jerry, give us Joan of Arc,' shouted one of the blue-jackets. So they sang 'Joan of Arc' with a strong, patriotic thrill in the line, 'Come, lead your France to victory,' and when they reached 'We'll hang Kaiser Bill to a sour apple tree,' and the refrain of 'Glory, Glory, Hallelujah,' the very rafters vibrated in sympathy."

The boys were having lots of fun, of course, but the spirit that the music was bringing out of their souls is the force that sent them into the fray united in purpose and dauntless in will.

What the men sing is a matter of less importance to the Commission than the fact that they sing.

The bulk of the songs is nothing classical; sometimes they are inclined toward the rough-house; and yet one day, in a Southern camp a group of thousands of men—almost a whole division—were heard singing:

"Mine eyes have seen the glory
Of the coming of the Lord;
He is trampling out the vintage
Where the grapes of wrath are stored."

No misgivings need be felt as to the wholesomeness of the sentiments of these singing fighters.

Conservatory of Music for Bandmasters.

A summer school of band music for men in war service has been established at the New England Conservatory of Music.

This school, the first of its kind in the United States, is designed for men already in the service who have been recommended for intensive training. Its classes continued until the reopening of the Conservatory on September 19. During the regular sessions of the institution, it is intended to conduct classes for young men aiming to qualify for this branch of the national service.

At the beginning of the past summer, the New England Conservatory offered to the respective commanders of the first naval district and of the Department of the East the facilities of the school for such further training of their band leaders as they might desire. The offer was favorably received, for it is well understood that there are details of instruction in band work which can be presented in a regularly organized music school, and which it is not always possible for band leaders and their men to obtain in their more or less separated units. As the nearest Government school for training of naval bands is at Newport, Rhode Island, and as there is no school under army approval east of New York, it seemed to be especially desirable that opportunities of this kind should be provided in Boston.

The details of this instruction for army musicians are, at this writing, under consideration of the authorities of the Northeastern Department. The training of the navy men was begun in July with about 70 musicians in attendance from the naval stations and the radio and aviation schools at Cambridge.

Instruction in all the usual band instruments is given by members of the New England Conservatory faculty who are available for summer instruction and by several eminent professional musicians from outside the school.

General direction of the teaching is in the hands of Samislao Gallo, of Boston, who is widely recognized as an authority on band scoring. Mr. Gallo received much of his musical education in the New England Conservatory orchestra and in the composition classes conducted by George W. Chadwick, director of the Conservatory, who has taken great interest in the technical aspects of popular and military band music.

The co-operation of America's oldest and best-equipped music school in this form of war work was arranged by General Manager Ralph L. Flanders, in accordance with a plan that grew out of the services rendered last winter by Wallace Goodrich, dean of the faculty, who is a member of the National Committee on Army and Navy Camp Music and chairman of its sub-committee on bands. He is now acting as an advisor on military music for the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities.

EXHIBITORS SHOULD HAVE BIG RESERVE

Should Equal at Least 20 Per Cent. of Total Sum Invested in Theatre, Says Robert Lieber

BANKING and financing are essential and extremely necessary factors in the continued success of any exhibitor, large or small, and a reserve or sinking fund of at least 20 per cent. of the total sum invested in the theatre and its occupied property is the exhibitor's safest insurance against the nominal risks of the business, in the estimation of Robert Lieber, owner and operator of the nationally famous Circle Theatre, Indianapolis.

"If the Circle Theatre closed its doors tomorrow for an enforced shutdown of one year," declared Mr. Lieber, "we could reopen the house at the end of the twelve months with colors flying and our finances in splendid shape for the carrying on of the business, even in the face of severe competition or adverse circumstances of any character. We are adequately protected against even that remote possibility—simply as a matter of sound business judgment—so it is reasonable to presume that we could weather any probable storm of lesser intensity."

Mr. Lieber is president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., and head of the H. Lieber Company, owners of the First National's Indiana state franchise. In the Circle Theatre he has developed what is recognized by the industry and the exhibiting branch particularly as one of the model houses of the country. While his manager, S. Barret McCormick, has devoted himself to the artistic phases of motion picture presentation, Mr. Lieber has devoted himself to the practical commercial side of exhibiting, with the result that the Circle Theatre presents a novel and unique analogy as a profitable business proposition.

Must Prepare for Reverses.

"It is the easiest thing in the world for an exhibitor to pay dividends to his stockholders when the theatre is showing a profit," said Mr. Lieber, "and it is the hardest thing in the world for an exhibitor to levy an assessment on stockholders when the theatre is weathering a turbulent period and needs more money than is being taken in at the box-office. Any exhibitor, no matter how strong and impregnable his business may appear to be, is liable to experience reverses.

"The exhibitor has the summer months to consider in arranging his financial program for the year. He knows that there will be weeks without profit and that it would be economy for him to close the house. Perhaps competition makes such a course unwise. To maintain his standards of quality in entertainment he must make no curtailment in rentals. The fixed overhead charges for the theatre remain the same. Perhaps there is a sudden and unexpected loss due to a disease epidemic, similar to the influenza shutdown. There are a score and more of possible happenings which may occur with a serious effect on any theatre's bank account.

Why Banks Distrust Picture Business.

"The exhibitor owes it to himself and to his stockholders, if there are any, to provide ample financial protection against any emergency. Otherwise his investment in the theatre is in constant jeopardy. I believe that one of the reasons why many bankers look with distrust and doubt upon the retail branch of the motion picture business is because many exhibitors have bank balances which do not give proper protection to their investments.

Robert Lieber.

"Exhibiting is a business without fixed, liquid assets. It consists of retailing merchandise with a momentary value and it is founded chiefly on good will. A clothier or a jeweler can go to a bank and borrow money on stock on hand. Their merchandise is negotiable, because it has a fixed market value. But an exhibitor has only his theatre. And its value depends entirely upon the ability of one or more men to manage it successfully.

"The banker has judged the exhibitor by the only means at his command—cash or negotiable securities on hand. He measures the exhibitor's business ability not by the volume of the daily deposits, but by the net surplus on hand at the end of each month. If, in the estimation of the banker, that balance is kept big enough to guarantee the exhibitor ample financial latitude in any emergency, he is impressed with the fact that the exhibitor is a good business man and is conducting his affairs along sound commercial lines. As a consequence the exhibitor is received with open arms when he requires assistance.

Go to Your Banker for Advice.

"When an exhibitor is in doubt about an investment on which he can realize quickly if occasion demands, his banker is the best source of advice. I have heard exhibitors say that they prefer to divide their account between two or three banks instead of confining it to one institution. Of course in some communities there may be reasons why this method is preferable, but in the average city or town I believe that an exhibitor can obtain greater moral co-operation if his account is deposited exclusively in one bank.

"The confidence and good will of a bank is an exhibitor's greatest asset in times of stress. A bank considers personal integrity, efficiency and reliability above all other factors in performing its primary function of making loans. Character is the first requisite to a good financial security."

Ontario Exhibitors' Body Attends a Busy Meeting

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontaro held its best attended meeting of the whole year on Tuesday, November 5, when sixty-five local and out-of-town members gathered for the regular November session. Even more dropped in for a few minutes during the meeting, but did not remain because of the crowded condition of the club quarters. It was the opinion of the meeting that a special hall would have to be hired for the general meeting in December. The appearance of a number of the outside exhibitors at the meeting resulted in the securing of several new memberships, and announcement was made that the membership roll now contained well over two hundred names.

F. Grant of Hafmilton, asked if anything had been done by the association to secure compensation for the exhibitors because of the closing order. President J. C. Brady, who occupied the chair, announced that a committee had been appointed by the executive to investigate this matter.

Toronto Health Officer Present.

A visitor at the meeting was Henry A. Rowland of the Toronto department of public health, who discussed with the exhibitors the advisibility of prohibiting the admission of children under seventeen years of age from the theatres until the schools would be reopened. Mr. Rowland was asked a number of questions and he explained particular points to the satisfaction of the meeting. It was moved by A. Cohen of the Rialto and Globe Theatres, Toronto, and seconded by R. S. Tickner of the Revue Theatre, Toronto, that Mr. Rowland be formally thanked for his attendance at the meeting, which was unexpected.

Secretary Thomas Scott made a formal report of his trip to Hamilton, Galt, Brantford and Paris during the previous month. He had been able to secure nine new members for the association.

W. M. Elliott, the new manager of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, was welcomed and Mr. Elliott addressed the meeting briefly.

Several members complained that they were being overcharged for posters. Some times they were compelled to pay for posters which they did not receive at all. These reports were placed in the hands of the grievance committee.

J. G. Tuxton of Napanee, declared he felt pleased to see the good turnout and businesslike methods of the association. He thought many more Ontario exhibitors would join the organization if they would only attend a meeting. Manager MacFarland of the Regent Theatre, Hamilton, expressed himself in similar manner.

METRO BUILDING WEST COAST STUDIO

Will Accommodate Ten Companies, Be Up to the Minute and Occupy Plot of 169,140 Square Feet

METRO Pictures Corporation, which this winter will continue its policy of expansion more vigorously than ever on the West Coast, has started work on its new studios in Hollywood, to be situated at Romaine and Cahuenga avenue. The new plant is designed to occupy an entire square block with a front footage of 280 feet and a depth of 605 feet, and the operation involves a large expenditure. The studios will accommodate from ten to twelve companies at the same time with that many individual stars.

The undertaking is essentially a Metro one. Everything, from the architect's plans to the building of the new plant, originates within the Metro organization. Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, made a trip west several weeks ago to look the ground over for available sites, deciding on the Romaine street-Cahuenga avenue tract from among several offered. Clifford P. Butler, studio manager, negotiated for the property, which was purchased direct from Cornelius Cole, California ex-Senator, after whom Cole avenue, which bounds the new site on the west, was named. The financial consideration was $30,000.

Manager Butler will direct the entire building operation. Ralph C. Godfrey, Metro technical director, will personally supervise all construction work as superintendent of building. Butler and Godfrey will cooperate in placing individual contracts for all work done. In fact, the entire plant will be built by contract, separate agreements being made with masons, carpenters, electricians and other artisans.

Plant Embodies Latest Ideas.

Plans for the new studio buildings were drawn by Carlos Nuese, an architect whose career started with the big architectural firm of McKim, Meade and White, of New York, and who has designed a number of the Pantages theatres on the coast as well as many buildings in Los Angeles. Nuese designed the lobby of the Kinema Theatre and also the annex to the Trinity Hotel, at Grand and Ninth. He has been with Metro for several months as head of the art department.

The new Metro plant is to embody the very latest ideas in studio construction. The administration buildings, which will house the executive offices of the motion picture company, are to be of the Colonial style of architecture. They will front on Romaine street, facing north. The main entrance will be through an impressive portal, set off with massive columns and surmounted by a State House cupola.

At the eastern extremty of the administration buildings will be separate offices for the director general, Maxwell Karger, and his associate, George D. Baker; for the studio manager, the scenario staff and the publicity department, with assistants and stenographers.

Horace Williams, casting director, will have a large office at the western end of the administration building, with a separate entrance. His private office will be supplemented by a large reception room for motion picture players calling for registration, tests and engagements.

To Have Three Large Stages.

There will be three large stages—two open and one inclosed. These will be ultra modern in design and equipment. The open stages will be 70 by 100 feet, and the inclosed stage, for "light effects," will have an area of 70 feet by 195 feet. To supply the lighting for the studios "Juice" will be generated by huge dynamos, of direct and alternating current, erected in a separate generator house.

The plans call for four projection rooms. These rooms will be equipped with the latest model machines, and will enable four directors at once to look over their day-to-day results. There will also be a large concrete vault, with a safe combination door, for storing finished film.

Present plans call for the construction of at least fifty light and airy dressing rooms, ranging from the elaborate apartments occupied by the stars to the less pretentious rooms used by the extra people.

Another important feature of the new studios will be a complete carpenter shop and mill, electrically equipped; and for the technical department and scenic artists there will be ample accommodation, with huge paint frames. The cutting room will have a northeastern exposure, to insure coolness and an abundance of light at all times.

Grounds to Be Beautified.

Elaborate landscape gardening will likewise feature the new plant. The administration buildings will be set well back from the street, on terraced greensward. Grass plots will abound within the studio walls, and a large space of "natural stuff" will be provided, with a view to erecting thereon elaborate exterior settings that could not be duplicated otherwise without a trip abroad.

The administration buildings, of concrete and frame construction, will be finished in green, with white trimmings. Adjoining these buildings on the left will be large ornamental iron gates, through which will pass the various vehicles bringing supplies to the studios.

It is planned to have the Metro equipment include a restaurant, operated after the cafeteria fashion, so that executives, stars, players and other employes will not be obliged to leave the grounds for meals.

Studio Manager Butler estimates that it will take about ninety days to complete the building operations. But before the expiration of this time Metro stars will be en route from the east to take up the greatly increased work of production. When they and the full executive force arrive on the ground Metro predicts it will have a plant which in the magnitude and scope of its activities will be unsurpassed on the West Coast.

Northwest Exhibitors Praise Black.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest has passed the following resolutions in appreciation of the work of Alfred S. Black, of the Maine branch of the National Association:

Whereas, In appreciation of the efficient and able manner in which Alfred S. Black, of the Maine Branch of the National Association, has labored for our interest in Washington and elsewhere, in the past, be it

Resolved, That we, the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the Northwest, in meeting assembled, wish to place ourselves on record by a vote of thanks to Mr. Black; and be it further

Resolved, That in appreciation of the fact that he is the only representative that has aided the exhibition in fighting the plan of the distributors to place the burden of the proposed film rental tax on the exhibitor, we lend our moral and financial support to any effort he may make in the interest of the exhibitor.

SPOOR-THOMPSON PROCESSING MACHINE

Develops, Washes, Drys and Polishes Positive Films at a Great Saving of Time and Outlay

By JAMES S. McQUADE.

I CALLED on George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, last week, and naturally the conversation soon centered on the new Spoor-Thompson processing machine, a subject which has had considerable interest for me for some time past. I had the privilege of seeing this wonderful machine in action some time ago, and I could not help recalling at the time the magic strides made by the great modern printing press of today from the old flat hand press of many yesterdays ago. I then asked myself if this new, ponderous, complicated machine was about to accomplish a similar revolution in the processing of the film, from the stage of the printed positive up to the final process which makes it ready for projection on the screen.

I am of the opinion that it will, and also that improvements will be made on it, just as they have been made on the printing press of former days, in order to meet the demands which still greater time saving, the increasing volume of work and superior workmanship call for in the present day.

Machine Is Very Intricate.

The Spoor-Thompson processing machine appears to be even more intricate than the great modern cylinder press. It has over 4,000 individual parts, many of which are employed to control the expansion and contraction of the film subjected to the processing. If the subjected film comes out of the machine either longer or shorter than it was before treatment, even by one thousandth part of an inch, in any section of it, the distance between the perforations is either lengthened or shortened, and, in consequence, the life of the film is afterward shortened by the sprockets of the projecting machine.

The difficulties encountered to prevent this will be readily seen when it is remembered that during the process the subjected film passes from a wet state to a dry, and that 4,000 feet of film are constantly in the machine. Trouble is prevented by having a temperature controller in the west section of the processing machine and another in the dry section at all times, the temperature in the dry section, of course, being the higher.

Claim Treatment Lengthens Film Life.

Messrs. Spoor and Thompson hold that the life of a film is positively lengthened by their processing treatment, as in the dry section of the machine the film is continually passing over hundreds of rollers of small, varying diameters, the surfaces of which are absorbent and of soft composition. While in the dry end of the machine at no time is it possible that a single spot of the surface of the film can escape contact with these rollers. This constant kneading tends to prevent brittleness of the film, a something that cannot be avoided under the old or present method, when the films are wound on large drums or frames during the drying process.

Here it may also be said in favor of the Spoor-Thompson processing machine that all the chemicals used in developing can practically be recovered and re-used—quite a saving.

But still longer life is guaranteed the positive film by means of another innovation employed in this processing machine. Only two splices are made in each 1,000 feet of positive which passes through the machine, no matter how many pieces may be in the negative submitted. This not only reduces to a minimum the chances of trouble while the positive is in the processing machine, but also the chances of trouble in the projecting machine while the film is being screened.

Reduces Number of Splices.

Contrast the old system with the new in this respect. By the old method there were (and are) nearly as many splices in the positive roll as there are scenes. Besides, as previously hinted, the troubles or hitches which might occur in the processing machine from the parting of the splices are greatly reduced and, more particularly, the life of the positive film, as turned out by the processing machine, is largely increased.

Mr. Spoor informed me that the processing machine finishes 1,000 feet of positive every seven and one-half minutes, or about 8,000 feet per hour; whereas by the present, or old method, it takes from one and three-quarters to two hours to develop, wash, dry and polish 1,000 feet of positive film. Moreover, the cost of labor by the old method, for the same length of time, runs from 70 to 80 per cent. higher. Here is one of the saving spots of the new processing method.

Mr. Spoor holds that the photographic quality obtained by the new processing method practically insures the highest results yet obtainable from any negative. This is due to the unvarying, controllable and scientific methods employed.

For example: The developing quality, by the old method, is at the mercy of the varying opinions or judgment of at least half a dozen operators on every 1,000 feet of film. No matter how many timing devices there may be in use for developing films, the operator in many cases is liable to—and in many cases does—trust his eye more than the timing device. Uniformity of photographic quality, the best that the negative shows, is unquestionably guaranteed by the Spoor-Thompson processing method, in the selection of the best printing quality to be found in each scene of every negative treated.

The method is an elaborate one, as it gives the opportunity to match scenes for printing quality, from a printing test of 64 different densities of photography, as shown in each negative scene.

Take the Best in Each Thousand Feet.

To illustrate: A printing test from a negative scene is made. This contains 64 pictures of varying photographic density. Each of these pictures is numbered, the numbers running from 1 to 64. The picture which shows the best photographic results, among the 64 pictures taken of this scene, is selected as the quality desired for that entire scene. Every other scene in the thousand feet length of film is similarly treated, and the combined selections gives the best photographic results for the entire 1,000 feet of film.

By the old (or present) method the selective quality of the photography is left to the judgment of the naked eye, and the range of the selection of photographic values is limited to 10 or, at most, 12 points of printing time. The superiority of the Spoor-Thompson processing method, in this respect alone, cannot fail to appeal to every thinking mind.

Mr. Spoor is highly gratified with the great interest which has been aroused by his new processing method among leading producers in the moving picture industry. He stated that his New York office at 110 West Fortieth street, in the World Tower Building, with Charles F. Starke in charge, is kept busy answering the numerous inquiries from the trade. Quite a number of producers have already sent their representatives to Chicago to inspect the new processing machines, two of which have been installed at the Essanay plant for some time past. Eight more arrived recently and are now being overhauled, preparatory to being placed in position and working order.

"All preparations are being made to start work and continue with great activity," said Mr. Spoor.

Robertson-Cole Praises Work of Customs Officers

THE export division of the New York Custom House deserves a vote of thanks from the film exporters of America," declares one of the officials of the department of motion pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company.

"General war conditions had necessarily made the work of the Custom House one beset with tremendous difficulties and problems. The restrictions which were made, were, of course, necessary to the conduct of the war. The enemy might easily have obtained valuable knowledge through films.

"But through all the months of our participation in the war the New York Custom House has gone about its business thoughtfully and understandingly. I wish to especially compliment Deputy Collector Lamb. He is entitled to a great deal of the credit for the admirable handling of the film exporting problem. In the days when the wartime rules made the conduct of business irksome Mr. Lamb always did his utmost to facilitate matters and aid the exporter.

"He has met the exporter fairly and squarely. Never once has he deviated from his policy of making the exporting of films as easy as possible. The Robertson-Cole Company has apreciated Mr. Lamb's handling of the situation."

Frank Lloyd Returns to Coast.

Having completed another William Farnum de luxe production at a studio in New Jersey, Frank Lloyd, director of "Les Miserables," "Riders of the Purple Sage," and other big Farnum pictures given for William Fox, has returned to Los Angeles. Mr. Lloyd came east for the sole purpose of making this one picture with Mr. Farnum. Mr. Lloyd is accompanied on the trip west by his assistant, Scott Dunlap, and his cameraman, Billy Foster.

What Would You Do with That Which Used to Be the Kaiser?

WHEN two or more foregather, these days, the popular sport is making suitable disposition of the cootie very recently brushed out of the whiskers of civilization. Editorials are being written; letters to the editor from Vox Populi and all the other sedate quillsters are getting into print. Hence we take this opportunity to dispose of him in our own way.

We shall confine him in a poorly ventilated projection room, tie him in a rickety chair and have the Society of Projectionists in relays turn loose some of the film that has done much in wrecking the Berlin to Bagdad Railroad System. While he lived we would have the show proceed continuously, supplying only enough food to Count Bill and the remaining little Hunzollcrns to sustain life for as long a time as possible. Over and over again, under our pleasant little idea of punishment, he would see millions of feet of film variously entitled:

The Hun Within.
Lest We Forget.
The Prussian Cur.

And

Producers' and Distributors' News

Screen Classics' "The Great Victory" Is Up to Date

THE newest Screen Classics, Inc., superfeature, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," has anticipated history. Scenes already photographed have been verified by current events. Metro officials and directors seem to have had an almost uncanny foreknowledge of the trend affairs would take, and the new production de luxe simply repeats the proverbial "Metro luck," as powerfully demonstrated in "To Hell with the Kaiser," "The Slacker," "Draft 258," "My Own United States," "Her Boy" and "Lest We Forget." Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, however, disclaims any supernatural method of obtaining information.

The picture will be the first great production to show in tangible form the actual events of the conclusion of the world war. History has collaborated with Maxwell Karger, the author, in providing the material for this splendid representation of the most important period in world affairs. Weaving a romance into the thread of important happenings of the war's earlier phases, Author Maxwell Karger has completed his story in such a way as to give motion picture patrons the benefit of the amazing occurrences of its climax and close.

Recent Happenings Portrayed.

The capture of Sedan, the Versailles conference, the reception of the German envoys by Marshal Foch and his associates of the Allied command, the delivery of the terms of the armistice and the final acceptance of it, the abdication of the "Kaiser and King," Wilhelm II, who thereby became simply William Hohenzollern; the subsequent wild acclaim with which the news was received in America, and President Wilson's appearance before Congress to read them the whole text of the armistice terms, have all been included in the picture, and have all been faithfully reproduced. Moreover, there will be further incidents in "The Great Victory" which will not be made public until the actual projection of the production upon the screen of a New York theatre, remarkable incidents connected with these epoch-making events which have not heretofore become generally known.

The Versailles Supreme War Council conference at the Trianon Palace and the arrival of Erzberger and his party, and their reception from Foch of the terms settled upon by the consensus of Allied opinion have all been graphically represented. Care has been taken to have the players visualize faithfully the important personages concerned. Director Charles Miller and his assistant, Edward Lawrence, have, wherever possible, engaged actors who really resembly these notables, sometimes finding the man required outside the ranks of actors, as in the instance of Eugene Morin, of Metro's photographic department, who is an absolute "double" of President Poincare of France.

Many Notables Represented.

In important historical scenes of the picture, Marshal Foch is represented by Herman Gerold, Lloyd George by J. C. Dunn, General Pershing by Frank Farrington, King George by William Gaffney, Colonel E. M. House by William Smith, Admiral Sims by William Willis, and Admiral Wemyss by Aubrey Lowell, King Albert of Belgium by Raymond Hayes, the same player demonstrating his skill at makeup by playing also King Ferdinand of Bulgaria; Japan's Ambassador to France, M. Matsui, by T. Tamamoto; Turkey's representative by Harry Pettibone, King Victor Emanuel by Fred T. Des Bresay, and his representative by Antonio Vitolli, Robert Lansing by Charles Arling and Joseph Tumulty by Richard Walton.

President Wilson is shown in some inspiring and historic scenes. Fred C. Truesdell impersonates the president. Mr. Truesdell resembles the nation's chief representative so closely that scarcely a day passes in which he is not addressed by strangers who either fancy him to be the president or remark upon the resemblance.

Contrasting scenes in No Man's Land before and after the announcement of the armistice are offered. The parting shot delivered by the American soldiers and their opponents in the historic conflict is indicated, and the subsequent lull, followed by the bargaining of the Germans to exchange their Iron Crosses for cigarettes. However, romance of the great photodrama is by no means forgotten, and these events lead up to a most attractive scene.

"The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns" closes on a note of exaltation, bringing home the great benefits won in the battle of right against might. An absorbing romance is played between Creighton Hale, as Conrad, and Helen Ferguson, as Amy.

Mary Miles Minter Does "Active" Screen Close-Up

AN IMPROVEMENT on the "close-up" will be demonstrated in "Wives and Other Wives," the American Film Company's next release, starring Mary Miles Minter. It is an "active" close-up instead of the stiff, almost motionless pose assumed heretofore when the lens was close to the object or person.

Few of the producers have risked the dangers of facial movement at close-ups because of the fact that not many faces can be active and yet remain attractive under the tremendous magnification on the screen.

But in Mary Miles Minter's face the film world possesses a countenance that has neither wrinkle nor blemish. It may be argued that this is because of her youth. Still there are many youthful stars who make very fine close-ups of the "stationary" kind, who dare not even move their lips during the taking of the film which will, when projected, make the tiniest facial line assume the proportions of a river on a map. And as for double or multiple chins the screen will show them up like concertinas.

In "Wives and Other Wives" there are a number of these new style close-ups. They demonstrate the perfection of her facial proportions. Anatomical and physiognomical lateral comparisons of Miss Minter's face reveal that she is one of the only persons known in whom two sides of the face are virtually identical. Profound screen analysts declare that in "Wives and Other Wives" there is more eloquence in even her smallest and most finely graduated facial change than in many of the great but strained efforts on the part of other stars to register emotion.

Thus it is the "life within"—the very ideas and thoughts behind the emotions—that soars out from the very heart of the star and become indelibly recorded upon the great mirror of life—the photo film.

Dual Role for Williams in "The American Ace"

EARLE WILLIAMS, Vitagraph Blue Ribbon star, has turned his hand to literary work and soon will be seen in a Blue Ribbon feature, of which he is co-outhor. The play, which was written by Mr. Williams in collaboration with H. H. Van Loan, is a mystery drama with an American aviator as the central figure, and has been given the title of "The American Ace."

Mr. Williams is now at work on the production at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood, under direction of James Young. Mr. Williams recently came East to make a five-reel feature, but it was decided that he should start on "The American Ace" first, and he returned to the Pacific Coast.

Although Mr. Williams has been one of the most popular stars in the business for many seasons past and has appeared in hundreds of screen productions, this is the first time, so far as known, that he has ever appeared as the writer of a photoplay. It is not his first writing, however, for in his youth he wrote numerous short stories and, since attaining stardom has published an autobiography in book form.

"The American Ace," despite its title, is not a war play. It is described as a secret service play, replete with mystery, in which a Yankee flyer impersonates his brother, obtains the secrets of a ring of plotters by flying into the German lines, and finally exposes a gigantic conspiracy. Mr. Williams is called upon to play a dual role in the picture, and he will actually fly an airplane, he having learned the operation of a flying machine during the early days of America's participation in the war.

Mr. Williams took up the study of flying at that time with the hope of becoming an army flyer, but this hope never was realized.

Hale Hamilton Goes West.

Hale Hamilton will be the first Metro star to begin work on a new feature production, following the industry's cessation of activities. The star has gone to Metro's west coast studio in Hollywood, Cal., where the first scenes of the new picture will be photographed. "The Fourflusher," a comedy-drama by Izola Forrester and Mann Page, is this star's initial vehicle on the California "location." Harry L. Franklin will direct Mr. Hamilton.

Vitagraph Companies Busy.

With production about evenly divided between its eastern and western studios, Vitagraph now has eleven major companies at work on productions for its regular program, in addition to several companies working on short reel subjects.

Scenes from "Borrowed Clothes," Jewel's Production Featuring Mildred Harris (Mrs. Charles Chaplin).

Chaplin and His Bride Appear on Same Screen

ONE wedding sometimes stirs up a lot of rumpus. Take the case of Mildred Harris—that was—and Charlie Chaplin. The Jewel star and the comedy star got married last month, and, according to Jewel Productions, there is a heavy run on "Borrowed Clothes," which is the latcst release featuring the little star who has become Mrs. Chaplin. Every picture fan, from all accounts, is anxious to see the comedian's bride even though most of them have seen her previously in many big productions.

Piquancy is lent to the situation by the fact that the bride of the millionaire comedian appears this time in a film whose title suggests a remarkable idea, and which is known to show her as a bride. The story of "Borrowed Clothes," which has been pretty well told in advance advertising, in fact depends mainly on the theme of marriage and orange blossoms.

Miss Harris makes a delightful figure at the great moment dressed in the garb of the bride, with a crown of blossoms on her head. The spectator therefore has a realistic vision of how she must have appeared on that epochal occasion when she faced the clergyman October 23.

Jewel Produtions makes the interesting report that many of the exhibitors who have booked the film are advertising its heroine almost exclusively for the occasion as Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, and are relegating, for the time being, the bride's screen and maiden name.

At the Broadway Theatre in New York the attraction drew a capacity crowd. The drawing power was augmented by the fact that Charlie Chaplin, himself, was also on the program in the film, "Shoulder Arms," which has been held over for another week from a previous long run at that theatre.

M. Kashin, manager of the theatre, issued announcements to the effect that Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Chaplin were to be seen at his theatre. The idea proved irresistible.

Riviera Books Entire Hayakawa Series.

"The Temple of Dusk," the Haworth-Mutual production starring Sessue Hayakawa in a Japanese drama, taxed the capacity of the Riviera, Chicago's theatre beautiful, for four days, November 7-10. Balaban & Katz, who operate seven theatres in Chicago, have made the Riviera the mecca of the North Side fan. An orchestra of thirty-five artists had rehearsed the picture under the direction of Leopold Kohls, general director of music for the Balaban & Katz theatres, and the effect was a convincing demonstration of the power of music in emphasizing film action.

The drawing power of the Japanese actor has resulted in the booking of the entire series of Hayakawa productions for the Riviera. Balaban & Katz report that "The Temple of Dusk" made a profound impression on their patrons, and the box-office receipts were limited only by the capacity of the house.

"Miss Ambition" Is a Modern Drama.

Vitagraph will inaugurate the Corinne Griffith series of nine Blue Ribbon features on November 25 with "Miss Ambition," a modern drama based on an original story by Rex Taylor. Miss Griffith is the fifth of Vitagraph's stars selected to appear on the program since the announcement some time ago of the company's new booking plan, whereby exhibitors are supplied with stars and release dates a year in advance.

Bessie Love, the sixth of the Vitagraph feature stars, is scheduled to make her first appearance on the Blue Ribbon program on December 2, in "The Dawn of Understanding," this completing the first cycle of star series releases under the new policy.

In "Miss Ambition," Miss Griffith was directed by Henry-Houry. She is supported by an efficient cast, including Betty Blythe, Walter McGrail, Denton Vane and Templar Saxe.

Keeney Sets November 25 for Release of "Marriage"

EXHIBITORS will be interested to learn that the release date of the third of the Frank A. Keeney productions, "Marriage," has been set for November 25. This picture played at the Broadway Theatre for one week to large audiences, and Manager Kashin declared it to be a fine picture, as it depicts vividly high life in society and tells a fascinating love story.

"Marriage" deals with a social evil which is constantly cropping out in real life, namely that all men and women of high social order who, through their lack of funds, to keep up appearances stoop to cheat at cards. This subject is treated in a strong manner.

James Kirkwood directed this picture, and it is regarded as the best work he has yet done by those who have seen it. The way the subject has been handled has been a source of favorable comment by both the public and the press. The William L. Sherry Service will distribute "Marriage," as it has the two other Keeney productions, "A Romance of the Underworld" and "Out of the Night." The last two releases, according to reports, prove that they have met with favor.

In this picture Miss Calvert is enabled to wear some beautiful gowns and also to display her emotional abilities.

"Shoulder Arms" Breaking Records.

Twenty thousand dollars in contracts for return bookings on "Shoulder Arms" is the record obtained without any selling effort by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange of New York on the second Chaplin comedy.

Other First National exchanges throughout the country report a phenomenal number of applications from exhibitors for return dates. In many instances, according to the managers, exhibitors have voluntarily offered to double and treble their rental prices on the comedy to continue its original run without interruption.

Exhibitors in small towns are said to be amazed at the manner in which "Shoulder Arms" is breaking house records for the duration of runs. Theatres that previously played attractions for two days as a maximum, because of limited population, are using the second Chaplin comedy distributed by First National for three and four days to capacity business.

New Loew Theatre Uses Power's.

Much comment has been made on the opening of the handsome Loew Palace Theatre in Washington. This is one of the most pretentious theatres in America. It's wonderful projection is accomplished by two Power's 6-B Cameragraphs.

Universal Holding Daily Conferences on Publicity

PROMPTLY at noon there is a ceremony every day in the office of R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of the Universal. The occasion is a combined celebration and ritual for births and deaths of ideas. This is the daily conference of Mr. Cochrane with the six men in charge of various departments of advertising and publicity. The purpose of their gathering is to bring new thoughts into being or kill old ones that have served to their limit or have failed. Following the first session a large painted sign in a frame appeared on the wall of his office, proclaiming to all that at noon every day the room would be reserved for executive session.

This practice is precisely similar to that followed by the editors of the world's largest newspapers.

The Universal conference is called to map out all details of the advertising and publicity campaigns pending. Those who take part are Joe Brandt, Nat Rothstein, Paul Gulick, Hal Hodes, E. S. Moffett, P. D. Cochrane and L. F. Whiteside.

As a result of the first meeting, some unexpected plans developed for the campaign that will be waged for current and pending special attractions.

A definite schedule for these productions from December 16 to March 10 was announced at this time.

Following is the schedule as announced: "The Wildcat of Paris," featuring Priscilla Dean, December 16; "Danger—Go Slow," with Mae Murray as star, December 30; "Roped," featuring Harry Carey, January 13; "Destiny," featuring Dorothy Phillips, January 27; "Dearie," featuring Mary MacLaren, February 10; "The Scarlet Strain," featuring Mae Murray, February 24, and "Boiling Over," featuring Harry Carey, March 10.

Pathe Colors Scenes in "Infatuation."

The colored scenes in the Pathe special offering, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, mark a high point in the achievement of chromatic cinema display. The scene is a performance on the stage of the spacious Casino de Paris showing the "human flag," now reproduced at the New York Hippodrome. A company of girls mount a gigantic frame, and the arrangement of their costumes furnishes the colors of, first, the French tri-color, and then Old Glory. The rest of the brilliant performance is shown with its glittering ballets, evolutions and groupings.

For faithful color production there were no inconsiderable problems to be met, but the lighting experts and specialists from the Pathe Color studios at Vincennes figured them out to perfection, with the co-operation of Director Louis Mercanton.

In Allen J. Holubar's recent photoplay, "The Girl Who Dared," from the story by James Oliver Curwood, there was used what is believed to be the most expensive lot of furs ever seen in any single film production.

One of the fur costumes worn by Dorothy Phillips, the star, is valued at $5,000. It is the property of Fred LeRoy Granville, cameraman of the Holubar Company, and was obtained by him during the year he spent in Siberia with the Stephenson expedition while on his trip around the world. It is made of white unborn Siberian seal and is trimmed with white fox and Russian sable.

"Leap of Despair" Comes November 24.

"The Leap of Despair" is the title of the seventh episode of the patriotic Pathe serial, "Wolves of Kultur," starring Leah Baird, with Sheldon Lewis and Charles Hutchison, and released the week of November 24.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "Hitting the Trail" (World).

Evelyn Greeley Presented With Genuine Dog of War

IF YOU see Evelyn Greeley, the World Picture star, accompanied by a nondescript sort of a dog, walking about New York, you will have an opportunity of seeing in this "mut" one of the unsung heroes of the war. Miss Greeley was presented with Glad, for that is his name, by one of the survivors of the fight at Fismes when 28 of the original company is all that was left of the immortal 300 of Company C of —— Regiment, U. S. Infantry, that went into the fight that day against the "cockchafers," the crack Prussian regiment, and beat them to a frazzle. In the letter Miss Greeley received with the dog she was told that he had been given his name because from the day he came to them and had been trained to carry messages from the trenches back to the regiment's headquarters, they had called him Glad, and damned glad they were when he was the only living creature that could and did go through the hail of bullets and shells to carry word to bring up ammunition which was badly needed. In fact, at the time the boys had only enough provender for their machine guns to last a matter of minutes.

"The boys want you to keep Glad. It is the only way we can show our love for you and the regard we hold you in after all the fine things you have done for us. Glad means a lot to us and so do you, and that is why we want you to have him."

As proud as Miss Geeley is of her two brothers, who went across at the time when the ink was still wet on the declaration of war, so is also her admiration of the savior of C Company.

Glad seems to be perfectly satisfied with his present lot and makes only one demand—he insists on sleeping "on guard" at Miss Greeley's bedroom door.

Heffron Finishes First Western.

Thomas N. Heffron, who has directed such productions as "The Painted Lily," "Madame Sphinx" and "Tony America," has just finished his first western picture, "Deuce Duncan," presenting William Desmond as the star. This picture will be released by Triangle for the week of November 24. It was written with scenario by George Hivey of Triangle's literary staff.

"Deuce Duncan" presents Desmond as a wild and reckless cowpuncher who fears nothing fearable. But he yields to the appeal of a little woman who is being persecuted by an escaped convict. Her gentle personality and soothing influence awaken his ardor and this wild bad man of the west is regenerated, as he turns his strength to good account, when in a man to man conflict he rescues the girl he loves from the villainy of her supposed brother. Then Ann is only too glad to permit Deuce to take her into his arms.

Lopez Completes New Moss Feature.

John S. Lopez has just completed at the Keeney studios on East 48th street a six-reel feature for B. S. Moss, which is still untitled, but is said to be based on a unique and daring theme. In the cast is a new leading ingenue, Beth Irvins, who was discovered by Director Lopez while working as an extra in "The Sins of the Children." The time set for the release of this latest Moss picture was the middle of November.

William Fox Announces Reissue of "The Great Nine"

IN announcing a new series of releases to be known as "The Great Nine," described as a million dollar group of pictures, William Fox said: "President Wilson and all the Government officials have had nothing but words of praise for the part the motion picture industry has played in the conduct of war activities.

"Now that the war is won, the conservation of man power and materials is a task which we must all undertake to the utmost. The necessity for economy continues. For that reason the Fox Film Corporation at this time has decided to reissue nine of the greatest pictures it has ever made.

"In two years motion picture audiences in this country have increased 100 per cent., so that to-day pictures which were released two years ago are entirely new to 50 per cent. of the theatregoers. A large proportion of the other 50 per cent. will want again to see pictures which are tried and proved successes. So that in addition to aiding by the conservation of materials and man power, through the reissue of these successes, we are sure to bring unusually large profits to the exhibitor."

It is on the basis of proved values that "The Great Nine" have been selected. There is not one that could be duplicated today, under war condition, for much more than its original cost. There is not one that was not originally made for and sold as a big special feature.

Special attention has been given to the tinting and toning of the new prints. The revising has been done personally by William Fox and his film editor, Hetty Grey Baker. Length has been limited to 4,500 feet and care has been taken to eliminate everything interfering with fast, snappy, sustained action. Many great stars of today will be found in the casts as portrayers of minor roles.

The first release will be December 29 and there will be subsequent releases at intervals of one week. The opening feature will be the first picture made at the California studios of William Fox. It is William Farnum in "Fighting Blood."

Theda Bara will appear in her superproduction, "The Serpent," which was made under the direction of Raoul A. Walsh. Raoul A. Walsh's first picture for Fox, "The Regeneration," will be the third production released.

The remaining pictures will be "The Broken Law," with William Farnum; "Under Two Flags," with Theda Bara—a picture based on George Ohnet's celebrated play and novel, "Dr. Ramean," and now retitled "Infidelity"; "The Soul of Broadway," with Valeska Suratt; "The Darling of Paris," with Theda Bara, and "Hoodman Blind," featuring William Farnum.

Elaborate publicity and advertising material and entirely new lithographs and lobby displays have been provided for "The Big Nine." The entire elaborate campaign in behalf of the productions is in the hands of James E. McBride, assistant to the general manager of the Fox Film Corporation.

"The Kingdom of Grief" Is Story of Belgium's Tragedy

THE rebuilding of Belgium will be a labor of love when the American people come to realize what the world owes to that heroic little country when with but two army corps against eleven German army corps she held the Huns at bay and gave the armies of England and France an opportunity to mobilize and become effective.

No one factor is destined to play a greater part in the coming campaigns to raise funds for this noble work than the wonderful and authentic photo-history just being released, entitled "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief." The entire picture from start to finish is full of action, from the early days of the revolution in 1830 up to the day when King Albert returned to his war-torn country and people and triumphantly entered the city of Ghent with his queen. Every phase of the war has been exploited for this picture.

The scenes were taken under Government supervision in Belgium. Belgium's heroic struggles for freedom from tyranny is the theme of this picture.

Universal Sets New Record.

Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of Universal and director of the motion picture "Keep the Home Fires Burning," announces that this reconstruction picture actually used over one hundred cameras. This is unprecedented and sets a new record in picture making.

Scenes were taken in over a hundred different cities and places both here and abroad. It is a spectacle which has been in the making for months with a view of releasing upon the declaration of peace. It is prophetic in showing on the screen the vision of the future. Everyone's thoughts are now turned to the very things that this picture depicts, and its timeliness is expected to create much favorable comment.

Review 22 Tells Why the Hun Ran.

The coming of peace in the great world struggle gives especial significance to No. 22 of the "Official War Review" released by Pathe the week of November 25. It shows the blows that finally broke the Teuton's back; how the batteries of the Allies kept the retreating Hun on the run, and Britain's batteries are seen speeding forward to take up new positions. The camera shows a breathless, tireless, unceasing work in bringing up ammunition and guns from the transportation course afforded by the tranquil Flanders canal and the rough sledding of guns through the muddy fields to a hurry call for a barrage when Britain's iron-mouthed chorus begins to sing in thunder, smoke and flame.

The camera shows how Italy answers the ceaseless call of the trenches and how America's power began to bear down.

"The Kaiser's Finish" Makes Hit in Baltimore

SIDNEY B. LUST, president of the Super-Film Attractions, Inc., of Washington, D. C., wired to A. Warner, in charge of sales for "The Kaiser's Finish," the special eight-part state rights feature, the following:

"'The Kaiser's Finish' going over big at first run house, Wizard Theatre, Baltimore. Mr. Depkin, manager of the Wizard, called me on phone and informed me the crowds had destroyed front of theatre clamoring to get in."

Investigation revealed the fact that Mr. Depkin booked "The Kaiser's Finish" immediately following the reported signing of the armistice on Thursday of last week. Despite the denial of this dispatch, Mr. Depkin held to his decision to play the picture on Monday. With the official statement by the War Department that the armistice had been signed early Monday morning, Baltimore crowds quickly caught the significance of the title of the Warner production, and before the Wizard opened on Monday the streets in front of it were jammed with people awaiting admission.

In the fifteen minutes of struggling before the police arrived and threatened the crowds with their clubs the well arranged lobby was changed to a ruin rivaling in the completeness of its destruction the work of the Huns pictured on the screen.

Theatres Contract for Kellerman Film.

Reports on "A Daughter of the Gods," the great Annette Kellerman spectacle, on which the Fox Film Corporation launched a special drive about two months ago, show that since the beginning of this campaign nearly 200 theatres all over the country have signed contracts. Many of these theatres, it is said, booked the picture for a second showing, and in not a few cases—especially during the no-release period—for a third time.

In every case the picture is reported to have played to big houses, the fame of Annette Kellerman and the prestige established by this picture since its release having proved a strong combination.

Famous Players Studio Resumes Production Work

FOLLOWING the four weeks' period of inactivity production work was resumed last week at the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The first picture to be started was "Here Comes the Bride," a Paramount production in which John Barrymore is starred. Mr. Barrymore is now scoring the greatest success of his stage career in the Tolstoy play, "Redemption," at the Plymouth Theatre, and his work at the studio is consequently limited to five days a week of intensive effort. His director is John Stuart Robertson, and Fair Binney appears in the leading feminine role. Max Marcin and Roy Atwell were the authors of the play, which enjoyed a successful run at the George M. Cohan Theatre during the 1917-18 season, and Charles E. Whittaker adapted it for the screen.

Marguerite Clark made a hurried trip from Washington early in the week to make a scene to be used as an introduction to "The Golden Bird," which, except for the scene referred to, was completed a month ago. Miss Clark starts work this week at the Fifty-sixth street studio on an adaptation for Paramount of Alice Hegan Rice's "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Hugh Ford, who produced it on the stage a dozen years ago, will direct.

The filming of "Two Brides," Mme. Cavalieri's newest Paramount picture, which was started before the shut-down agreement was entered into, has been completed, and Director Edward Jose is now engaged in cutting and assembling the film.

Elsie Ferguson, whose last picture, "His Parisian Wife," was completed a month ago, will soon start on another Artcraft production, probably under the direction of Emile Chautard.

Peace Brings New Interest to Two Jewel Productions

ON the heels of world peace Jewel Productions reports that a tremendous interest has developed in the newest phase of the Anti-Yellow Dog campaign, which is being conducted in conection with the picture, "The Yellow Dog." Jewel also reports that similar popularity has been developed in the last few days for "Crashing Through to Berlin."

A separate reason is suggested in each case. It is in striking contrast with the beliefs previously expressed by certain film men, that serious affairs relating to the war would be dead subjects so far as films were concerned the moment peace was declared.

The Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs have swung their attention with high enthusiasm to debates and demonstrations over the problems that result from peace. "What shall we do with the Kaiser?" is one of these problems. Clubs throughout the country, working in cooperation with exhibitors, are conducting a series of symposiums and debates on the various after-the-war questions.

"Crashing Through To Berlin" has become automatically a victory picture, in that it shows the principal events that led up to the crushing of Germany. In testimony of the increased interest in this picture, Jewel Productions reports that within the last few days a number of theatres which previously had made no arrangements to book it took steps to procure it for immediate showing. The Palace Theatre, of Buffalo, was one of the houses that arranged an emergency showing. This theatre booked the picture for five days immediately after the official announcement was made that the armistice had been signed.

Goldwyn Well Represented in Big Ohio Houses

OHIO claims its share of America's aggressive exhibitors, and H. A. Bandy, manager of Goldwyn's Cleveland office, also claims generous representation in the big theatres of these showmen. Incidentally, the showmanship methods employed by these successful managers are of interest and value to every person connected with the industry.

W. T. Huber, who, with his son, L. K. Huber, opcrates the New Royal Theatre, Findlay, has one of the most exquisite motion picture houses in the state. Findlay is proud of the Hubers and the New Royal, and the skilled manner in which these exhibitors direct their interests has won the confidence and patronage of their community.

Practically every person in the industry knows Edward A. Zorn, managing director of the big Temple Theatre, Toledo. Mr. Zorn is a young man with big ideas. His success has been won by giving his patrons their money's worth in full measure. He is known throughout the trade as an alert advertiser and the advertisements for the Temple Theatre often dominate the advertising columns of the Toledo newspapers.

Mr. Zorn makes his copy talk, not whisper. He injects his own vivid personality into every line of wording, and the humanness of his ads gives them an appeal and effectiveness which command extraordinary results. Mr. Zorn knows the value of star personality, and in all his exploitation the names of the famous stars are heralded in the most spectacular manner.

H. C. Horater, managing director of the beautiful Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, is another example of the modern, distinctive exhibitor. Mr. Horater is known as "Doc" among his friends and business associates, and they all agree that "Doc" is a mighty able doctor when it comes to standardizing the health of his box-office profits. Mr. Horater is one of the biggest advertisers in the state. Mr. Horater emphasizes the necessity of providing the highest class of entertainment for motion picture devotees and also the importance of house service that meets the wants of the patrons and provides them with the utmost in convenience and comfort.

Another "live wire" Ohio exhibitor is O. J. Bannon, proprietor and manager of Bannon's Theatre, Elyria, Ohio. Mr. Bannon is nicknamed "On the Job" Bannon, because he is an indefatigable worker. Mr. Banner never fails to "cash in" on the pictures he exploits.

In all Mr. Bandy has every reason to be proud of the showmen who are making famous throughout Ohio the name of Goldwyn.

President Is Still Here, Cohn Proves by Picture

ONE of the latest stunts of Jack Cohn, head of the Universal news pictorial department, was to take part in refuting a sensational rumor that spread the other day across the country. The rumor was that President Wilson had left suddenly and secretly on a trip across the sea to take part personally in the armistice conference. For a day or two this idea was circulated so rapidly that people believed it and gambled on it. Hundreds of bets were made that the President had gone and that news of his presence in Washington was faked in order to hide the fact of the matter. Then along came Jack Cohn with a special news picture showing the President on the day of the actual signing of the armistice standing on the White House steps and reviewing a parade.

With the old-time theory that "seeing is believing," this picture quickly put a quietus to the mistaken report.

But the proof came too late to save Mr. Cohn himself from loss on account of the mistake. He had been one of those who believed the rumor and made a little bet on that score with George Kann, secretary to Mr. Laemmle. Mr. Cohn, of course, was undone by his own proofs.

Baggot Shatters the Clock.

King Baggot, who heads the all-star cast of the Screen Classics, Inc., production, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," has an opportunity in this production to show what a shot he is with a revolver. In one of the scenes he is called on to shatter a clock, which has been set with a time fuse to a bomb, with one shot from his gun. Director Blache has intended to rehearse the scene several times before the actual taking, but Mr. Baggot's accuracy with his revolver would have proved too costly in clocks.

"Proposing Bill" (Goldwyn).

If there exists any doubt that "Smiling Bill" Parsons is one of the few truly great comedians on the screen, his performance in his newest Capitol Comedy, "Proposing Bill," is certain to dispel it. Lovers of wholesome comedy will find "Smiling Bill" at top-comedy speed all the way through the new vehicle.

When Bill is home from the road, where his business as salesman takes him, he is obsessed with a mania for proposing marriage to almost every girl he meets. Popping the question four times a night is not an uncommon occurrence for Bill. To the credit of the women upon whom he exercises his wiles it may be said that none ever takes him seriously. But his penchant for rapid-fire proposing puts him in a sorry plight when he meets a girl he realizes he really loves. That's where the story begins.

Report Demand for "Cleopatra."

Americans, as a rule, are good spenders. And all present signs sustain the prophecy that during the coming winter they will break their own spending record. The secret is reaction from an unprecedented rigid economy—reaction from the acute suspense of war—relief from anxiety for loved ones in the military service—joy at a victory which rescues the world from threatened disaster.

A reflection of this new spirit is seen in a demand by exhibitors for the Theda Bara super-production, "Cleopatra." The success of "Cleopatra" since its release on the open market in August has been sensational, and exhibitors figure that it is just the sort of big picture for the holidays.

Goldwyn Staging Farrar in Roles New to Singer

NOTHING could have been more astonishing to the millions of picture lovers than the abrupt change in the dramatic materials provided for Geraldine Farrar under the Goldwyn imprint. By deliberate intent Goldwyn and its popular star decided that she should be seen in stories exactly the opposite of all dramas she had hitherto done for the screen.

With her second Goldwyn production, "The Hell Cat," beginning its first run and pre-release career this week in the important cities of the country, announcement is made of her third production in which Miss Farrar has the role of an Alaskan dance hall girl. This production like all of the others in the Farrar series is directed by Reginald Barker, and it will be found to contain the most surprising work Miss Farrar has ever done since her tremendously successful debut on the screen four years ago. The title of this story by Willard Mack is "Shadows." It has not been scheduled, but will be a mid-winter release.

Four of Goldwyn's Geraldine Farrar star series already have been completed.

Famous Cartoonists Will Draw for Hearst Weeklies

ON the heels of the official statement from the companies concerned announcing the consolidation of the four big news pictorial services under the banner of Hearst's International News Service glowing things are proclaimed regarding the debut of the combined weeklies. One of the chief attractions mentioned as part of the new service is the collection of high-priced cartoonists serving the reels with animated cartoons.

The list includes Windsor McKay, Hal Koffman, Hy Mayer, T. A. Dorgan, Harry Murphy, Tom Powers and Opper, for years the leading comic artist of the country.

It is part of the International News Service's chief plan to inject as much humor and diversion into the weeklies as is humanly possible. In the meantime the news camera scouts of all the separate branches of the weeklies are reported to be working at top speed all over the face of the earth.

Some of the latest news pictures are those just filtering across the Atlantic from the capitals of the world, with pictorial news of how Europe acted when its orgy of blood-spilling came to an end. Incidentally the very latest scenes of America's readjustments to the new peace conditions are to be found in the current issues.

The news gathering facilities of the combined weeklies are beyond doubt the strongest that have ever been mobilized for such a purpose. They include the scientific backing and effort of all the Hearst newspapers, which are equipped to keep check on all the events in their various territories. The network of telegraphic news workers constituted under the International News service, which transmits its material daily to 400 newspapers, likewise is part of the working organization that produces the pictorial weeklies.

Officials of the combined group declare that the service will grow to proportions hitherto undreamed of.

"News pictorials," says the statement issued by the headquarters of the service, "have become the predominant film material on the market today. The person who fails to see animated news films lives in the dark. He is missing part of the necessary education one must have to keep abreast of the times."

"The Enchanted Barn" Near Completion.

Harry Raver Announces Serial Starring "Maciste"

CONFIRMING Harry Raver's denial, some time ago, that "Maciste," the D'Annunzio star of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior," had not been killed in action on the Alpine front, as had been reported, the announcement has been made that the battle-scarred screen idol has completed his third production, "The Liberator," and the picture is in Mr. Raver's hands ready for the North American market. The new film is a serial 24,000 feet long.

Little has been divulged concerning "Maciste" and his plans for new productions to follow his last success, "The Warrior," as he has been doing a soldier's duty and it was considered unwise to make predictions in face of military difficulties and the dangers of the fighting front; however, in August, 1917, the first scenes of "The Liberator" were staged, leaves of absence from war duty being obtained for "Maciste" and the male members of the cast. Then came reverses at the fighting front and every man was called back to service. Work on the picture was abandoned. Then Mr. Raver started the cables humming and succeeded in persuading the producers to try again. Through the influence of Gabrielle D'Annunzio the cast was permitted to return to the studio, subject, however, to instant call.

There were three such interruptions before the production was finished, more than a year later. Casualties among members of the cast and their relatives at the front added to the uncertainty and gloom, but Mr. Raver never gave up hope. During all this time he was sending cables. He had provided the story for the new "Maciste" production and, realizing the big fellow's popularity in this country, did not believe in giving up without pulling the very last wire.

"The Liberator" is not a classic. It is not a war picture. Harry Raver, commenting on the production, says: "My wife and I sat through a five-and-a-half-hour showing of 'The Liberator' at one time without being bored. Comedy dominates the picture, although romance and thrilling situations supply the necessary contrast. As a whole, 'The Liberator' is so novel and unusual I decided to submit it to the press in its entirety so that its value as an attraction might be intelligently understood. I realize that serials are not usually introduced in this way, but as 'The Liberator' is completed and I am confident of its quality, there is no reason for submitting a few early episodes and keeping the trade guessing about the remainder."

According to Mr. Raver's decision "The Liberator" will be shown to the press on Thursday and Friday of this week in two sessions of two and a half hours each.

Posters Aplenty for "Kaiser's Finish."

One-half of the total quantity of posters ordered by A. Warner for the entire United States and Canada on "The Kaiser's Finish" has been requisitioned by the Emanee Film Company, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, to meet exhibitor demands in New York City, New York State and Northern New Jersey, the territories they are booking on the production.

With this order as an indication of the certainty of a greater demand than was anticipated in the most optimistic forecasts by Mr. Warner and his associates, the quantities have been trebled not only on posters but for window cards, press sheets and cuts and mats.

The exhibitor requests for advertising material indicate that they are planning local campaigns to tie up the production and its title with the timeliness of the events it picturizes.

Sawyer Announces Plans of New S-L Pictures

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, who, with Herbert Lubin, has formed the new S-L pictures organization, for the making and releasing of big specials, announces that production work is being started on the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction, personally directed by Ralph Ince, which will be the initial offering under the new banner. Plans for originating the S-L brand have been under way for several months, a definite policy having been outlined and carried to completion. According to Mr. Sawyer the only films which will be made are those which have a theme big enough to assure their success on the largest scale.

"The day of mediocre films has passed," declared Mr. Sawyer. "Our definite plan is to make the biggest kind of big specials, for only by the creation of unusually fine attractions can public interest in the motion picture be kept up. S-L Pictures will cater to a public ever growing more discriminating, and will never attempt any fixed number of annual releases, or any other plan which would detract from the high quality of production which is vital today to win success.

"Ralph Ince, our director-in-chief, is so well known for his successes that further comment is unnecessary. For his opening production Mr. Ince is picturizing a stupendous theme, which for the present must remain a secret. The star will be E. K. Lincoln, who has made a name for himself by efficient portrayals of many difficult parts, winning an ever-growing following among picture lovers. The combination of Ralph Ince and E. K. Lincoln is particularly fine, and in support there will be an all-star cast, which will be announced soon."

Leonce Perret Says Title Must Be Born Out of Film

LEONCE PERRET says he certainly paid the penalty of choosing General Pershing's famous words, "Lafayette We Come," for his first independent feature film, as, when it came to selecting a title to the sequel it seemed impossible to find one which was equally as telling—which "breathed, like the title 'Lafayette We Come,' the soul of the film."

In vain tried Mr. Perrot's co-advisers to suggest a competition for a suitable title. This idea, adopted sometimes by other concerns, was at once rejected by the French director. "The title must come out of the film," said he. "It must be born out of the very picture itself. No outsider can therefore give a convincing title—a title that tells the public at once what the film is all about—what the film intends to convey.

"I have been congratulated for choosing the title 'Lafayette We Come' for my first film. After all," said Mr. Perret, "it was not difficult to apply General Pershing's famous message to my picture, as the whole picture was built up on it.

"I had in my mind a picture visualizing the great, great friendship which exists between France and America. I had from the first moment that I undertook to direct the film in mind the wonderful way in which America has repaid to France what Lafayette did for this country so many years ago.

"The sequel—the picture on which I have been working for the last months and in which I am again starring Miss Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln—is on a more elaborate scale, and when I set out creating it I had in my mind the great unpayable debt we owe to those who have made the great sacrifice, who have died in Flanders and in other parts of France.

"It is, however, not a sad picture. On the contrary, I feel sure that those who will see it will not weep with sorrow; they will rather shed tears of joy for the wonderful deeds, the wonderful sacrifices they will see enacted. I spent many sleepless nights thinking out this picture, which has been the ambition of my life, and often looked at the stars in heaven as I was hearing of the wonderful sacrifices our soldiers and your soldiers were making for the freedom of the world and it seemed to me as if for every life given in France a new, glorious star appeared in heaven.

"I thought of the American flag—'Old Glory'—which was winning victories, and out of these thoughts came the title of my film, 'Stars of Glory,' suggesting every single thought, each single idea I had put in this picture. 'Stars of Glory' certainly conveys not only the glorious deeds of your American soldiers, the way they have carried the flag to victory; it suggests the victory of the world; it suggests the recompense that has been given 'The Service Stars'; in short 'Stars of Glory' suggests what I wanted to convey in my film—Victory, Freedom and Peace."

Gaumont Announces Territorial Sales.

The Gaumont Company announces that its thrilling twenty-reel photo-serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," will be handled in Greater New York, Westchester County, Long Island and Northern New Jersey by Liberty Exchanges, Inc., of 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City.

C. W. Brill, of Akron, Ohio, has purchased the rights for Northern Ohio. The distribution will be made by the Sterling Film Service Co., 310 Sloan Building, Cleveland, Ohio. The semi-weekly independent news reels, the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic will be handled in Michigan in future by The Metropolitan Company, of Detroit, in association with the Detroit Free Press.

Pioneer Secures First Screencraft Production

THE Pioneer Film Corporation announces they will release "The Prodigal Wife," made by the Screencraft Company, under the direction of Frank Reicher. This production stars Mary Boland, and the supporting cast includes Lucy Cotton, who has made a name for herself in many recent Broadway productions. The story is an adaptation of "Flaming Ramparts," by Edith Barnard Delano, which appeared in "Harper's Magazine." It is said to be an absorbing tale of mother love, a story that will hold the interest of all those who see it and furnish entertainment of a high quality.

Following the releasing of "The Prodigal Wife" the Pioneer Company will place on the market a feature starring Mollie King, which is now in the making, but which has not been named as yet.

"Wives of Men," starring Florence Reed, which the company also released, has been booked for a week's run at all of the Poli theatres in New England. As a rule features are only shown at these houses for a three days' run. Through the recently opened Pioneer offices in Cleveland, "Wives of Men" has been booked for a week's run at the Miles Theatre in that city.

State Right Films Prove Their Worth

STATE right pictures have been proving their worth during the recent epidemic," says Leon Schlesinger, special representative of the Manxman company. "I have just visited some of the Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa theatres unaffected by the closing ban, and find that although exhibitors were deprived of new pictures they were working state right pictures pretty hard, and in many instances making money. Of course even in this 'open' section business was affected because many people were afraid to attend even though no ban had been ordered. Exhibitors were not looking to make money, therefore they were glad to meet expenses. This they were able to do according to the strength of the state right picture. And the good ones got the business. I think we can include 'The Manx-Man' among the latter. But don't let our publicity man send out any 'Crowds turned away' story. No one will believe it. It is enough that in such a time theatres can turn to independent pictures and manage to stay in business with their aid."

Special Representatives Weiner and Pelzman, who were recalled from the New England and Ohio territories, respectively, when the epidemic commenced to rage, have been sent back by Sales Director J. L. Kempner, who feels that conditions have been restored to normal.

Employ Returned Soldiers Advocates Leonce Perret

LEONCE PERRET, head of the Perret Productions, Inc., whose productions include the patriotic film "La Fayette We Come," and the victory film "Stars of Glory," starring Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, has just made the following statement:

"With the millions of boys to be once more employed in civilian life, I think it is of the greatest importance that every business should co-operate and try to employ as many returned soldiers as possible, giving even preference to those who have been wounded.

Leonce Perret.

"Perret Productions, Inc., have already several discharged and wounded French soldiers in its employ, and I am resolved in future to only employ soldiers who have come back from the front. This is only following the example of France, where preference is always given to the wounded soldiers whenever a position is to be filled.

"I hope that all leading producing firms in America will try to give as much work as possible to the returned soldiers, as in this event we shall have done something to solve 'the big, important labor problem' with which we shall be confronted."

Unique Paper for "Beyond the Law."

To help exhibitors in exploiting "Beyond the Law" the Southern Feature Film Corporation has prepared striking lobby display and posters. Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet and a 24-sheet drawn by high class artists have been prepared. A press sheet containing advertising helps, together with much press material, has been gotten up, so that when "Beyond the Law" comes to his theatre he will be in a position to get the most out of it.

It is said that only prominent independent buyers will handle this picture, although no definite announcement of the names of the distributors has been made.

W. H. Official Speaks of Ince and Sennett Reissues

AN official of the W. H. Productions Company reiterates the fact that the old adage regarding "the survival of the fittest" applies equally well to the screen as to other walks of life, and in this connection calls attention to the productions which they are reissuing. These were made some time ago by Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince, both of whom still rank high in their respective lines of film production.

About four or five years ago when Mr. Ince made his first Kay Bee Western dramas, he was acclaimed as being in advance of his time, and a notable fact was that his pictures were finished before they were begun, paradoxical as this may seem, as it was his method to work out the story completely, including suspense, climaxes, etc., before starting on a production, and not to follow the plan then in vogue with certain directors, of shooting a scene here and there and patching up the best story obtainable from these situations.

At about the same time Mack Sennett became famous as a comedy producer his name in the motion picture industry came to be almost synonymous with comedy. While Mr. Ince developed such stars as Charles Ray, Clara Williams, Rhea Mitchell, Richard Stanton, Anna Little and Sessue Hayakawa, who appear in the reissued W. H. Productions, it was under Mr. Sennett's direction that many of the leading comedy screen actors of to-day made their appearance, including the "one and only" Charlie Chaplin, Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle, Mack Swain, Syd Chaplin, Ford Sterling and Chester Conklin.

The W. H. Productions Company are now reissuing about fifty-eight of the single reel Mack Sennett Comedies, in two series, under the brand names of Liberty and Eagle, while the Kay-Bee Western dramas are being reissued in two series of fifteen each, under the brand names of Columbia and Union. The Kay-Bee subjects are in two reels each.

It is announced that the territories are being sold rapidly, and the pictures offered on such a basis as to provide a minimum of cost and maximum of box office receipts for the exhibitor.

Stolen Orders Goes Big in South.

William A. Brady's big production, "Stolen Orders," which is being handled in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas by the Southwestern Film Corporation of Dallas has proven a big money maker for exhibitors in the South, according to an official of that company. Opening at Zoe Theatre in Houston, for a seven day's engagement, followed by a week's engagement at the Hippodrome Theatre in Dallas at admission prices of 50 cents, this production scored a big success. The new L. & A. Theatre in El Paso, one of the finest in Texas, has selected "Stolen Orders" as its opening attraction. In addition this picture has been selected as the opening attraction for the New Liberty Theatre, controlled by the Jefferson Amusement Company of Beaumont, opening November 9, and the new Princess Theatre at Orange, Tex. It is said that never before has a state right production proven so popular among exhibitors as in that territory.

Gaumont News Shows Peace Celebration

Current issue of Gaumont News, No. 34, released November 12, shows how, after the keyed-up tension of the war period, the whole country went wild with enthusiasm when the news came on November 11 that Germany had accepted the armistice terms. Monster spontaneous celebrations were held in all parts of the United States and many scenes showing the joy of the people at the victorious outcome of the war are shown.

This issue of the News also shows, among the other topics of timely interest, how the soldiers are entertained in the many Liberty theatres which have been erected in the cantonments for their pleasure.

Gaumont Graphic has the usual quota of current news events. The opening by President Wilson in Washington of the drive of the United War Work campaign to raise $170,000,000 for the welfare of our boys on the other side are pictured, while views from abroad show some of the things the boys did to hasten the decision of the enemy to return to their own country.

Newspapers Praise Brady's Production, "Little Women"

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S picturization of Louisa Alcott's well known story, "Little Women," which had its premiere at the Strand Theatre, New York, during the past week, enjoyed unusual business and received enthusiastic comments from the New York newspapers.

It was hailed by the Evening Sun as "the top notch in photoplay achievement, and is one of the most satisfactory pictures ever produced," while the Tribune says: "It stands alone as a signal success in transferring to the screen with all its charm, wholesome human and appealing qualities one of the best love stories told on the printed page." "The story is acted most sympathetically and the production created an impression that few motion pictures have done in a long time. So absorbed and responsive was yesterday's audience that the picture should draw full houses at every performance," says the Telegram. The Times reviewer says: "Admirers of the original 'Little Women' will find delight in the animated illustrations of the story." "Audience cried and laughed over it," says the American, and the World said: "Stirs heart interest; has homely sentiment and genuine appeal."

The Telegraph's notice states: "Whether or not one had read 'Little Women,' which for forty years has been read and loved the world over, this screen presentation should be seen," while the Herald says: "Praise of tears won by photoplay 'Little Women'; filled with fun and good nature," and the Journal of Commerce remarks that it is "A delightful photoplay, will linger in the memory of everyone. Cast is excellent."

The millions who have found delight in the story of Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy can now see these famous "little women" on the screen, and in these days when there is a constant cry for wholesome stories this screen adaptation should be welcome. It is a story which has endured through the years and been translated into practically every language that has a printed literature.

Harley Knoles directed the production and received the enthusiastic co-operation of the Alcott Memorial Committee, and the surviving members of the Alcott family, who displayed a personal interest in the screen version, which was produced at the Alcott homestead in Concord, New Hampshire.

Jo is portrayed by Dorothy Bernard, Meg by Isabel Lamon, Beth by Lillian Hall and Amy by Florence Flinn, while Henry Hull, well known to both the stage and screen, appears as John Brooke, and Conrad Nagel as Laurie.

First Dalton Picture Is Now Ready for Release

EMMETT Dalton, general manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, producers of "Beyond the Law," announces that the production will be ready for release November 26.

"Beyond the Law" is an adaptation from the original story which appeared in serial form in a prominent magazine. Mr. Dalton was beset with tempting offers by producers to make a motion picture version of the story, but he wanted to make the picture himself, interested outside capital, and with the assistance of Theodore Marsten produced the picture.

The story is founded on the exploits of Emmet and his three brothers, who were at one time known as "bad men." Emmett Dalton successfully portrays the roles of his two brothers.

It is said that no expense has been spared in making the picture. The scenes, laid amid the land of cactus and shrubbery, provide a "local color" which breathes of the West.

The picture is now ready for a public screening, the date of which will be announced soon.

Lincoln Makes Statement on Joining S-L Pictures

AS announced in our last issue, E. K. Lincoln is to be starred in a series of special productions made by S-L Pictures under the personal direction of Ralph Ince. Mr. Lincoln has expressed his gratification at being associated with this new concern under Mr. Ince and further states:

"Big films are the only thing to-day. I have always wanted to be associated with an independent producing organization which has the courage to break away from a certain scheduled number of releases, and whose aim is solely to produce films of stupendous importance. Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Lubin both have the right idea, not to make many, but to make good pictures.

"The part which I play in the first special offers me the biggest opportunity I have ever had to portray American manhood in its ideal form. We are all bound to secrecy as to the topic of the picture. I can only say that its theme is far-reaching and of international importance, and I think it is the greatest scenario I have ever read.

"Years ago I was under Mr. Ince's direction at the Vitagraph studios. I have always been an ardent admirer of his artistry and I consider him one of the greatest directors of the day. He has a fine perception for the dramatic, a keen insight into human nature, and the most perfect sense of the fine points of detail that I have ever observed in a director."

In speaking of Mr. Lincoln's connection with S-L Pictures, Mr. Ince says: "In E. K. Lincoln we have captured a star of the first magnitude. His first appearance in pictures was under my direction, and I have always entertained a very high opinion of his abilities and purposes. I have watched his work for a long time with keen interest and feel that he has few if any rivals in sustained interpretation of all that is fine and virile in American manhood.

New Distribution Plan for Ford Mystery Serial

FROM the office of Hiller & Wilk, Longacre Building, New York, comes a further announcement regarding the new Francis Ford Serial, "The Silent Mystery." Since his last multi-reel picture Mr. Ford and director has been besieged with requests for another "Ford Serial." Gathering a large and well known cast of players, Mr. Ford, in addition to assuming the direction, plays the male lead, with Mae Gaston and Rosemary Theby opposite.

Each new episode is said to reveal a number of thrilling stunts, that have never been attempted before. The mystery is not only sustained, but it strengthens the plot and develops amazingly tense situations. An Egyptian priestess seeking to recover a sacred jewel stolen from a pagan temple; an uncanny taloned hand; a murder mystery that casts suspicion upon most of the principal characters; a soulless creature that passes from the control of its creator, are among the novelties. Francis Ford appears in his popular character of Phil Kelley, Secret Service man, globe-trotter and all-round athlete. The love theme is developed through a series of adventures, there being ample scope for Mae Gaston as Betty, the heroine, while Rosemary Theby is cast as the Egyptian Princess Kah. Among the effective scenes is one in which the uncanny hand siezes the heroine by the hair, draws her up to an unknown fate. Electrical devices play an important part as thrill providers. An instance is the destruction of a submarine by a wireless device. Peter Gerald, who has appeared as assistant to Francis Ford in a number of feature releases, has the same part in "The Silent Mystery."

Hiller & Wilk announce that an entirely new distributing plan has been worked out which will insure generous and unusual profits to bookers of "The Silent Mystery." Details will be disclosed soon and the industry waits with interest the details of their "something entirely new" in serial distribution.

Bacon-Backer Production Featured at the Rialto

THE latest Bacon-Backer offering, "A Woman's Experience," enjoyed a pre-release booking during the past week at the Rialto Theatre, New York, and Manager S. L. Rothapfel states that it is one of the best pictures he has ever booked, and desires more Bacon-Backer productions of the same calibre. This production is said to have enjoyed excellent business during the entire week, which was one of the biggest from a box office standpoint in the history of the house.

The production is a screen version of Paul M. Potter's successful play, "Agnes," and Mary Boland, who is well known for her excellent dramatic work, is the star, appearing in the role of Agnes Roydant, Sam Hardy, who is also an experienced actor, appears in the role of George Roydant.

The story is strongly dramatic and tells how a young couple from the country gets into the social whirl in New York and barely escapes moral destruction. Agnes enters society, while George, her husband, becomes engrossed in speculation. Agnes becomes entangled in an affair with an English nobleman, who falls into the clutches of a vampire. The climax comes when Agnes faces her desperate husband in her own room into which her admirer has forced his way and unintentionally takes a dose of poison. Agnes narrowly escapes being suspected of aiding in his death. The husband and wife realize their mistakes and go back to the old peaceful life of the country.

The role of Agnes is said to suit Miss Boland's personality, and she portrays the different moods with convincing skill, the emotional scenes surrounding the nobleman's tragic death being expressed with depth of feeling and finished dramatic art.

The remainder of the exceptional cast which has been provided for this picture includes Lawrence McGill as Nicholas Barrable; Robert Cain as Lord Sulgrave, Corinne Uzzell as Attilie Damuron and Bradley Barkey as Rufford. Edward Earle is responsible for the photography, while Perry Vekroff directed the production.

Gentlemen:--

We enclose our check to pay for our subscription renewal for another year, as per the invoice enclosed, and ask that you see that we do not miss a single copy of the magazine, because we keep a complete file of them for reference, and we cannot afford to have a single number missing.

We would not think or running a picture show without having your magazine as a ready guide and reference to the business, because we get lots of help and information from it.

We believe we had received every number of it from its birth to the present time, and as long as we stay in the business, we expect to keep it. In fact, we don't think we would want to do without it, no matter what we do in the future.

STRAND THEATRE, DORCHESTER, OPENS

New House Is One of the Most Beautiful Amusement Places in Boston's Suburbs—Gordon Circuit Management

THE Strand Theatre, a very large picture house in the suburbs of Boston, and one of the most beautiful and best equipped theatres ever built, was opened in a blaze of glory on the evening of Monday, November 11. It is located at Upham's Corner, in the Dorchester district of Boston.

The Strand Theatre is under the management of the Gordon circuit, which has the exclusive first showings in Dorchester of Paramount, Artcraft, Fox, Select and Gordon-Mayer Film Corporation pictures.

Under the personal direction of Nathan H. Gordon, the first night's bill proved to be all that had been advertised. On the double feature program was Annette Kellerman, in "Queen of the Sea"; Marguerite Clark, in "Out of a Clear Sky," and Miss Emilie Earle, in "The Songstress De Luxe."

The new picture house is the only theatre in Greater Boston seating 3,000. Under each seat is a fresh air ventilator. It is the only theatre in Boston with a Hope-Jones $75,000 organ.

Architecturally the Strand is most attractive. The orchestra and single balcony seat 3,000 in comfortable chairs, each having a perfect view of the screen. Beautiful boxes adorn each side of the interior and pretty hangings and tasteful decorations make the playhouse completely individual. Outside, free parkings have been provided for a large number of motor cars. Arthur Mantell, a well known motion picture interpreter, is organist.

Big Bookings on "Shoulder Arms."

Charlie Chaplin, in "Shoulder Arms," opened to tremendous business in New England this week. The bookings were close to a new record for Chaplin releases. In Boston the following leading houses booked the popular Chaplin release: Loew's Globe, Keith's Boston Theatre, Gordon's Washington Street Olympia, Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia, Fenway, Loew's Orpheum, Bowdoin Square, Beacon, Modern, Franklin Park, and a number of smaller houses.

Two Lexington Theatres Raise Prices.

THE Ben Ali and Strand theatres, Lexington, Ky., after working along on the ten-cent admission basis for months after most theatres went to fifteen and twenty cents, recently got together and decided in the future admission would be twenty cents.

Keeps Force Intact During Epidemic.

The Big Features Rights Corporation, Louisville, represents one of the few organizations that has kept its force intact during the epidemic. This concern has paid all employes, road men, office and shop workers full salaries, and kept every employe on the payroll. A number of the houses kept managers and one or two men, but musicians, machine operators and general house employes have been hustling for themselves. Many of them have been working on construction of Camp Knox, at Stithton, Ky., where day laborers are being paid thirty-five cents an hour.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, head of the Arrow Film Corporation, recently paid a visit to Louisville, where he called on the Big Features Rights Corporation, which has booked several Arrow productions.

Brief Items.

A. C. Farrel, manager of the Louisville office of the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., recently went to Indianapolis, where he spent the greater part of a week in the district office, where a number of hinging matters were straightened out.

The Majestic Theatre is being redecorated inside as well as out, and when the ban is lifted will be even more handsome than in the past, when it was regarded as the finest theatre in the state, and one of the best in the South.

Cincinnati Trade Letter

Havlin on the Closing Order.

MANAGER JOHN H. HAVLIN, of the Grand Opera House, and proprietor of the Hotel Havlin, both in Cincinnati, was, by reason of both of these business connections, a considerable loser by the epidemic of influenza, or, rather, by the enforced closing of the theatres and the limited business permitted to the cafes. He presented the views of many people on this matter very forcibly in a letter on the subject, following the discovery, toward the end of the month of closing, of 150 new cases in a suburban convent. Mr. Havlin said:

"The Grand, together with all other theatres, churches, schools, picture houses and saloons, has been closed by order of the Cincinnati Board of Health for five weeks on account of the epidemic. I am under heavy expense operating the Grand, and also at the Havlin, and on account of the Grand and the cafe at the Havlin being closed I have lost considerable money. This is all right, and it should be, provided any good was accomplished in stamping out the epidemic; but yesteday the Board of Health met and received reports of 150 new cases being discovered, consequently continued the ban indefinitely.

"Now to the point: These 150 people did not get the influenza at the churches, because the churches were closed. They did not get it at the schools, because the schools were closed. They did not get it in theatres or picture houses, because they were all closed. Where did they get it? It appears to me that the Board of Health has closed the wrong places. Other cities that closed the places of amusement, churches, etc., after Cincinnati did, found out their mistake and have raised the ban. I would suggest that inasmuch as the closing of the above-named places has not stopped the influenza in this city the Board of Health look further for the cause, and raise the ban on churches, schools, etc."

Many others took the same view, criticism being especially vigorous against the failure of the Board to declare and enforce quarantine measures against persons suffering from the disease, so that visitors to influenza patients were permitted to spread the disease everywhere. In other words, as one leading exhibitor pointed out, the Board took the illogical course of restricting the general public and failing to restrict victims of the epidemic, and its measures were consequently almost futile.

Crowds Throng Theatres on Victory Day.

BUFFALO downtown moving picture theatres did a land office business Monday afternoon and evening, November 11, after official news was received here that an armistice had been signed with Germany. Mayor Buck, of this city, proclaimed a civic holiday on that date so that citizens could have a chance to indulge in jubilation. As the street celebration was not organized thousands who found that there was no fixed program to amuse them soon grew tired of "the tickler wielders and confetti and flower throwers" and sought enjoyment in the picture houses. The exhibitors supplied patriotic pictures and music that at times caused the audiences to give vent to the wildest cheering.

Strand Had Good Reopening Bill.

To mark the reopening of the Strand Theatre, Buffalo, after the lifting of the influenza ban, Manager Crabb, of that house, gave his patrons a fine program of local pictures in addition to his regular bill. The program included patriotic scenes in Buffalo's Fourth Liberty Loan campaign as well as views of the local street car strike and a class rush of the University of Buffalo sophomores and freshmen. The Liberty Loan pictures showed scenes at Lafayette square, this city, where the memorial tablet with the names of Buffalo's soldier dead was dedicated. There were also pictures of the dedication of the Liberty Loan arch here, when eight wounded Yankee soldiers sent back from overseas to the army hospital at Fort Porter, Buffalo, were present.

DIGEST OF WEEK'S NEWS FROM DAYTON

Mark Gates Demonstrates His Ability as a Showman—Bert Fiala Still Suffering with Neuralgia

By Paul J. Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Gates Pulls a Novel Advertising Stunt.

MARK GATES, managing director of the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, took advantage of the excitement caused by the announcement on Thursday, November 7, that peace had been declared, and, incidentally, got away with a nice piece of free advertising that did more for the Dayton Theatre than any amount of paid advertising. About one hour after the news was announced the largest crowd in the history of Dayton thronged the streets, and it looked as though the streets would not accommodate all those who wanted to help celebrate. Airplanes from the three Government flying fields near Dayton flew over the town, doing fancy flying. Fire engines raced up and down the main thoroughfares to keep the streets clear and general pandemonium prevailed.

As soon as the news of the so-called signing had been announced, Mark Gates arranged for a series of numbers, all patriotic, to be played on the sidewalk directly in front of the theatre by the Dayton symphony orchestra. To say that a large crowd gathered to join in with the orchestra in the singing of patriotic songs and general jubilee would be putting the matter lightly, for the crowds literally swarmed around the theatre for about a square. All the local dailies carried an article about the thoughtfulness of Mr. Gates in doing this, and the publicity came in bunches. Not to be outdone in any way Mr. Gates secured a cameraman to take pictures of the event, and these were shown at the Dayton the same evening at seven o'clock along with other general views of the city where celebrating took place. It seemed as though every member of the large crowd that was within the range of the camera came to see how they looked in the movies, for the Dayton Theatre was packed on that memorable Thursday night as never before.

Theatres Thronged on Victory Day.

Monday, November 11, was a banner day for Dayton theatres, for although there were throngs of people on the streets celebrating many who were tired of the fun attended the theatres, and theatre managers were grateful. At the Dayton Theatre many things combined to bring the crowds that were in attendance throughout the day. No better attraction than "America's Answer" could have been shown to the loyal public anxious to see anything that treated of the war. A patriotic musical program was offered by the Dayton Symphony Orchestra to cheering crowds who joined in the singing of patriotic songs. The ban on children under sixteen years was lifted Monday morning, and at one o'clock the downtown theatres were filled with many young people who had not attended a theatre for five weeks. It is thought that the slump in business noticed since the reopening of the theatres will break away under the pressure of the armistice news.

Fiala of the Alhambra Still Ill.

Bert Fiala, owner and manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Dayton's leading suburban theatre, is still confined to his bed with a bad case of neuralgia. Mr. Fiala has not been at his theatre since the opening order went into effect. It is thought that he will be able to be up within a few days.

Takes Scenes of Peace Demonstration.

Although Mark Gates, managing director of the Dayton Theatre, put across a big scoop when the false news of the signing of the armistice had been given out Thursday, November 7, and secured pictures in the afternoon that were shown on the screen at the Dayton Theatre the same night at seven o'clock, he was not satisfied, and when the genuine news of the signing of the treaty came Monday, November 11, Mr. Gates had a camera man on the streets taking scenes of the general celebration, which were shown at the Dayton Monday evening.

Think Prohibition Will Help Theatres.

The recently passed prohibition law in Ohio will help theatres in general, if the word of one of Dayton's most prominent managers counts for anything. Although not wanting his name made known, this man stated that he thought that with the passing into effect of this new law business at theatres and other forms of amusements would jump considerably. It has been said that this actually happened in other states, but it remains to be seen whether or not the same will occur in the Buckeye state.

"Hearts of the World" at Memorial Hall.

Although it was thought that the Griffith film, "Hearts of the World," would play at the Dayton Theatre here, the film will open an engagement at Memorial Hall here next week. The Dayton Theatre management decided that they could not see their way clear to change the policy of the house for the "Hearts" run, and thus the switch.

Indianapolis News Letter

"Smile" Films for Indiana Soldiers.

A "HOME-MADE" motion picture is to be Indianapolis' Christmas gift to its fighting sons at the front. The local branch of the War Camp Community service has arranged to send to Indiana units "over there" a motion picture of their parents, wives and sweethearts, which will be made in the Hoosier capital on Sunday, November 10.

The present plans provide for a parade around the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, in which the marchers will pass the camera closely enough to be recognized when the picture is shown to the soldiers. To eliminate the possibility of ordinary curiosity seekers forcing their way into the line of march it has been decided to ask those who wish to take part in the picture to present a recent letter or envelope to the soldier they wish to represent.

Sanders Theatre Now Resembles New York's Rialto.

One of the most pretentious improvements made in motion picture houses in Indianapolis during the three-weeks shutdown was that in the Sanders Theatre, in Fountain Square. Fred Sanders, the owner, engaged Charles Reed, who decorated the Circle, to transform the theatre into a miniature reproduction of the famous Rialto in New York. Not only are the decorations new, but a new scenic lighting effect has been put in.

"I don't ever say much about my theatre, but I do believe that with the new decorations it is one of the prettiest neighborhood houses in the city," said Mr. Sanders.

Indiana Trade Letter

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

Circle Has New Scenic Effect for Screen.

THE closed period in Indianapolis gave the Circle an opportunity to create a new scenic effect for its screen. New hangings and a drop, all in Japanese tones, have supplanted the original settings. It is a beautiful creation and has drawn rounds of applause from the audience.

Film fans in Indianapolis feel that if the three weeks' enforced closing of the theatres of the city had anything to do with the bringing to the Circle of Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" picture, the closing was certainly justified. The Chaplin film is a "side-splitter," and, judging from the comment of those who saw it—and there were thousands of them—is believed to be the best comedy that has been presented in Indianapolis in many moons.

S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Circle, scored equally as big a hit with an advertisement of the Chaplin film which appeared in the daily papers on the day after Indianapolis had gone wild over the unfounded report that Germany had signed an armistice with the Allies. In a conspicuous place in the advertisement was the following:

"This is a war picture but it was not filmed by the United Press."

The humor of the advertisement was a matter of comment all over the city, and, no doubt, attracted many to the theatre who probably would not have gone—if it is possible that there were very many who had not previously done so.

Colonial Opens in New Dress.

The Colonial Theatre, Kokomo, Ind., was hardly recognized by former patrons when the house was reopened last week after the lifting of the state-wide closing ban. While being closed the entire inside of the theatre was painted and redecorated, a new system of lights was installed, as well as some new fall decorations in the form of flowers, leaves, etc., making it one of the cosiest little motion picture theatres in the state. The Colonial is now equipped with one large thirty-six inch exhaust fan and one thirty-inch blower, making a complete change of air every minute.

Esch Sells His Theatre Interests.

William Esch, of Laporte, Ind., proprietor of the Princess and Phoenix theatres, has sold his interest in the two properties to his partners, J. Levine and Sam Steinberg, and has resigned as manager of them. He has not announced his plans for the future. The Princess and Phoenix are two of the most popular motion picture theatres in the city.

Metropolitan to Handle Gaumont Weeklies.

The Metropolitan Company, 23 East Elizabeth St., Detroit, has arranged for the Michigan distribution of the Gaumont News and the Gaumont Graphic. Paramount Will Release Success Series.

Manager H. A. Ross, of the Detroit Paramount office, has been notified by the home office that he can go ahead and book the entire fifty-two pictures in the Success Series. Some time ago the company withdrew all releases after the twelfth picture. Manager Ross prevailed upon the home office not to abandon the Success Series, inasmuch as he had taken hundreds of bookings, and they finally decided to acquiesce in his demands.

Garson Resigns from Broadway-Strand.

Edgar Garson has resigned as house manager of the Broadway-Strand Theatre, Detroit, and is succeeded by George Cusick. Mr. Garson, who is a brother of Harry Garson, plans a road show with a big special picture made in Detroit. Phil J. Gleichman, managing director of the theatre, promoted Mr. Cusick, who has been with the house for a number of years.

Soloists a Feature of First-Run Houses.

A big feature of the first-run theatres in Detroit is the soloists. The Broadway-Strand has Eddie McGrath, who has been there since the house opened. Henry Santrey is at the Regent; Frank Bessinger is at the Washington, and soloists from New York City alternate regularly at the Adams and Madison theatres.

Many Theatres Raise Prices.

Price raising of admission has become very popular in Detroit, especially with the smaller theatres. The Rex Theatre recently increased to 15 cents, and five other theatres on Detroit's west side raised from 10 to 15 cents at the same time by agreement. The Woodward Amusement Company has raised the price of its theatre No. 1 from 10 to 15 cents, with two cents additional for war tax. However these theatres are all giving better shows than formerly. So far there has been no complaint by the public.

Hyman Buys More State Right Films.

Arthur S. Hyman, of the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Owen building, Detroit, has purchased three new pictures for Michigan which he is ready to accept bookings on: "Wives of Men," "The Million Dollar Mystery," and "Her Husband's Friend." Mr. Hyman is getting ready to send out "Wives of Men" as a road attraction, playing percentage dates with exhibitors, using special newspaper advertising, paper and lobby display. Manager Hyman has five prints booked solid for weeks ahead on "Hearts of the World."

Weeks to St. Louis Paramount Office.

George Weeks, former assistant manager of the Detroit office of Paramount, has been transferred to the St. Louis exchange, where he has been appointed manager.

G. K. Hadow, who has been doing the booking, has been appointed assistant manager to succeed Mr. Weeks and Elmer Brient, formerly of the local publicity department, advances to city salesman.

Moss Succeeds Prince at Triangle.

H. K. Moss, for two years with the Triangle Distributing Corporation and for the past seven months at the Chicago exchange, succeeds Dave Prince as manager of the Detroit Triangle office. He arrived in Detroit Monday, November 11, to take full charge.

Lieut. Kleist Enlarges His Theatre Chain.

There has been quite a change in the theatrical situation of Pontiac, Mich. Lieut. A. J. Kleist, operating the Howland and Eagle theatres, has taken over the Central and the New Oakland, giving him every theatre in the town. Helmer George, former owner of the Central and Oakland, plans to re-enter the show business on a big scale in Detroit. Lieut. Kleist has returned to Camp Lewis, Washington, where he is stationed, and during his absence from Pontiac his affairs will be looked after by Mrs. Kleist, and George Wilbur, formerly of the Majestic Theatre, Wyandotte, who has been appointed managing director as well as house manager of the Oakland. The latter house is brand new, seating about 1,800, built amphitheatre in style. It is Mr. Kleist's intention to play vaudeville in the Howland, and pictures in the remaining three theatres.

Leading Theatres Sign Vitagraph.

Among the leading Detroit theatres recently to have signed for Vitagraph star series productions are: Ferry Field, Gladwin Park, Lakewood, Knickerbocker, Maxine and Your.

Well Known Film Men Die.

A. T. Campbell, for the past six months salesman in Michigan, and who formerly conducted the Strand Theatre in Escanaba and the Grand Theatre in Menominee, died recently at his home in Cincinnati of influenza.

Charles J. Nevison, manager of the Del-The Theatre, Detroit, passed away at the Homeopathic Hospital, Ann Arbor, November 9, following an operation for goitre. He was buried from his home in Dundee.

Majestic Abandons Vaudeville.

Col. W. S. Butterfield has inaugurated a change in policy at the Majestic Theatre, Kalamazoo. Vaudeville has been abandoned and hereafter it will be for pictures exclusively. Ed Beatty will book it, as one of the Butterfield houses, while Mr. Brown is the house manager, succeeding Frank O'Donnell.

Detroit Short Items.

Pete Smith, formerly manager of the State Film Company, and recently with George Kleine, has been appointed Vitagraph salesman in Michigan. He will cover the territory formerly handled by A. T. Campbell.

A. J. Reed, of the George Kleine System, has moved from the third floor of the Film Exchange Building to the fifth floor with the General Film Company, from where all future distribution will be done. Mr. Reed continues in full charge of the selling and will be the Kleine representative in this territory, as he has been in the past.

Those who have visited the Detroit office of the United Theatre Equipment Company in the past week noticed a big change. Manager Ernest M. Forbes has moved the offices to the front of the store, thus making it more convenient for the employes and those calling on business. It's a big change for the better.

"America's Answer" at the Gordon.

"AMERICA'S ANSWER" was shown last week at the Gordon, which opened for the first time in months to show this film. It played to capacity during the entire run. Department stores cooperated in the publicity by running panels in their newspaper advertising. Army aviators dropped literature about it as they flew over the peace-day paraders. On Monday night the entire training battalion from the Kodak Park School of Aerial Photography, headed by their band, marched to the Gordon and were guests of the management. The sixty-piece band rendered some stirring music as the equally stirring scenes were shown. On Tuesday night hundred of girls in bloomers from one of the large amunition factories paraded to the theatre. Before the film opened it was shown at a pre-view to federal, state and city officials.

Stoeffel to Enlarge the Grand Theatre.

Joe Stoeffel, of the Grand Theatre, is celebrating peace. Joe says that with the war over he hopes the War Industries Board will be good enough to release men and material for the addition to his theatre. The Grand is centrally located downtown and was built on the one-story plan. At one time it flourished under the direction of George L. Tyler, but changes of management sent the place to the discard. Since Stoeffel took over the house a year ago it has regained all of its old-time popularity. Stoeffel has used all of the originality and genius that enabled him to acquire a string of picture houses in Western New York towns and has built up a strong clientele. He believes that he could do better by building a balcony and making other additions to the house.

Huber Back at His Desk.

Some time ago it was stated that Erwin J. W. Huber, treasurer and managing editor of The Pictureplay News, was taking up some options on several neighborhood houses. Since that time Mr. Huber has been ill with pneumonia and has only recently returned to his office. He now admits that his rumored actions were entirely correct and that he has plans for getting into the game in several sections. He says, however, that he does not expect to do any great things immediately, preferring to wait a little for the better times of peace.

BOOST CLEANLINESS OF YOUR THEATRE

Triangle's Philadelphia Manager Says Publicity of This Kind Will Overcome Patrons' Fear of Epidemic

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

W. J. HAGERTY, manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, whose former connection with several theatres and knowledge of publicity qualifies him to speak, gives some enlightening remarks on how to induce the patrons of the theatres to return with confidence, after the influenza epidemic has ceased.

"The average motion picture theatre," says Mr. Hagerty, "has neglected one of the most potent and valuable methods of restoring the confidence of its patrons. The fact that you are playing a big production is not always suffcient to arouse a desire strong enough to overcome the fear that a person has in attending a crowded theatre. Self preservation is the first law of nature, and before the motion-picture patrons will return they must be assured that there is no danger from any germs that may lurk in the theatre.

"If the proper publicity were given to the fact that the air in most theatres is purer than the air in many homes, that it is changed every three minutes by a well-nigh perfect ventilation system, that the use of disinfectants and various sanitary measures make the theatre beyond reproach as far as cleanliness and personal safety are concerned, if the parallel is drawn between the fetid air found in various places like railroad trains, trolley cars, department stores and even churches, if the thought is impressed that a particular theatre is desirable not only for its entertaining value, but also for the safety and comfort of its patrons, very little complaint could be made as to the falling off in the attendance due to the fear of influenza.

"The present crisis demands more than the average publicity. In other words, it is necessary not only for the exhibitor to impress the quality and value of his production on the public's mind, he should bring out the particular merits of his theatre above his competitor's who may not run as fine a house as he. It is a valuable weapon—publicity—in fighting almost anything, and if handled in the proper way will destroy all fear of the epidemic, but above and beyond all publicity should be designed to restore the confidence of the people in your particular theatre in regard to ventilation and sanitary measures."

"Shoulder Arms" Takes City by Storm.

Charles Chaplin, in "Shoulder Arms," now playing in Philadelphia's leading theatres, is taking this city by storm and is supplying a long felt want in the way of recreation and entertainment to the majority of belated movie fans. Reports from the Colonial, Atlantic City, and Stanley, Palace, Arcadia, and Victoria, state that in most every instance the crowds turned away would easily have filled another theatre of the same capacity.

Cater to the Desires of Your Patrons.

Frank W. Buhler, manager director of the Stanley and Central Market Street companies' theatres, states that the conditions following the influenaz epidemic have had a serious influence upon the theatres, and one from which they are at present extricating themselves with extreme difficulties. A general increase in prices of admission has greatly aided in restoring some sort of equilibrium which is slowly but surely giving the desired results. Mr. Buhler is pleased with the prospects of the present and future releases, which he predicts will assure exhibitors of having a good up-to-date program for their theatres. Business is bound to be restored to a marked degree if the exhibitors will only cater to the tastes of the patrons instead of trying to hunt bargains in film productions. The chain of theatres under the direction of Mr. Buhler extend from New York to Philadelphia and Atlantic City, and are being operated under the most careful consideration for the comforts of its patrons. Trivial improvements which the average exhibitor would generally hesitate to make have been frequently made under Mr. Buhler's orders, with the result always being apparent in the box office receipts.

Wreath Succeeds Flintom at Paramount.

P. C. WREATH, recently manager for Paramount-Artcraft at St. Louis, has been appointed manager for Kansas City territory, succeeding the late A. D. Flintom. George W. Weeks, formerly of the corporation's Detroit office, succeeds Mr. Wreath at St. Louis. There is no change in the organization at Kansas City, Mr. Toothaker continuing as sales manager. Mr. Wreath has been connected with Paramount since its organization. He joined Mr. Flintom's forces in 1907, and is therefore one of the older men in this territory in point of service. His appointment is a source of pleasure to Kansas City territory exhibitors, and to exchange managers also.

Robertson's Circular Brings Results.

Richard Robertson, manager of Goldwyn at Kansas City, has got real and immediate results from literature prepared and sent out during the influenza period. A large circular was printed, to be folded and sent without envelope. On the address side were these words:

First—War! (Taxes—Thousands of young men absent from their communities—economy—conservation.)
Now—Influenza! (Theatres closed and the public timid of crowds.)
Stand By, Men!!

That most recipients opened the circular with this startling announcement on the outside is evidenced by the large proportion of exhibitors who mailed the return postcard—such postcard, which had only to be detached from the circular, bearing the requisite two-cent stamp. The response exceeded fifty per cent. The contents of the circular urged the exhibitors to tackle the problem courageously, and to start out aggressively after business when reopening was possible. Goldwyn service was suggested as one best bet in the opening attractions. The card index system installed during the enforced "vacation" was used effectively in arranging follow-ups for the responses.

Eisner to Assist in Management of Doric.

A. M. Eisner, formerly with William L. Sherry Service, has become associated with George W. Curtis in the management of the Doric Theatre. This theatre started just before the influenza ban was imposed—so that upon the removal of the ban it has a chance to make an especially effective introduction of itself to the public. Mr. Curtis is preparing an especially good news reel for the reopening—which is delayed for the entire removal of the ban—and this will be a leading attraction of the theatre regularly. The first news reel will have the advantage of numerous features, including several parades, not the least of which is the great peace celebration.

Denies Right to Dictate Prices.

A Kansas City exhibitor is preparing proceedings against local exchanges which will bring to an issue the alleged discrimination on the subject of admission prices. It is charged that some exchanges have refused to make contracts unless the admission price is at least fifteen cents. The exhibitor is planning proceedings which may involve damages for breach of contract, for refusal to make contracts, and may also involve steps to oust the exchanges from the state. Depositions are now being arranged for, which will disclose the agreements and the position of the exchanges with reference to selling service to this exhibitor and others. A point involved is the alleged advantage to downtown first-run houses, in restrictions that suburban houses must charge at least fifteen cents for the pictures.

Kansas City Has a Woman Booker.

Miss B. M. Brown, assistant manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Kansas City, Mo., is one of the women who is making good in executive positions in this city. She has the distinction of being the only "lady booker" in Kansas City exchanges, for that is part of her duty in her office. Miss Brown entered the film business as assistant manager of the Foursquare office here.

Doric Displays War Work Posters.

While most of the theatre fronts in Kansas City presented mere blanks to the passerby, the Doric and the Wonderland caught the eye. At the Doric the panels usually occupied by posters advertising the show were occupied by posters of the United War Work campaign. The Wonderland, which has a large outside lobby closed during idle periods with a gate, placed in this lobby in easy view of the public a large map of the war area. This map was constantly observed by a crowd —and from a distance the street in front of the theatre presented its usual aspect —though the people were standing and not entering the theatre.

With the Exhibitors.

Burlington, Ia.—Robert Tray will remodel his moving picture theatre in this city in the near future.

Burlington, Ia.—The Jewel Moving Picture Theatre will be remodeled soon. Joseph Miller is the manager.

Eureka Springs, Ark.—Mrs. Lonnie Gibson has purchased the picture show at Berryville and will take charge of the business.

Baxter Springs, Kan.—John Tindale, manager of the Elite Theatre, has volunteered for war work, and in his absence his father-in-law, Mr. McGruder, will have charge of the business.

Benefit for Relief of Musicians.

The City of Regina has promised the free use of the city auditorium for a benefit recital for members of the Musicians' Union who have suffered because of the closing of theatres in Regina. It has been suggested that permission could be granted for the holding of the benefit performance on the evening previous to the reopening of theatres, the date of which has not yet been determined. The musicians asked for some financial relief, such as a rebate of theatre license fees. The city came back with the suggestion of a benefit recital in which the musicians themselves could participate.

Griffith Film at St. Francais Theatre.

The St. Francais Theatre, Montreal, was reopened for a temporary engagement, the attraction being "Hearts of the World." This feature was due for a run of three weeks under the direction of Manager Conway, formerly in charge of the Gayety Burlesque Theatre in Montreal. This was the house which was reopened for one day when the closing order of the Board of Health came along. The new Allen Theatre in Westmount reopened with its regular policy of three changes of pictures each week and no Sunday shows. The Allen had "Hearts of the World" as its first attraction at special prices before the closure was applied on October 6.

DRESSES LOBBY TO REPRESENT HADES

Manager of the Strand, Ottawa, Devises Striking Display to Boom Showing of "To Hell with the Kaiser"

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

HERB JENNINGS, manager of the Strand Theatre, Ottawa, Ont., employed many methods of showmanship to boom the presentation of "To Hell with the Kaiser" in his theatre during the week of November 11, which was reopening week in Ottawa after five weeks of darkness.

Jennings had a special lobby display, consisting of a representation of Hades, with the Kaiser in the very thickest of the heat. Hanging suspended in the lobby was a periscope, and a passerby, taking a look, discovered the Kaiser's portrait and a line advising the people to see "To Hell With the Kaiser." To one side was a small table on which was placed thousands of cards enclosed in envelopes bearing the words "Good Dope—Dr. Joy." On the cards was the printed advice "Keep Your Feet Dry; See 'To Hell With the Kaiser' at the Strand, week of November 11, and then buy Victory Bonds."

Without a word to anyone Jennings also built a horse-drawn float showing the Kaiser behind the bars of a cage and the inscription of the picture's title. He held this in reserve until official word that an armistice had been signed would be received. Then he intended to spring the float for the inevitable peace parade and demonstration.

Jennings also secured the indorsement of the Ottawa branch of the Army and Navy War Veterans for the picture and secured the free service of the band of the organization for a demonstration.

On the Saturday night before the opening the manager of the Strand conducted an open-air "slide show" in the wide lobby of his theatre with the aid of a stereopticon machine. Slides of various sorts, advertising both coming attractions and the theatres, were shown on a small screen.

When the theatre reopened the doorman turned out with a thrilling comic opera dress uniform while another attendant was dressed as a sailor.

In addition to all these stunts Jennings used extra space in the Ottawa Journal for the engagement.

Allen to Make Weekly Change on Mondays

With the reopening of Toronto theatres after the epidemic lay-off of two weeks, Manager Greene of the Allen Theatre, the large downtown house, dropped the plan of making weekly changes on Saturdays in place of the usual Mondays. It was decided to change the bills on Mondays to conform with the policy of all other houses. The idea of changes on Saturdays was pursued throughout the summer and fall months—until the plaque came along. It was found that the plan had several advantages but a number of disadvantages. The policy is practical only with a first-run theatre, but a day's booking was lost before the pictures shown were passed along to the second-run house. It is also intimated that the plan did not help the patronage at the theatre on Mondays to any great extent even though the attractions had the advantage of early and exclusive reviews in local newspapers.

Futuristic Lobby Display at the Holman.

A highly interesting lobby display effect was secured by Manager Harry Pomeroy of the Holman Theatre, Montreal, for the four-day run of "A Society Sensation," starring Carmel Myers, starting Monday, November 11. All the special signs, cards and cut-outs were done in a black and white futuristic effect that gave the theatre front a very different appearance. The chosen style consisted of slanting black and white stripes. The black and white reopening announcement cards harmonized with the general effect.

Outdoor Shows Boosted Bond Sales.

Through the holding of the three outdoor shows in front of the Allen Theatre, Toronto, for the Fifth Canadian Victory Loan campaign, when numerous loan pictures were presented while the theatre itself was closed, bonds to the extent of $120,000 were sold, it has been announced. On the Saturday night, when the third outdoor demonstration was staged by the Allens, $45,000 worth of bonds were sold. Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen themselves took an active part in the demonstration and made many bond purchases themselves.

Exhibitors Pay Employes During Ban.

A number of Toronto exhibitors saw fit to keep all their employes on full pay during the epidemic shutdown. In this respect an interesting case was that of W. A. Bailie, manager of the Cum-Bac Theatre, Dovercourt Road, Toronto. Mr. Bailie decided to pay his operator and organist during the lay-off. A few days after the start of the closing period Bailie was notified by his landlord that the rent for the current month would be rebated to the extent of 50 per cent. The rebate exactly covered the salaries which Bailie was paying for the two weeks.

Other Toronto exhibitors who were reported to have paid full salaries during the lay-off included Manager Alexander, of the Park Theatre; Dr. Richardson, of the Crown Theatre, and R. S. Tickner, of the Revue Theatre, Roncesvalles avenue.

May Now Lift Ban on Hearst's Films.

Now that the war is over, Canadian exchange companies are waiting with interest to see what action will be taken by the Dominion Government with regard to news pictures controlled or marketed under the name of William Randolph Hearst, whose newspapers and films have been under the ban in Canada for many months. The news that Hearst had acquired the Universal weeklies and the Mutual Screen Telegram was soon received in Toronto. With the end of the war it is thought possible the International News reels may be admitted into the country, although they will be subject to censorship in the usual manner. Pathe Weeklies released in Canada during the past year or two have not borne the name of Hearst and they were admitted only after the Pathe organization in Canada made declaration that Hearst had nothing to do with Pathe news releases in the Dominion.

Cuts Matinees to Save Coal.

The management of the Rex Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, has made the interesting announcement that, owing to the coal situation locally, it has been decided to discontinue matinee performances for the balance of the season with the exception of those on Saturdays and holidays. The Rex, which is located at Somerset and Lorne streets, was newly decorated throughout during the epidemic period and has been equiped with a new gold fibre screen. The Rex Theatre has adopted the policy of changing programs three times weekly.

St. Denis Theatre Resumes Operations.

With the resumption of activities in Montreal, the St. Denis Theatre, which had been closed since last May, got under sway again under the direct management of Fred Crowe with a policy of mixed pictures and vaudeville. General admission in the evenings was fixed at 25 cents and the matinee price is 15 cents.

STARTS FUND FOR SOLDIERS' MONUMENT

Exhibitor C. S. Cheadle of Havre de Grace Collecting for Memorial to Boys Who Fell "Over There"

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

C. S. CHEADLE, manager of the City Opera House in Havre de Grace, Md., is proving that he is a live wire when it comes to running a theatre in a city of this size. During the three weeks that the theatre was closed, due to the influenza bans, he got busy with his playhouse and had a service curtain painted and installed. The art work was done by R. E. McBride, and its chief feature is the painting of 119 stars in the center to represent that number of boys from this section in the service. It also contains advertisements for merchants. In order that none will be slighted Mr. Cheadle has asked that the relatives of those who are in the service notify him so that he can check up and see that every one is represented. A fund has also been started by Mr. Cheadle to build a soldiers' monument in this city. Each night is a benefit night for this fund at his theatre, and in his newspaper advertising he asks the public to attend the shows at the City Opera House as every night is a benefit night. He has the co-operation of the press here.

Sunday Show for Soldiers Great Success.

The first of the series of Sunday afternoon entertainments to be given free of charge for the men in uniform at the New Theatre, 210 West Lexington street, during the winter months, which have been arranged by Manager L. A. DeHoff, was given on Sunday afternoon, November 10, and proved a great success. The S. R. O. sign had to be hung out. The theatre, services of employes and the program are donated by the management. The United Service Club, which is conducted under the auspices of the Faryland Branch, Mothers' Army and Navy Committee, National Congress of Mothers, have inaugurated this new feature of entertainment. Besides the moving pictures, Mr. DeHoff also had a program of music, and has arranged for singers from the Peabody Conservatory of Music, one of whom sang on Monday, November 10. A minister of Baltimore gave a short talk to the men and led them in prayer.

To Teach Wounded Operating.

A moving picture projection machine will shortly be installed at the Fort McHenry Base Hospital, Baltimore, Md., for the purpose of teaching wounded soldiers who care to follow that line of work, how to be moving picture operators. Another has been installed at the Walter Reed Hospital in Washington for the same purpose, and it has all come about through the activities of Samuel B. Lust, of the Super Film Attractions, Washington, D. C., who recently offered his help to the Government to help the disabled soldiers to become operators.

Benefit Show at Grand.

Through the courtesy of Harry W. Councilman, manager of the Grand Theatre, Highlandtown, this playhouse was used for the performance of the Highland Minstrels, which was given for the benefit of the soldiers at Fort McHenry on Sunday night, November 10. William Schluderburg was chairman of the committee of arrangements. There was a capacity house, and it was considered such a success that it was scheduled to be repeated on Sunday, November 17.

Park Installs Double Feature Policy.

THE Park Theatre, opening Monday, November 4, the first day after the lifting of the epidemic quarantine in Utica, used a double feature picture policy. This is the first time a double feature policy has been a steady policy in a Utica theatre. The opening bill was "My Own United States," and Robert Warwick in "The Accidental Honeymoon," a comedy, and a Screen Telegram. The bill the last half had "Honor's Cross," a Selexart feature and a William S. Hart reissue. Charles E. Faust is manager of the Park.

Eastern New York Exhibitors Hard Hit.

Of the eastern New York cities affected most by the influenza epidemic are perhaps Poughkeepsie and Albany as far as concerns the picture houses. Three days after the houses in Poughkeepsie were allowed to reopen a closing order was again issued which was in effect for one week.

In Albany, which was also under quarantine, the vaudeville and "legitimate" houses and churches were allowed to open, but the picture houses were forced to remain closed until after election.

Morris Fitzer, who has had charge of the advertising force at the Camp Dix Liberty Theatre, has received his discharge and is now connected with the Buffalo office of the First National.

Celebrates Third Anniversary.

The week of November 11 the Majestic celebrated its third anniversary under the direction of Nate Robbins, and the film feature was Jewel Carmen in "The Fallen Angels" and Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms." These pictures were shown in connection with the usual bill of five vaudeville acts.

Glaser Back Again with Select.

NAT GLASER is back again with Select, and is handling Washington and Baltimore. He left this company some time ago to enter the employment of Pathe. For several years he was manager of the Leader Theatre on Ninth street, leaving that place to go to Philadelphia for the Mastbaum interests. It was upon his return to this city that he joined Select.

Crandall Has a Service Car.

A novelty in Washington is the service car just put into operation by the Crandall Amusement Company. The principal work of this car is gathering and delivering the films for the theatres each afternoon and returning them to the exchanges after the close of the day's business. This will do away with many delays and uncertainties. The car comes from a certain well known factory in Detroit, the owner of which was recently defeated for the office of Senator—yes, it's Henry—and the name Crandall's theatres appears on its sides.

Groff Off to Officers' Training Camp.

A. G. Groff, formerly manager for Meader's Theatre, recently received his appointment to an officers' training camp, and is now qualifying for a commission in the field artillery. Mr. Cohan, formerly employed at the Plaza Theatre on Ninth street, northwest, succeeds him.

New Manager at Mutual.

The Mutual offices here have a new manager following the resignation of R. H. Mason, who has returned to Goldsboro, N. C., where he has extensive motion picture interests. The new appointee is Edward L. McShane. He is no stranger to the industry, for he has been connected with other exchanges here for some time. He started in the business when the Artcraft offices were opened, joining Paramount when the merger came. Select claimed his services last February, and he left that company to assume his present duties.

To Install Projection Room.

A projection room is soon to be installed on the third floor of the building occupied by the Famous Players Exchange on Tenth street. Manager Oscar Morgan is planning a miniature theatre de luxe which will have the most modern furnishings and equipment. The room will be twelve feet wide and have a depth of twenty-five feet. There will be wicker arm chairs for the comfort of the visitors at the exchange, the floor will be carpeted and the walls and ceiling decorated theatre fashion.

WAR PICTURES STIR BLOOD OF INDIANS

Audience of Red Men in Erie Theatre, Antlers, Whoop and Dance—Noise Drowns Orchestra

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

THE noble red man takes enthusiastically to films portraying battle scenes, declares O. Gill, of the Erie Theatre, at Antlers, Pushmataha County, Okla., which is one of the centers of the Chickashaw and Choctaw nations.

Gill's Erie is crowded with Indians and their squaws every time he puts on a red-hot film showing the Yanks in action against the Huns. Most of the Indian families have boys in the service, and it is to the older generation of Indians that the battle pictures most appeal.

When Empey's "Over the Top" showed at the Erie the Indian audience went wild. The blood of Choctaw braves who, forty years ago wore paint and blankets, but who now wear diamonds and ride in limousines, was raised to the boiling point. Wild war whoops put the orchestra into the discard and the demonstration was contagious. As the American soldiers were portrayed fighting man to man in the Hun trenches an old-time dance started, and the wierd refrain of almost forgotten Indian war chants and the stamping of feet shook the theatre.

Not satisfied with seeing the picture once, almost the entire audience stayed for a second screening, at which time the performance was repeated.

White Joins Vitagraph's Sales Force.

D. A. White, formerly of the Cozy Theatre, at Hobart, Okla., has accepted the place of salesman with the Vitagraph Company. He will have charge of sales in southern Oklahoma. Mr. White is one of the best known motion picture men in this territory and is popular with the exhibitors.

E. W. Smith, formerly with Kleine, has been appointed Vitagraph salesman in the Arkansas territory.

Lubbock to Have Picture Show.

Lubbock, Tex., a thriving town in the plains country, was without a moving picture theatre for some while recently, owing to drouth conditions. Because of bad business the show was forced to close.

Business men and merchants, realizing what a high-class picture show meant to their community, held a meeting and twenty men each subscribed $100 to establish a motion picture show. It is to open soon.

Douglas Hawley Back from Trip.

Texas Exhibitors Aid War Work Drive.

Texas motion picture exhibitors, patriotic as ever, have rallied staunchly to the support of the United War Work campaign.

In Dallas every theatre is carrying slides urging liberal subscriptions, and their doors have been thrown open to the Four Minute Men for speeches aiding the drive.

At most of the theatres Sunday, November 10, was observed by the admittance of groups of singers from various musical organizations who led the audiences in the war work song which had been composed to suit the air of the Liberty Loan song.

Manager Kelly also reports the appointment of James G. Tomlin, formerly with Mutual, as special representative.

McMahon Pulls a Good Stunt.

Advertising the "Eyes of the World," F. H. McMahon, Fort Worth motion picture show advertising man, pulled off a novel stunt, which packed the Hippodrome recently.

McMahon announced that he was going to film the non-day crowds in the Panther city. He hired an automobile, secured two policemen in uniform to accompany him, and made the tour of the business streets with a cameraman in the tonneau and the crank turning. Big streamers attached to the car called attention to the "Eyes of the World."

Advertising on wagons and automobiles is forbidden in Fort Worth, and it was by the camera stunt alone that McMahon was enabled to get his effective advertising before the public.

Kelly No Longer Has a Monopoly on Smiles.

"Smiling" Jimmy Kelly has not got the monopoly of cheeriness at the General offices. Miss Pearl Varvell, his secretary, also has a genial greeting and a happy smile for all visiting exhibitors. Miss Varvell, who is one of the most competent business women on film row, has made such a hit with visiting theatre owners that she has won herself promotion to the position of special representative for General. She will travel for the company in North Texas and Oklahoma starting the second week in November.

Metro to Distribute "Kaiser's Finish."

Metro has taken over the distribution of "The Kaiser's Finish," a Warner Brothers' feature, in this territory. A private screening was given newspaper men and North Texas exhibitors at Hulsey's Old Mill during the second week in November. The film was well received by the critics.

REDECORATING MINNEAPOLIS SHUBERT

William Fox Interests Will Have Practically a New House Upon Completion of Renovation

By W. E. Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

WHILE other Minneapolis houses have been closed during the influenza epidemic, workmen have been busy at the Shubert transforming the interior into an entirely new theatre that will greet patrons when amusement places open again. Work is being rushed. The Shubert and the William Fox Film Corporation are spending about $16,000 cleaning up, redecorating and remodeling the theatre.

The lighting system is receiving some major improvements. No longer will audiences sit in semi-darkness as has been the custom since the house was opened. Electric lights are being placed under the balcony, along the sides of the walls, on the boxes and in the ceiling until the auditorium will glow with unexpected warmth.

The interior has been redecorated with a view to contrasts and the walls are done in Indian red with the rich red tapestries framed in gilt. Ivory, gold and red have been used in redecorating the boxes and the front of the balcony; the lights in the boxes and along the sides of the walls are to be inclosed in red silk shades. Rows of seats have been taken out in the front of the house and the orchestra pit is to be surrounded by a balustrade.

A pipe organ is to be installed on the stage. New carpets have been ordered for the aisles and foyer, while the old carpets have been removed from under the seats and the floor painted to correspond with the decorations.

The lobby itself has undergone a marked change. The ceiling has been done over with ivory and gold and green, striped in red. New mirrors have been installed and placed in the lobby and in the women's retiring room, and the balcony stairs are to be better lighted than in the past. The front of the building has been cleaned and a huge electric sign is to be installed that will reach to the top of the theatre and will be surmounted by an electric eagle.

Although the Shubert will reopen with "Hearts of the World," which will resume its interrupted engagement, the theatre will be taken over later by the William Fox interests.

"WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY."

William Fox Presents Lucy Fox in a Strange Conglomeration of Drama, Comedy and Farce.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

IN this new Fox presentation drama struggles for recognition while comedy protests—and finally broad farce prevails in bringing to belated ending one of the most unusual of recent film endeavors. Lucy Fox is the one participant whose name is disclosed, although a multitude of other players take part in its many scenes.

Let it be recorded that Lucy—a new Fox, so far as we know—is at the outset implored by her father to marry because he had promised her mother that he would not shuffle off until their daughter had wed. Lucy agreed to pick a man to marry right away—although father looked healthy and proved later on in several "chase" scenes that he was fast enough to escape even the "flu."

Daughter had four types of men in immediate application for her heart, hand and companionship—indicating that Lucy was either rarely beautiful or else was heiress to much pelf. We'll say that Lucy would pass for good looking, as one sufficient reason for the rush. To aid her in choosing the right one Lucy bent her steps to a female Swami—a crystal gazer who forecasted our heroine's future. Incidentally the sorceress told Lucy that she, herself, was "psychic," sold the girl the glass globe and then matters got more swiftly under way.

Having bid her four candidates to assemble in conclave, Lucy read, in the glass ball, each prospective marital adventure and found why she should not marry. Each incident was acted out in scenes of varying drama, farce, melodrama and comedy by Lucy's large assisting company, with Lucy impersonating the "wife" in each episode. Each steed entered in the Matrimonial Handicap was too much overweight to win, and Lucy sent them all, man by man, into exile.

Then to her father Lucy said: "I will go into business and prove that I do not need a husband."

Our instant guess at the outcome was in effect that we should in the next and final reel find Lucy in Marion, Ohio, in possession of a glass furnace—making the big, round glass balls that sorceresses gaze into and vision the future for girls who are considering the matter of marriage. While a member of the Society of Projectionists was rewinding the fifth reel we had time to figure it all out for Lucy, planning sales drives and laying out a campaign of national advertising for the glass bowling-balls that would make a ten-strike with the love-lorn millions. The Matrimonial News will be sorry to learn that subsequent events in the Fox projection room beat their advertising department out of fifty-two pages, at full rates, during the year to ensue and start immediately.

Glass spheres of heroic size working with the dramatic, melodramatic, farcical, comic and intensive propensities displayed by the one Lucy used in the Fox film would sell to the matrimonally inclined like iron crosses to American tourists once the real Yankee invasion of Mittleurope once begins—Lucy was in line for a fortune.

Other plans, however, had Lucy of the Fox film. She took her father to a small town in Vermont and opened a department store, ending the whole matter by marrying a traveling man who made a financial hit with her. In this last reel such broad farce broke loose that we "reviewers" of serious mind concluded that a five weeks' lay-off in any given industry will result in somebody being eventually "spoofed."

Who shall get the worst, or the best, of the "spoofing" we cannot say—with no crystal ball at hand we cannot foretell the future like Lucy could.

"MILADY O' THE BEANSTALK."

Splendid Pathe-Diando Subject, in Five Reels, Featuring Baby Marie Osborne.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is no doubt of this five-reel Diando production, featuring Baby Marie Osborne, pleasing the many friends of that interesting child. The story in this instance, written by Elizabeth Burbridge and directed by William Bertram, contains many ingredients particularly adapted to a film of strong juvenile interest. There is, first and foremost, a very human little plot in which a former lover of the child's divorced mother still loves and wishes to marry her. Then there is an interpolation of the fairy story "Jack and the Beanstalk," cleverly executed in a few brief scenes, and later events of interest.

Baby Marie is very attractive all through this number. Her portrayal of Jack the Giant Killer, in illustration of her own dream, is a good bit of work for a young performer. Sambo, the colored boy, appears also, and does some amusing stunts as the janitor's son. Jack Connolly appears as the hero, Giant Jim Walton, and Ellen Cassity plays the mother part.

At the beginning of the story the mother and child are in a country town, but are forced to leave there because of the unkindly regard of the neighbors for a divorced woman. In the city Mrs. Tompkins has difficulty finding work, and her plight is a sad one when her former lover, Giant Jim, discovers them. Jim fights his final battle in the prize ring at the close of the story, in order to procure money for restoring Baby Marie to health after an accident.

"THE SILENT MYSTERY"

Francis Ford Serial Discloses Steady Stream of Melodramatic Thrills in First Five Episodes.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE new Francis Ford serial lives up to its title. "The Silent Mystery" is packed with melodramatic thrills and creepy doings. A disembodied hand is continually reaching out of space and seizing a victim in its grip. It drags the heroine by the hair of her head toward a deserted house, and she is saved just in time by the hero-detective. India and the theft of a sacred jewel figure in the opening episode. This jewel is taken by the mother of the heroine and brought to the United States, and an East Indian princess is sent to recover the treasure. The brother of the heroine is mixed up with a gang of German sympathizers who have stolen a U-boat and intend to prey on American merchant ships now that the war is finished. This situation gives an opening for all sorts of exciting experiences. There are lively scraps, and adventures in lonely huts, on the seashore, in the home of the heroine and among the dives of a great city. The regular following of the serial will get a run for its money.

Francis Ford directed the story, which is in fifteen episodes. He also plays the hero detective, and is supported by Mae Gaston as the heroine and Rosemary Theby as the princess. Everyone in the cast follows the pace set by the director, and the result is strict attention to putting the episodes over. "The Silent Mystery" is released by Hiller & Wilk.

"HIS BONDED WIFE"

Emmy Wehlen Is Pleasing in Romantic Story Produced by Metro and Directed by Charles J. Brabin.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WEALTHY young ladies have married penniless young chaps in real life, but no flesh and blood poor-but-proud hero ever had things made so easy for him as has the fictitious juvenile lead of "His Bonded Wife," a Metro production written by Lois and Arthur Zellner and adapted to the screen by June Mathis. Emmy Wehlen plays Doris Morse, the girl with the money, and Creighton Hale is cast for Philip Hazard, the man Doris marries.

The story will entertain the spectator who is fond of sentiment and likes to believe that wealthy and highly romantic young ladies are to be found who fall in love with their rescuers when dragged from the surf at Atlantic City and pass themselves off as poor working girls in order to be loved for their youth and beauty alone. It will be recalled that O. Henry created a hero who went out every day in the hope that he would meet with just such an adventure. No fairy tale ever treated the subject with more light-hearted zeal or less regard for things as they are than does "His Bonded Wife."

One situation deals tradition a terrible blow: The father of the heiress helps his daughter to marry the poor chap by pretending to disown her when the proud young gentleman informs the lady and her parent that since she is not a working girl and poor he must give her up. The discovery that his wife's father has given her $100,000 worth of bonds as a wedding present hurts his pride to such an extent that Philip turns burglar, climbs into his own house from the fire-escape, steals the bonds and is shot in the arm by Doris as he makes his getaway through the window. Philip is trailed by a detective, and marched back home with the plunder in his pocket. A telephone call from an agent employed by Mr. Morse informs Philip that he has been awarded a contract in connection with his work as an architect that will pay him one hundred thousand of his own. Philip, unknowingly forced to accept help from his father-in-law, feels himself his wife's financial equal, and the young couple are left with every prospect of finding true happiness, in spite of the deception that has been practiced upon the hero.

The production brings out the best points of the story. Emmy Wehlen as Doris, Frank Currier as Digby Morse, Creighton Hale as Philip Hazard, John Terry as Tom Lloyd and Warda Howard as Kate enter into the spirit of their characters with faithfulness. R. J. Bergquist was the photographer.

"KISS OR KILL"

Universal Special Attraction in Five Reels Features Engaging Cast.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Universal special attraction develops a story rather stronger than is promised in the opening situations. It is one of those pleasant stories of the near-crook type, which mingle the probable and improbable in swift-running fashion. There is almost a touch of comedy at times in certain of the dramatic situations, but it never passes the danger point, and toward the close of the story there are some agreeable surprises which round it up very well.

Herbert Rawlinson plays the role of Jack Warner, a young man just discharged from military service in New York City. He is "on his uppers," and in a moment of desperation snatches a pocketbook from a man on a corner. He then flees and enters the home of a man named Middleton. The latter, a wealthy gentleman, protects Jack from the police and later employs him to recover a certain paper which had been stolen by his nephew. Jack accepts this commission and soon comes in contact with the nephew, Craig, who is trying to impose his love on a girl named Ruth Orton. Jack eventually recovers the stolen paper and also the will, which disposes of the fortune left by Ruth's father. Both Middleton and Craig are shown to be criminals, and Jack also wins the girl.

Priscilla Dean is very pleasing as Ruth, though the part does not make any great demands upon her. Harry Carter is again interesting in his special style of villainy, as Craig. In fact, the work of the three principals is so well balanced and enjoyable that it lifts the production to the point of strong entertainment value.

The story was written by Max Brand, and both scenario and production were in the hands of Elmer Clifton.

"THE SPREADING EVIL."

James Keane Presents Seven-Reel Feature Dealing With Social Malady.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ALWAYS bearing in mind that this production in seven reels, "The Spreading Evil," is one intended for adult minds, it may be safely given place in the same category with "Damaged Goods" and similar subjects. This new offering, presented by James Keane, deals with the prevalence of the blood disease, syphilis, and the efforts made for its eradication. It has the personal indorsement of Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, whose portrait is shown at the close, with a statement as to the good that such a production may be expected to accomplish.

While dealing with sordid facts in a very frank manner, in contradistinction to the ignorant prudery of other days which has apparently failed to benefit the world in any way, the production must be given credit for setting forth every phase of its story with acceptable delicacy. Even the sordid subject matter is overcome to a great extent by the dramatic quality of the plot, so that one observing the picture has the feeling of having learned a great deal without being overwhelmed by unpleasant details.

The plot, which was entirely the work of Mr. Keane, is said to follow, to a certain extent, actual facts with reference to the withholding of a specific, manufactured in Germany, from this country during the war. The hero is the son of a German scientist who discovered the specific, but who instead of living up to his agreement to give it to the world, arranged for its sale with a drug store magnate. The son, Karl, is to marry the daughter of the man to whom his father sold the specific, but during the course of the story Karl contracts the dread disease himself and ends everything by drowning himself.

The development of this story is very creditable, barring a few minor breaks in continuity, and the acting is restrained and convincing throughout. It has a very dramatic finish, picturing the arrival of Karl's father in a submarine on this side of the Atlantic. He is coming with the specific to treat his son personally, but the submarine is blown up off the American coast.

Leo Pierson appears as Karl and Irene Wiley as the girl, Alice. Howard Davis plays the role of Hartsell, Sr. Others in the cast are William A. Hackett, G. B. Williams, Joseph Clancy and Carlyn Wagner.

"EYE FOR EYE"

First Special Nazimova Production for Metro Program Not Star's Best.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A DRAMA by Henry Kistemaecker entitled "L'Occident" was chosen as the basis of the first of the Nazimova specials, "Eye for Eye." The production, which was directed by Albert Capellani and is in seven reels, would have gained considerably by a briefer presentation of the drama. Nazimova, who has undoubtedly established herself among the best of screen actresses, has chosen to portray the beautiful Bedouin girl in a writhing, grimacing manner, which, carried through the length of seven reels of film, becomes wearysome. One could have wished for a more colorful interpretation of the character.

Then again there are moments when the work of the star is superb—in the opening scenes of the picture, for instance, where she impersonates the carefree child of the desert with an abandonment that is especially pleasing. But even in this portion of the picture there is opportunity for the over-critical to pick a flaw in the unbridled familiarity with which the daughter of a Mohammaden race treats her betrothed in the scenes before the tent of the imprisoned French officer. In the construction of the picture there is a tendency to play up the star to the detriment of the production as a whole. The cast contains familiar names of players who have proved in the past their ability to do more effective work than this picture allows them to do. They are as follows: Charles Bryant, Donald Gallaher, Sally Crute, E. L. Fernandez, John Reinhard, Louis Stern, Charles Eldridge, Hardee Kirkland and Miriam Battista.

The story of the play concerns the fate of a Bedouin girl who was cast off by her tribe in punishment for helping a captured French officer to escape. After being picked up by another wandering tribe and sold to a circus manager, she is finally recognized by the officer while attending the circus in his home town as his former benefactor, and is taken by him to his home. Here, after striving against her own impulses to avenge the destruction of her tribe by the officer and his soldiers, she confesses her love for him, his wife having been discovered in an affair with another man.

The production will be released shortly by the Metro Picture Corporation.

"DEUCE DUNCAN"

William Desmond in Breezy Triangle Melodrama Is a Live Western Hero.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

GEORGE HIVELY is the author of "Deuce Duncan," a western melodrama produced by Triangle and directed by Thomas E. Heffron, with William Desmond in the title role. The story is along the lines of the recent plots that have been used for the star's pictures and shows his physical abilities and acting skill to advantage. There is also a generous sprinkling of outdoor atmosphere, and the picturesque life of the West is shown in an interesting and highly dramatic manner.

An escaped jailbird succeeds in passing himself off as the brother of Ann Tyson, a young girl living by herself in a lonely cabin. Ann has not seen her brother since she was a baby and accepts the imposter as one of her own family. The man knows enough of John Tyson's history to keep up the deception until he finds himself falling in love with his supposed sister. He also makes another mistake. On his way to Ann he steals a horse belonging to Deuce Duncan. Deuce at once starts on the thief's trail and follows him to a town where he has taken Ann and where the girl goes to work in a dance hall. Deuce recognizes his horse, but gets his eye on Ann at the same time and is so attracted by her that he makes no attempt to punish her brother. When the truth comes out and the imposter is killed in a fight with Deuce the cowboy gets his horse back and a wife as well.

Luella Maxim as Ann, Ed. Brady as the outlaw, George Field as Pedro, William Ellingford as Brant and Joe Singleton as the sheriff complete a competent cast. B. H. Wales was the cameraman.

"HITTING THE TRIAL"

Five-Reel World-Picture Presents Melodrama of New York's East Side.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN THIS five-reel offering by World-Pictures, a story of the East Side is told, rather better in the matter of general atmosphere and actuality of types than usual. The plot, however, is constructed too much in the manner of a serial, in that the incidents follow in regular order and without particular reference to each other. Each of them is quite dramatic in itself, but there is not a great deal of suspense at any time.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley head the cast as Kid Kelly and Flo Haines. The former is a member of a young band of crooks, the latter a poor girl who works in a "flower factory" by day and assists at a Bowery mission at night. Joseph Smiley is cast as Carelli, owner of the flower factory, and foe of innocent young beauty. Muriel Ostriche has the role of Annie, a beautiful girl whom Carelli victimizes and who afterwards kills him in a fit of jealous rage. George MacQuarrie, Mabel Bunyea, Walter Green and Edward Elkas have other parts.

The story is one that will interest lovers of melodrama, though the lack of suspense keeps it from taking first rank as such. The views of the factory where artificial flowers are made will also have wide appeal among persons interested in slum conditions. This gives some accurate views of an industry which employs thousands of people in lower Manhattan.

The number was written by Roy Somerville, adapted by Harry O. Hoyt and directed by Dell Henderson.

"ALL THE WORLD TO NOTHING"
Six-Reel Pathe-American Subject Features William Russell in Breezy Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A CHEERFUL feature of this six-part comedy, "All the World to Nothing," is that it circumvents obvious situations to a great extent and keeps the observer guessing as to what will happen next. The things that do happen are not entirely credible all of the time and are perhaps not intended to be, but they carry the interest along in good style. There are some jerky places in the continuity, but on the whole the number proves one of good entertainment value.

William Russell has the role of Richard Chester, a wealthy young man who at the opening of the story plunges in a poker game and loses his fortune. He finds himself suddenly thrust into the class of job hunters and his efforts to make a living lead him into many diffculties.

One of his first ventures after the fatal poker game is to go in disguise to see a certain capitalist. While trying to find this man he enters the wrong apartments. He overhears the reading of a will by which a pretty girl, Norah Ellis, inherits a fortune, with the proviso that she shall wed immediately. Chester is discovered and is mistaken for a thief. Before leaving the room he marries the girl and is then released with the understanding that he will permanently disappear. But in the course of the yarn he meets her in true person and wins her love.

The production was by the American Film Corporation. The story was written by Wyndham Martyn, adapted by Stephen Fox and directed by Henry King. Others in the cast are Winnifred Westover, J. Morris Foster and Hayward Mack.

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS"
Third United States Official War Picture Portrays a Great Military Spectacle from Life.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A SERIES of episodes from scenes in the last battles in the war, taken by by the Signal Corps, A. E. F., and the Allied Army cameramen, shown simultaneously at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, these pictures have the mark of realism on them for those who know the difference between the genuine article and its imitation. They were assembled and edited under the supervision of S. L. Rothapfel. For hard cold realism those showing the dogged English and brilliant Canadians in action are the best, but far more picturesque, more attractive to the eye, while none the less impressive from a point of view of accuracy, are those showing the thrilling movements of Italian troops on the Piave, particularly the mountain exploits.

The views of heavy artillery on barges, taken from a close-camera point of view, are the most remarkable of their kind ever shown. We are right up against the big guns in action, near enough, one would think, to shatter the strongest lens over made. There are also some impressive pictures from the air in this section.

When all is said that can be said of these episodes, those of our own troops are bound to be the winners in a popular sense. They are not so fortuitously taken, not so picturesque, not so impressive in setting perhaps, but that great big interest, the human one, is there with a punch. It is that human interest which makes plays successful, and we know and love those humans who composed divisions of American troops under American officers at the battle of St. Mihiel. The review of French and American troops by General Pershing is prettier to the eye, but it is on the field that our boys showed American character, not on parade, and there they have made Americans known to Europeans for the first time in the history of our nation. The subtitles are exceptionally fine, some of them gems of force and vigor. It is a great military spectacle from life, admirably arranged by a genius of presentation.

Taieb.....E. L. Fernandez
Paul Lecroix.....John Reinhard
The Sheik.....Louis Stern

The Story: Hassouna, the daughter of an Arab Sheik, becomes enamoured of Capt. Cadiere, a young French captive, and provides him with a knife with which he cuts his way to freedom. In punishment she is left behind in the desert by the tribe. She is captured by hostile Bedouins and sold into slavery, being purchased by the proprietor of a French circus, who uses her dancing as an attraction. Here she comes under the notice of Cadiere, who takes her into his home, explaining to his wife that she saved his life. The wife elopes with Lecroix and Cadiere's love for Hassouna grows. Then comes Taieb, to whom she was betrothed in the desert, who tells her that Cadiere killed her parents and demands that she exact an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. Vainly she tries to kill the man she loves. In his absence she even plans to be avenged through his nephew, but in the end love proves stronger than hate—but she goes back to the desert with Taieb. Her ways are not the ways of the man she loves. She must go to her own people.

Meeting her demands impoverishes Nick, but Anne has money in her own right and they go to the shore to begin work on a play. Nick takes Esmee with him. Anne lets her come, but pretending to have sprained her angle, she throws the housework upon Esmee, whose slatternly habits kill the love of the fastidious man. old flame and turns once more to her. Dolores invites him and his fiance to dine and tells him that she has poisoned his wine. In an ecstacy of terror Dick implores him to save her and she promises to give him an antidote on condition that he marry her. He makes the promise, when Dolores tells him that the poison was water. She merely wanted to disgrace him. His fiancee turns from him and Dolores at last yields to Pedro's protestations of love.

Feature Pauline Frederick as Dolores and Pedro De Cordoba as Pedro.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Pauline Frederick Star in Delightful Story of Love in the Old South.
How a False Villain Wooed and Nearly Won Rare Beauty.
How a Daughter of the Confederacy Won a Northern Victory.
How a Pretty Girl Rebelled at Her Grandmother's Choice.

Advertising Angles: In the north it will be necessary to explain that a Creole is not of negro blood, but one of the descendants of the old French families who originally populated Louisiana, preserving the fine old strain of blood. Then go on tell how this nature asserted itself in Dolores. Make it very plain that this is in no sense another of those civil war stories, of which there have been far too many.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

"AMERICA'S ANSWER."

The Committee on Public Information, Division of Films, Presents the Second Great Picture of the War We Won the War. Released Through World Film Corporation.

The Story: The first picture of this series dwelt with the preparations at home. This second official war picture, made by United States Government photographers, deals with the provisions made abroad. It shows the huge dock improvements made to accommodate our mighty transport fleets, it gives a sight of the miles of trackage over which trains hauled by American-made locomotives assembled in France, carried troops and supplies to the front. It shows the huge bakery, the great refrigerating plants, the cities of hospitals, the provisions of the Red Gross, Y. M. C. A., Salvation Army and allied endeavors. There are stirring scenes right on the front lines and pictures of actual battles. It shows our boys marching through Paris and along the French roads—in short, it takes us over there and shows us how the war was won.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Uncle Sam's Pictured Record of His Stewardship in World War.
Photographic Proof of How Liberty Bond Money Was Spent.
See in Official Pictures How Uncle Sam Cares for His Own.
Picturing the Realities of America's Answer to Autocracy.
Authentic Pictures That Will Make You Marvel and Swell with Pride.

Advertising Angles: Boom this picture to the extent of your resources. Get local merchants to contribute advertising. Use plenty of paper, including as many 24 sheets as you can afford. Use "How America Won the War" for a secondary billing, and tell that it was the systematic handling of the troops and supplies that made the Americans the deciding factor in the greatest war in history. Whoop it up as no circus was ever advertised, and make your showings productive rather than the mere running of the picture. Devise a special setting, use patriotic tableaux, have the national anthem sung before each showing, and get up a special program of speeches for the opening performance.

Advertising Aids: One, three six and twenty-four sheets; two 22x28 colored photogelatines, eight 11x14 colored photogelatines, eight 8x10 black and white photos. Press sheet, electros of cuts a and b illustrated therein and make-up mats 1 to 10 inclusive. Slides. Heralds in two colors.

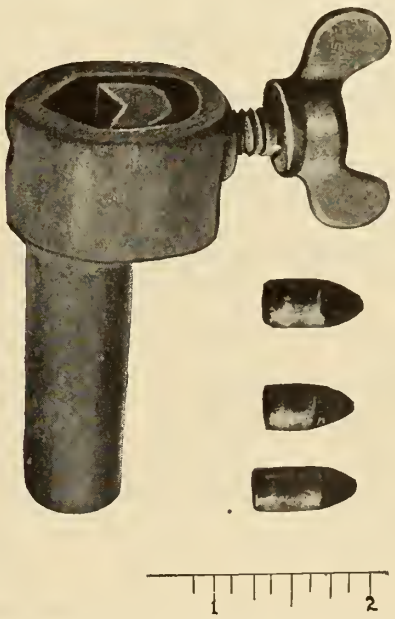
SILVERTIP

DIRECT CURRENT
MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

The Silvertip used with the Columbia upper gives a light source that fills the bill in every particular. The Silvertip is heavily plated, making it capable of carrying the heavy currents used in projection without harmful heating.

We wish to call special attention to the new copper adapter which was designed for use with our Silvertip negative carbon. This new adapter, shown in the illustration below, has several outstanding features; it is made in one piece and cannot get out of adjustment while the jaws form a positive clamp, giving a better contact on a smaller portion of the carbon.



The illustration also shows the extent to which the Silvertip can be burned with the aid of this new adapter. The ruggedness of construction together with the quality of the material from which it is made gives the adapter a life equal to that of the rest of the projection apparatus.

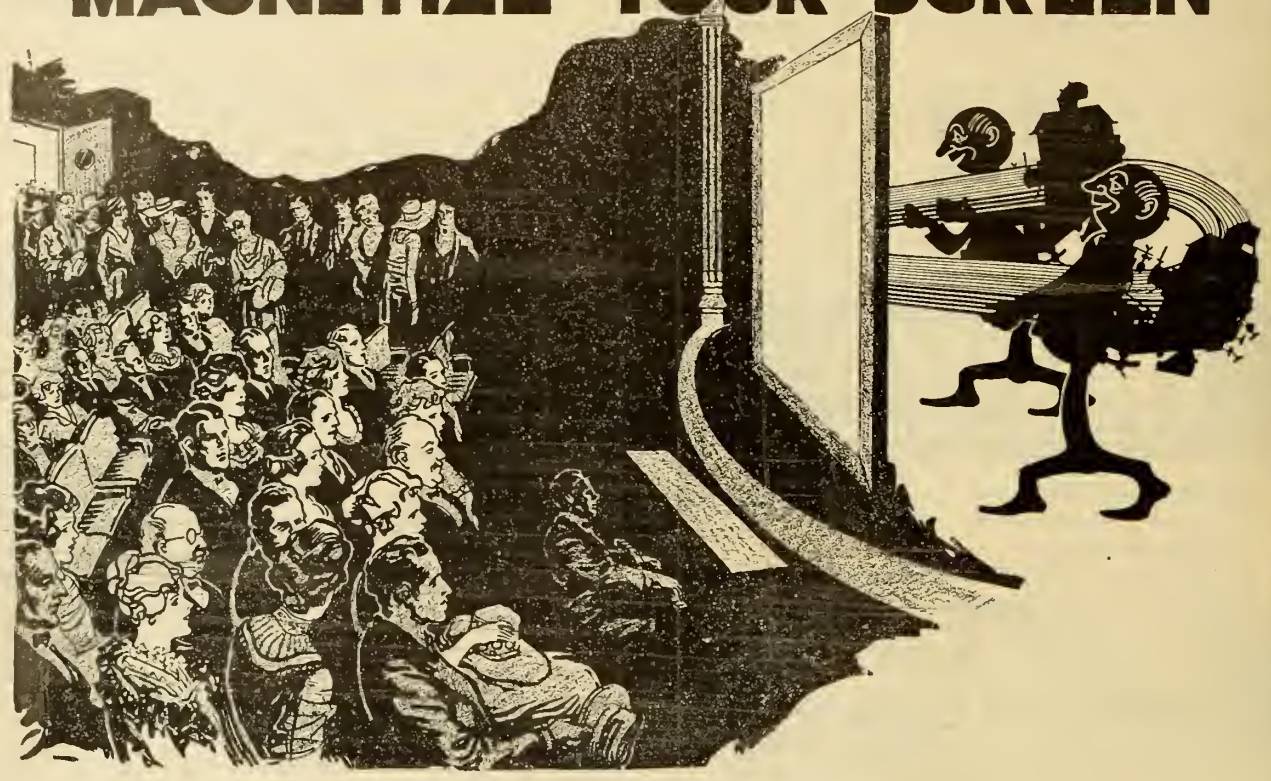
"LET THE Simplex TWINS MAGNETIZE YOUR SCREEN"



The Screen is the Vital Spot of the House. It is what people pay their money to look at, and its attractiveness determines the number that come back for another look.

And there's no other way of making and keeping the Screen one-hundred-per-cent attractive than to employ the Simplex in the Projection Room.

The design of its Intermittent Movement, the excellence of the materials used, the lightness, large bearing surfaces and extreme accuracy of the intermittent parts, the manner of lubrication—these and other factors contribute to a permanent steadiness that leaves the wise Exhibitor no other choice.

THE PRECISION MACHINE CO. INC.

When buyers of "prints" are more interested in standards of quality than they are in mere price, true economy will be established.

When you buy "prints" you are not buying raw material. You are buying the screen reproduction of your valuable negative investment.

When you dicker about cost you are not really talking price, you are dickering on the way your "picture" will appear in the theatre.

It is not the fraction of a cent per foot you are "saving," but the pleasing and pulling power of your picture you are sacrificing.

Our Way Secures Quality and Satisfaction.

"In the reconstruction period which is close at hand the best is the thing that will win out in any line. Isn't it wise to forestall the future and be in the swim when the swimming is good?

"How about a Power's Cameragraph in that projection room of yours? You know the only route to success is by the satisfaction path; and what pleases your audience will satisfy your pocketbook.

"Power's Cameragraph has pleased the public since this business began. It sends your audience away with the satisfaction that always brings them back.

ALICE BR

in "HER GREAT CHANCE"

From Fannie Hurst's story, "Golden Fleece"
Scenario and Direction by CHARLES MAIGNE

Distinctly different is this story of a breezy New York shop-girl and the rich fellow who kept asking her to marry him and whom she would not accept because—she loved him truly! The people in the picture are so many creations from real life, they are so wholly human and understandable. Audiences will chuckle over them, and they will love Alice Brady in the role of Lola Gray as they have never loved her before—for this is a picture to warm up to!

"My little sister shan't hear a word of that ugly story!"

Larded with humor from end to end—"Her Great Chance" has caught and crystallized on the screen the American trait of seeing the happy side even of life's most tragic moments.

"Do you know why I refused you, the other night, Charl

DEATH STOOD BESIDE MARTIN JOHNSON During the filming of CANNIBALS OF THE SOUTH SEAS

Martin Johnson and his plucky little wife traveled 18,000 miles alone among the remote isles of the lonely South Pacific, visiting savages who had never before looked upon a white face. They risked their lives every second of their perilous trip, made by small steamer, sailboat and native canoe, but they returned with the most remarkable authentic pictures ever filmed of the least known people on the face of the earth.

Once captured by cannibals, only to escape by a hair's breadth, the Johnsons discovered a tribe of pigmies, watched head hunters bury their old people alive, looked with civilized eyes upon strange, primitive races for the first time. Through it all they managed to keep their motion picture camera; and the resultant film is the most amazing thing ever exhibited. "Cannibals of the South Seas" is rife with the spirit of adventure, the lure of azure seas and green savage isles, the undying romance of Conrad, Stevenson and London.

"AFTER THE WAR"

WHEN we say that "Never in this generation will State Rights Men have such an opportunity to clean up", we mean exactly what we say. When will there ever be another such world war? When will we living in this time ever see such sights of frenzied joy over the ending of the war? When will our people ever experience such a thanksgiving as this year? And ALL THIS bears directly on this huge production "AFTER THE WAR" for it hits the masses at the exact psychological hour of our existence.

MILLIONS are asking the question—"What will happen after the war". Millions are clamoring to see and to know. Here then is the FIRST big production that begins to answer the questions of the world. That makes "AFTER THE WAR" the tremendous sensation it is. The signing of the armistice gives it timeliness over and above any production now on the market. This is the State Rights opportunity extraordinary. Territory apportioned in order of receipt of applications AND NO OTHER WAY. First come first served WRITE. Contrary to the rumors that have doubtless originated with those who would profit in the event that they were true, the has NOT been sold and will NOT be discontinued.

Our justifiable pride in the Pathe News after a career of nearly ten successful years, causes us to think not of discontinuance but of development on a scale hitherto unthought of.

The thousands of exhibitors who show the News twice a week; the many who have shown it ever since the first number was released, may well be pleased that the one reel feature that the business has produced will continue, better than ever, and under the PATHE name.

FOLLOW THE ALLIES INTO GERMANY!

With the American, French, Italian and British troops as they advance into German territory are official cameramen, directed by their various Governments. As the great Council meets at Versailles there also will be similar official cameramen. As town after town is freed of the four year enemy the official cameramen will enter with the conquering armies of Liberty.

What wonderful motion picture material, historic, fascinating, thrilling!

Your audiences will see it all in that the

containing the official war pictures of the British, French, Italian and American Governments, will not be discontinued, but will be released weekly by Pathe for some time to come.

This announcement has been necessitated by the many requests for information from exhibitors who have found the Official War Review an excellent attraction, and have feared that the Armistice meant the early discontinuance of the film.

The Division of Films is glad to announce that the supply of excellent material has greatly increased during the past two or three months; that this material will continue to be received for some time, and that the negatives now coming in are of subjects far more interesting, even, than any hitherto received.

We are justly proud of the splendid record made by the Official War Review!

ORGANIZATION MEANS SUCCESS

The Hearst News Reel Organization (International Film Service Co., Inc.) has been the Maker of News Reel History in the Past and has the stage all Set for even Bigger Events in the Future.

Mr. C. F. Zittel, Vice-President and General Manager of the International Film Service Co., Inc., quotes the following extract from a conversation he had recently with Mr. J. A. Berst, formerly Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., now President of the United Pictures Corporation.

The Past:

"The connection of the Pathe Exchange with the Hearst organization, through the International Film Service Co., Inc., was a most beneficial one for Pathe, and the turning point which led to Pathe's great success. The contract made by me with the International, which went into effect December 24th, 1916, was considered a great victory for Pathe, and from that moment the profits of the Pathe Exchange began to accrue very largely, and the Pathe News, combined with the Hearst International News under the title of the Hearst Pathe News, showed a profit that it had not shown for three years previous to the combine. In fact, for some time previous to the combination the Pathe News was not a paying venture."

The Present:

The International Film Service Co., Inc., has purchased the Universal Current Events, the Universal Animated Weekly and the Mutual Screen Telegram and the gathering forces of all these organizations are now being molded into the greatest news film amalgamation that has ever been in existence.

The Future:

After December 24th, 1918, the name of Pathe will be eliminated from the Hearst Pathe News and this famous reel will be released under the title of the Hearst News. The names of the Universal Current Events and the Mutual Screen Telegram will also be retained, making three news reel issues a week to be made by the International Film Service Co., Inc., and released through the countrywide exchanges of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. The unequaled facilities of the Hearst camera forces, augmented by the forces of the other recently acquired companies, will mean the furnishing of news reels of a magnitude never before attempted. A unique and novel advertising and publicity campaign in the Hearst newspapers, magazines and affiliated papers, has been arranged for the promotion of these reels.

Exhibitors Themselves Suggested These Farrar Stories.

Goldwyn for months sought the best exhibitor opinion of the nation as to the type of stories they wanted Geraldine Farrar to make in her Goldwyn Star Series.

Hundreds of them responded, saying: "Put this great star in a wonderful outdoor story filled with action and containing strong love interest."

The scenes shown on this page from "THE HELL CAT" forecast the success of this powerful story.

In a single production you have the benefits of the judgment of successful exhibitor-showmen; the work of Willard Mack, a brilliant playwright; the bold, masterly direction of Reginald Barker and an all-star cast including Milton Sills and Thomas Santschi.

Add these elements to a star of unparalleled popularity and the Goldwyn perfection of production and you instantly realize why all alert exhibitors are rapidly booking the Geraldine Farrar Star Series for their houses.

This Is a Real One

THIS is a real feature. It should be heavily advertised with big space in the newspapers. Your town should be billed completely and a good snappy advance campaign put over. You can't go too strong on "Eye for Eye," for it will not disappoint patrons, so you need have no fear of any comeback and therefore can go the limit.

As the picture is good for double the run that usual features get, it will pay you to loosen up, put quite a bit of extra money into a real advertising campaign and do all in your power to put the feature over in the way it deserves. Suppose you do put extra money into it. The chances are a thousand to one that you'll get it back with a dividend that will make you feel happy for months.

After the War—What?

The war is over. Reconstruction is the order of the hour—business, political, physical reconstruction. And abreast of the spirit of the times is the FOX IDEA. To interpret the common thought of a happy and triumphant people—to aid the exhibitor to the greatest profits by the way of least resistance—William Fox now offers two Big, Timely Pictures that epitomize American thought and ideals and point the way of triumphant American progress.

The Reconstruction Problem

The greatest picture—the picture that draws the biggest crowds and piles up the biggest box office receipts—is one that appeals to the greatest number of passions in the human heart. Based on the Fox Idea there has just been completed a production built on the three greatest passions known to our race—the love of a mother for her son, the love of a man for a woman, the love of a patriot for his country.

It is the most powerful drama of mother love ever thrown on the screen.

EVERY MOTHER'S SON

(With CHARLOTTE WALKER)

is a tremendous epic of the American woman's part in the World War—the heroism, the suffering, the supreme sacrifice of the millions of mothers who gave their sons to their country. It is a beautiful romance of an American soldier and a peasant maid of Alsace. It is a mighty film spectacle of patriotism, depicting not only the Great Draft and the battlefields of France, but also the final Peace Conference at Versailles and the glories of the new world that is to be born of reconstruction. EVERY MOTHER'S SON is a picture for every man, woman and child in America. It was directed by R. A. WALSH and temporarily titled "18 TO 45." It is a picture for you to book—now.

The Morality Problem

The Fox Idea has developed what is beyond all doubt the most unusual, most fascinating, most amazing photoplay ever produced—a timely, striking morality picture that is pitiless in the searching light it throws on matrimony. It will make the selfish, thoughtless, complacent husband squirm. It will cause wives to look at life in a new light. It is a challenge to the world, ripping away the veil of hypocrisy and deceit that has enshrouded marriage and helped to make it a mockery.

WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY

is the story of a beautiful girl who was able to see that those men who fawned upon her and sought her hand in marriage only desired her as a sacrifice on the altar of Mammon. She saw poverty, bitterness, struggle—but at length also perceived that which brought happiness to her heart and hope to lift her spirit. WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY was directed by RICHARD STANTON. It will be the sensation of the season, with a box office appeal bigger than the capacity of the largest theatres.

Peace for the Exhibitor

Profits are what interest you. One picture that you know will be a box-office power is safer than all the untested productions combined. Booking a picture that is backed by a record of successes in the big first-run houses means peace of mind for you. It is your assurance—the best assurance obtainable—that your money, time, energy and advertising will not be wasted. And this is the sort of pictures William Fox offers you.

PROFIT MAKERS

The one new thing in motion pictures this season has been the development of the Fox Idea of timeliness—the production of pictures possessing news value. The Fox Idea has been the biggest success of the season. These pictures today are making more money for exhibitors than any other series of productions obtainable. They are timely and are being kept timely.

THE PRUSSIAN CUR
THE LAND OF THE FREE
QUEEN OF THE SEA

This is especially instanced by THE LAND OF THE FREE, based on the life of General Pershing and released as WHY AMERICA WILL WIN. Sweeping revisions have been made which place the film as far ahead of the times as it was on the day of release. These pictures are proved money-makers. The Fox Idea is to keep them so. Book them now—today—while public interest is at fever heat!

PROVED VALUES

No exhibitor could compile a list of the biggest pictures of the last year without paying tribute to the Fox Idea. No one who is familiar with the amusement business could name the record box office pictures without including the products of the Fox Idea. And no productions have more convincingly demonstrated the soundness and the money-making possibilities of that Idea than

CLEOPATRA
LES MISERABLES
THE BIG SIX

These pictures have been shown around the world. They have visited many communities again and again. And they are producing big profits today just as surely as they did in the memorable week of their release. They are pictures to bank on—pictures that will clean up for any exhibitor anywhere—pictures that will be cleaning up for wide-awake exhibitors a decade hence. Why experiment? Book certainties! Get these pictures now!

CAMPE HEADS SOCIETY OF ENGINEERS

At Its Largest Gathering in Cleveland, Westinghouse Man Is Chosen—Offer Services to Fuel Conservation Officials—Interesting Papers Read and Discussed

MONDAY, November 18, saw a goodly gathering of motion picture engineers in Cleveland, where the regular semi-annual meeting of the society of Motion Picture Engineers was scheduled to take place in the form of a two-day session, which, however, was quickly changed to a three-day session when the body sized up the mass of business awaiting its attention.

President C. Francis Jenkins called the meeting to order and read his report, or rather his address. It contained several valuable suggestions. The report of the treasurer, Will C. Smith, supplied ample evidence that the organization is in a healthy financial condition. Several applications for membership were received. At this meeting the regular annual election of officers resulted in the following, which, it may be remarked, is a roster giving promise of most excellent things for the future.

President, H. A. Campe, Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company (President Jenkins having refused to allow his name to be placed in nomination for re-election); vice president, A. C. Roebuck, Enterprise Optical Company, Chicago; secretary, E. K. Gillett, Motion Picture News, New York City; board of governors A. F. Victor, Victor Animatograph Company, Davenport, Iowa, for a two-year term; R. P. Burrows, General Electric Lamp Works, Nela Park, Cleveland, two years, and Dr. Herman Kellner, Bosch-Lomb Optical Company, Rochester, one year.

The organization created the office of past president, the first incumbent of which will be Mr. Jenkins, who is the father of the organization and who has filled its chief executive office with credit both to himself and the organization during the first two years of its life.

National Association Invitation Declined.

A communication was received from The National Association suggesting that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers take some action looking to aiding the National Association when matters came up necessitating the employment of expert engineering knowledge. This proposition brought forth considerable discussion, the consensus of opinion being that Motion Picture Engineers cannot, as a body, in any way affiliate with the National Association or any similar body, it being purely a scientific engineering body, in no way connected with the commercial side of the industry. A committee was finally appointed to draft a letter to the National Association setting forth its attitude in the matter.

The organization appointed a committee through which the services of the organization are to be tendered to the Fuel Conservation officials in Washington. This committee consists of R. P. Burrows, representing the incandescent lamp end of things; J. C. Moulton, representing converting machinery; W. R. Rothaker, representing the laboratories; Max Mayer, representing the studios; W. C. Kunzman, representing the carbon industry; F. H. Richardson, representing the projectionist; E. K. Gillett, who is personally acquainted with Dr. Garfield, head of the Fuel Administration, and C. Francis Jenkins, past president of the organization.

One of the important actions of the meeting, from the viewpoint of the writer, was the adoption of the word "projectionist" as the society's designation of the man who projects motion pictures.

Largest Attendance Yet.

The attendance at the meeting was much larger than at any previous gathering; also almost every one remained for the entire three-day session, convincing evidence of the interest and value of the business coming before the body.

Monday evening a banquet was tendered the association by the Cleveland manufacturers connected with the industry. It took place in the French Room of the Hotel Winton, where the convention was held, and the sight of our dignified friend, A. C. Roebuck, in a most disreputable paper plug hat was alone worth the price of admission, to say nothing of "Skinny" Cudmore, who filled the position of toastmaster, lending great weight to that office.

The following are the papers read before the association, which later will be published in its proceedings and thus be made available to the industry at large:

"The Carbon Arc for Alternating and Direct Current Motion Picture Production," W. C. Kunzmann; "Standardization of the Motion Picture Industry and the Ideal Studio," John W. Allison; "Natural Color Cinematography," William V. C. Kelly; "Motion Picture Film in the Making," G. A. Blair; "Sprocket Teeth and Film Perforations and Their Relationship to Better Projection," A. C. Roebeck; "The Projection Room and Its Requirements," F. H. Richardson; "The Function of the Condenser in Projection Apparatus," Herman Kellner; "Fundamentals of Illumination Measurements in Motion Picture Projection," R. P. Burrows; "Advantages in the Use of the New Standard, Narrow Width, Slow-Burning Film for Portable Projectors," William B. Cook.

Philadelphia Next Meeting Place.

Philadelphia was unanimously chosen as the next place of meeting, Will C. Smith and R. P. Burrows being appointed a committee to make the necessary arrangements.

Taken altogether, it may now be said that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is an established institution—a tub standing absolutely upon its own bottom. It has already accomplished a very great work in the quickening of interest in scientifically accurate knowledge of the various phases of the industry, and in the collection of papers of very great value, the same bidding fair to form the nucleus of what will, in time, be a library of surpassing value.

Mr. Campe, the new president, is a man of much energy, as well as earnestness of purpose. We are not merely handing out bouquets when we say we are expecting great things from his administration. He has apopinted R. P. Burrows as chairman of the Papers Committee, the really one most important committee of the organization, and one upon the activities of which hinges, to a very large degree, the success of its meeting. RICHARDSON.

Pictures Men Hit Hardest In War, Says Goldfish

THE effect of peace on the cinema industry? Well, obviously the first and happiest result you will see will be the one everybody has been shouting for so long—better pictures," said Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn.

"In every way peace is a godsend to us. Of course, we were prepared and organized to stand an indefinite period of war conditions, although we were harder hit by them than any other industry in the country, probably.

"You see, quite apart from taxation—a tax on raw film, a tax on the finished product, income tax and so forth—and tremendously increased expenses, we had to face a serious curtailed revenue. In the first place a great many very keen regular fans were for the time being eliminated by enlistment and the draft.

"What has been still more serious for us is that while they were away from home, or at any rate as long as the war lasted, their women folk stayed away from the theatres. This was particularly noticeable in the smaller towns, where this is partly a matter of sentiment and partly of convention and imposing on the neighbors. Already reports from Goldwyn exchanges all over the country show an extraordinary increase in theatregoing since the news of the signing of the armistice was confirmed. So, although a couple of years may elapse before all the men return from Europe, the relief from worry and anxiety has brought many of the indispensable fans back to the theatres.

War Playing Hob with Exports.

"Furthermore, the war was playing hob with our export trade. The cinema is one of the industries in which American supremacy is generally recognized, even abroad. Foreign producers may dislike to admit it, but foreign picture fans and foreign box-offices admit it, all right.

"Now, our nice, helpful and welcome foreign business is about to be multiplied many fold. And, of course, it is obvious even to the layman that the more our revenue the better pictures we can make.

"Then, too, some of our most invaluable people will be coming back, people we have sorely missed, writers, directors, cameramen, actors. The difficulty of securing good leading men has been enough to keep us all awake of nights. And frequently when we did get a good one he would become so popular that we would have to make a star for him.

"Again, during the war the censorship has made things very difficult for us. I don't mean merely the war censorship, but the local censorship, which is parochial enough in piping times of peace. So altogether it would be difficult to find any body of men more exultant—quite apart from natural patriotic and humane consideration which one takes for granted—over peace than the producers of moving pictures."

Exhibitors Want Clubhouse.

After the executive committee meeting of the New York Exhibitors' League November 14, a suggestion was made by some of the members that a motion picture club be formed and a suitable clubhouse be secured, where theatre owners can bring their friends and be proud of it.

Twelve men immediately agreed to advance $100 each to start the clu with the understanding that the organ zation would not be started until $5.0 had been subscribed, the time limit t be January next.

John Manheimer, Max Oestricher, Le A. Ochs, Samuel Rhonheimer, Ike Hart stall, Charles Steiner, A. D. Stockheimer Sol Coleman, Charles O'Reilly, William Hilkemeier, Charles Haring, Morri Needle, Louis Blumenthal, and A Harstn guaranteed to subscribe as char ter members, and are to pass on all fu ture applicants. Already more than a dozen exhibitors have sent their checks to the treasurer, Mr. Needle.

It is understood to be the intention to have a thoroughly equipped clubhouse which will do credit to the exhibitors' branch of the industry.

Industrial Division Gets $38,782.73 in War Drive

WITH several companies still to be heard from when the drive closed Wednesday night, November 20, the total reported to Chairman William Fox, by the Industrial Division of the Allied Theatrical, Motion Picture, Music and Entertainments Committee in the United War Work Campaign was $38,782.73. When all the companies which this division solicited have reported in full it is expected that this total will exceed $40,000.

The first two days of the drive were of little or no value owing to the fact that the news of the actual signing of the armistice came on the day on which the campaign started. The peace celebration that followed was of such magnitude that people did not recover from it sufficiently to interest themselves in giving until two or three days later.

For this reason much of the circularization work of the committee had to be duplicated as numerous concerns called up to say that in the confusion of the celebration and the days immediately following that the first appeals which the committee had sent out had been mislaid. This had the effect of making the returns from the various companies and their employes extremely slow.

Nehls Returns from Eastern Trip.

Because of the ending of the war and the consequent changes in the foreign film situation, General Manager R. R. Nehls of the American Film Company made a trip to New York and Boston to confer with the principal exporters and distributors for foreign countries. Upon returning to the executive offices in Chicago Mr. Nehls stated that there will be a sudden and unexpectedly large increase in foreign business. He is of the opinion that subjects based upon good, interesting stories will be in much greater demand than war stories or even romances based on or written around the theatres or incidents of the war. He returned just in time to see "When a Man Rides Alone," a superwestern featuring William Russell, made by the William Russell Productions for the American Film Company, and to be distributed through Pathe Exchanges. The new arrangement whereby the entire sales force of the Pathe Exchange, comprising more than the 150 film rental representatives, has been added to the American's regular sales force of 35 men is going to prove an ideal one, according to Mr. Nehls.

COUNTRY ALMOST FREE OF SCOURGE

Reports Show Influenza Is Rapidly Becoming a Thing of the Past—Good Business Generally Greets Lifting of Ban —Some Michigan and Ohio Towns Suffer a Recurrence

ACCORDING to the consensus of this week's reports from the correspondents of the Moving Picture World the country is practically free from the ban on amusements owing to the scourge of influenza. Theatres everywhere are opening, but to varying volumes of business. In Utah the lfting of the ban was greeted by the best business in the history of theatres in that state, and the same report holds good with houses in the Twin Cities—St. Paul and Minneapolis—where the embargo was lifted on November 14 and 15, respectively.

San Francisco and other cities in California where the ban was recently lifted, are enjoying capacity business. But in San Francisco in the interests of safety the wearing of gauze masks is still compulsory.

Upon the lifting of the quarantine over sixty small towns in scattered sections of Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas opened their doors to an amusement hungry public, leaving possibly only a dozen places in the Southwest still under the ban. Kansas City and Louisville opened to mild business.

A setback comes in the recurrence of influenza in some Michigan and Ohio towns, with the result that the places affected in these states have again been placed under quarantine. Cincinnati also has a flare-up of influenza, and again may be placed under the ban.

Utah Theatres Open to Best Business Ever

AFTER having been closed for more than one month under an order of the state board of health, theatres of Salt Lake City and throughout Utah were allowed to reopen Monday, November 18. In Salt Lake City the influenza appears to have passed the epidemic stage, and the health authorities are of the opinion that no harm will now come from indoor gatherings. Schools, also, reopened Monday.

The theatres in Salt Lake City and a number of other Utah cities and towns closed with the end of performances on the night of October 10. Subsequently the order was extended to cover the entire state. While the forced closing proved a severe hardship on places of amusement, the theatre managers were disposed to make the best of the situation, and the health authorities immediately had their hearty co-operation, and this, in spite of the fact that no formal order was ever served upon them. The only notification received was the general order of the health department published in the daily newspapers.

Business was better than ever with the reopening, however, and the community appears to have entirely recovered from the scare caused by the epidemic, which for three weeks assumed serious proportions.

Managers took advantage of the closing to give their houses a thorough cleaning, and renovations of a minor nature were made in some of them. Several were newly decorated and presented a much improved appearance on the opening day.

The public appeared to be even more impatient for the lifting of the quarantine than were the managers. No sooner were the doors opened again than the crowds flocked into the houses. Especially was this true of the motion picture theatres, of which Salt Lake City has eleven.

Return to sun time also is having a salutory effect upon the picture theatres. Business was hurt somewhat by the daylight saving time, especially during the summer months when summer resorts were open.

Two local motion picture people died victims of influenza—Arthur Morse Moon and his wife, Tina Moon, formerly Tina Anderson. Both were born and educated in Salt Lake City, and although their deaths occurred at Butte, Mont., the bodies were brought to Salt Lake for interment. Both were well known at the California studios.

Twin Cities Authorities Lift Embargo on Theatres

THE Twin Cities are open towns again as far as moving pictures are concerned, and business, especially in Minneapolis, has started off with a rush that is bringing cheer to the film interests of this territory.

St. Paul opened Thursday, November 14, after a comparatively brief closing period of ten days. Minneapolis enjoyed its first good, hearty laugh, and its first "weepy sobs" in more than a month on the following day, because the movies there had reopened, too.

After thirty-six unhappy days, the influenza ban on Minneapolis moving picture houses, theatres, schools, public dance halls, billiard and pool halls, at 11.30 a. m., Friday, November 15, was lifted by the city health department.

The public at large, which had not been at large for more than a month, became aware of the lifting of the ban at just 11.31 a. m., when a downtown moving picture house opened its doors to the passing throngs.

And the passing throngs stopped passing. They hesitated, still uncertain as to whether or not one huge joke was in the process of being played, walked up to the cashier's cage, and then, satisfied that it was all true, entered joyously.

By noon scores had learned the glad tidings. By 4 p. m. thousands knew. By night moving picture houses downtown and in the residence districts were going full blast. The thirty-six days' drouth had ended, and cash drawers gulped thirstly as the drip of nickles, dimes and quarters began flowing again through the little crescent opening in the glass cage.

Picture exchange managers stood on the sidewalks and rubbed their hands as they watched the files of eager fans pass in. House managers stood just inside the door and registered happiness, their faces wreathed in smiles.

Rejoicing at the lifting of the influenza ban spread to all parts of Minneapolis' theatrical world. Musicians, ushers, operators, ticket sellers, ticket takers and all the rest had visions of a real pay envelope once more.

Strand Gets Rather a Slow Start.

Just thirty seconds after the board of health passed the motion raising the influenza ban, the lights flashed on at the Strand, the operator started the motion picture machine and the show was on.

All during the week Charles Branham, the manager, felt certain that the theatre ban would be raised and he didn't want to lose a minute after action had been taken by the board of health. So on Monday he ordered the complete house staff to report daily at 11 a. m.

Every day during the week the employes reported, only to be dismissed a few minutes later. On Friday, however, with the board in session, Mr. Branham held his assistants at the theatre. Chester Bass, head usher, was sent to the city hall with instructions to telephone the theatre the moment the board had acted.

The machine operater threaded the first reel of "The Man from Funeral Range" into the machine and all was ready.

At 11.30 a. m. the motion to lift the influenza ban was passed. And one minute later Bass, using the automatic telephone to prevent delay due to the strike of telephone operators, was informing Mr. Branham that he could open.

Persons passing the theatre at 11.31 a. m., Friday, were surprised to see the lights flash on and the ticket seller take her place at the window.

Several hundred theatre managers, ministers, school officials and other men, women and children who had been waiting an hour for the meeting to open at the courthouse, hung on every syllable that passed from the lips of the health department head, Dr. H. M. Guilford.

In Minneapolis the epidemic has waned until there are now on an average of about 11 deaths and 100 cases daily. Despite a motion by Alderman C. A. Dight that children under fifteen years of age be excluded from the picture theatres for another week, which was lost, the vote to remove the ban on public gatherings was unanimous.

Practically all of the cities of the Northwest are now back on the old business basis.

San Francisco Houses Open to Capacity Business

FOLLOWING an enforced period of darkness that extended over four full weeks the theatres of San Francisco, with the exception of a few suburban houses, have been opened and are doing a tremendous business. The influenza epidemic has been wiped out, but in the interests of safety the use of gauze masks is still being insisted upon by the health authorities, and for the time being these are worn in theatres, as on the streets, and theatre owners are being held responsible for the proper protection of patrons in this respect. A few days before the opening date finally decided upon the city health officer advised theatre owners not to hope to open before the first of December, but the improvement in conditions became so rapid that a decision was finally reached to permit them to open their houses two weeks earlier. It was stipulated, however, that patrons must be masked and that slides be thrown upon the screen before every performance calling attention to this requirement. Despite their heavy losses during the past month theatre owners offered to give the net proceeds of the opening day to the United War Work campaign fund.

Other California Cities Also Open.

The suburban city of Oakland has followed the lead of San Francisco in permitting theatres to reopen on November 16, and the theatre managers there have likewise offered the opening receipts to the United War Work fund. The theatres of Sacramento, Fresno, Stockton and San Jose also opened on this date, as well as those in scores of smaller communities. Within a period of ten days it is likely that every theatre in the San Francisco territory will again be in operation.

Over Sixty Southwest Towns Open.

The third week in November found business in the Dallas territory back to normal after influenza quarantine conditions. Some sixty odd small towns in scattered sections of Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas opened their theatres Saturday, November 16, and possibly only a dozen or so theatres in the Southwest are now closed by quarantine.

Dallas film men are working harder than in years handling bookings. Business, especially in the larger cities, is reported as good.

A good help to motion picture exhibitors was the release from army quarantine granted by the southern departmental headquarters of the United States army. In Dallas soldiers had been barred from attending theatres for over a month. Military police were stationed at every theatre entrance to enforce the rule. On November 15 Dallas army posts permitted soldiers to attend the theatres, and a rush of khaki followed. Civilians who may have been keeping away owing to the military rule are now attending and making up for lost time.

South Bend Opens to Good Business.

After approximately a month of closed doors occasioned by the epidemic of influenza, the motion picture theatres at South Bend, Ind., were reopened to the public on Saturday, November 9, and enjoyed an exceedingly big business on Saturday night and Sunday. Many changes were made in the various theatres during the closing period, but perhaps the most noticeable changes occurred at the Auditorium.

During the four weeks that the theatre was closed, the interior was thoroughly renovated. The lobby, in addition to receiving a fresh coat of paint, has been decorated attractively with the flags of the allies.

Eighteen new six-inch electric fans and two of the best ventilating systems in the country, one of which distributes Amtholized air to every part of the house, have been installed. The theatre is now claimed to be one of the most sanitary places of amusement in Northern Indiana.

Condemn Fort Wayne Health Board.

Angered because the closing ban has not yet been lifted, a delegation, seventy strong, consisting of owners of all motion picture theatres in Fort Wayne, Ind., along with representatives of the motion picture operators union, the musicians' union, and various other organizations, representing some 12,000 persons, met at the city hall last Friday night and drew up resolutions condemning the health board for its action.

The ban at Fort Wayne was to be lifted on Saturday, November 9, but at the last minute announcement was made that it would be continued for at least another week.

The resolutions, among other things, declared that those present were of the opinion that conditions in Fort Wayne did not warrant the continuance of the order, which has been in effect for nearly five weeks, but that if conditions are as bad as the health board says, the closing order should be extended to include all business houses where people congregate. "If closing is a preventative against an epidemic, travel from infected areas certainly shoud be restricted, and it appears to be equally essential that every possible precaution be taken, even to the closing of all industries except absolutely necessary supply houses," the resolutions said.

Attaches of the office of the State board of health, Indianapolis, said the health commissioner at Fort Wayne had reported that conditions were generally improved. They said they had not been able to determine why the ban had not been lifted.

Hull, Quebec, Is Finally Opened.

The exhibitors of Hull, Quebec, have been in a "hull" of a state as a result of difficulties in the way of the reopening of their theatres following the influenza epidemic.

Hull theatres were closed early in October, and it was not until November 11 that the local authorities decided it would be safe to permit the resumption of operations on the part of the exhibitors. Every preparation was made to reopen on that date and everything looked rosy once more because the theatres of Ottawa, just across the river, had been permitted to reopen. The Hull theatres had hardly opened their doors when an order was received from the Provincial Board of Health for Quebec to keep the lid on. Hull officials were also asked as to their authority in granting permission for the theatres to be reopened. There was nothing for the Hull exhibitors to do but put up the shutters again.

The Quebec Board eventually decided to remove the ban four days later, although the same board had granted a special concession to the exhibitors of Montreal to resume operations on November 12. The Hull theatre men did not care whether they ever opened again or not because the conflicting orders just about killed all chance for good business.

Business Poor in Kansas City.

The ban on theatrical exhibitions has been generally lifted in Kansas City territory. The public is quickly forgetting that there ever was an epidemic of influenza. Business is not coming back with a rush, however—few managers report full houses. It is expected that the public will have to have its enthusiasm for pictures revived, and must again be got into the habit of going to the show.

Alice Brady in "Her Great Chance." Clara Kimball Young in "The Road Through the Dark."
Scenes and Stars from Two Select Productions.

Michigan Suffers a Recurrence.

Influenza in Michigan has again loomed up as dangerous, and while the ban is still off in Detroit, Grand Rapids, and most of the principal cities as far as the state board of health is concerned, the local boards of health in many of the smaller towns have ordered all theatres closed, with the result that at the present time there are at least fifty towns where pictures cannot be shown. Among them are Port Huron, Pontiac, Saginaw, Bay City, Reed City, Alma, Ishpeming, etc. Bay City is the hardest hit city of all—it looks as if this place will not get opened much before December 15, if then. The number of cases and toll of death has been heavy, and it has forced the health authorities in Saginaw to close down owing to its adjacency.

Louisville Opens to Mild Business.

Although all amusement houses in Louisville started operations again on Sunday, November 10, and handled a capacity business on that day, business as a whole hasn't been anything like what the exhibitors had predicted it would be following the opening. The city is still full of influenza, and hundreds and thousands of patrons of theatres are still afraid to attend the shows. The result has been that a fair business has been done at the downtown houses, but the suburban houses haven't been doing hardly anything, due largely to the fact that parents are afraid to allow their children to go, especially young school children.

Embargo Lifted in Seattle.

Seattle theatres were opened on Tuesday morning, November 12, with the lifting of all influenza regulations from the city. Other cities and most of the towns of the State were declared open at the same time, so the difficulties of the film exchanges were much less than had been anticipated.

Seattle theatres for the most part opened with the features scheduled for the week of October 6, when they were closed, but subsequent bookings have been entirely rearranged. The first day's business, after the opening, was a record breaker for all of the houses. The people were hungry to see a show after their five weeks' forced abstinence.

Cincinnati Opened November 12.

The opening of Cincinnati theatres on Tuesday, November 12, after a lay-off of over five weeks, saw the public eager for amusement, and highly appreciative of the offerings of the moving picture houses and the others as well. All of the theatres had taken advantage of the period of darkness to brighten up their interiors and to renovate everything thoroughly, and their opening showed them more attractive than ever.

Some Kentucky Towns Open.

The lifting of the ban against public amusements and gatherings, especially in theatres, was made in the Kentucky towns across the river simultaneously with that in Cincinnati. The authorities in Covington, Newport, Dayton, Bellevue and Ft. Thomas took this action, effective November 12, and the numerous moving picture houses in those towns were permitted to open on that date. In Ludlow, Ky., another of the string of towns opposite Cincinnati, a renewed outbreak of influenza, due apparently to the crowds which visited Cincinnati to celebrate the peace news, made it necessary to continue the restrictions.

Ohio Towns Close Again.

A recurrence of Spanish influenza caused the reclosing of Marietta, Pomeroy and all Ohio River towns. Outbreaks worse than first in Martin's Ferry, Bridgeport, New Lexington, Ohio, may cause the closing again of these towns. The State Health Board has given warning of too early closing. The compulsory wearing of masks may hurt business in Indianapolis. Cincinnati may have to close again, because of more new cases. PAUL GRAY.

New Haven to Be Home of Binney Productions

HAROLD J. BINNEY, who has for some time past been working on productions featuring Vangie Valentine, announces that he is taking his entire organization to New Haven, Conn., where he has made all arrangements for a permanent home for the company. Mr. Binney says that about two months ago and shortly after coming to New York from Jacksonville, where he had been operating for some time past, he was invited by several citizens from New Haven to look into the advantages offered by that city. He was so pleased with the scenic advantages and with the promised co-operation of the citizens that he has made arrangements to take his staff as well as his stock company of artists to that city for future production.

The remodeling of a large building in the heart of the city has already been started and will be extensively equipped with the most modern lighting effects as well as extensive office accommodations and pleasant dressing rooms. The studio proper consists of a large indoor space 57 by 132 feet, with 30 feet overhead space. Mr. Binney says that this is being fitted with a new floor and complete heating equipment. There is also being installed a modern laboratory equipment that will enable the company to do its developing each day.

The first or sample print will be turned out there and all cutting and assembling will be easily handled, as a cutting room and projecting room will be included in the improvements.

It is expected the new plant will be ready not later than December 6.

Changes in Fox Branches.

Charles Muehlman, formerly manager of the Denver exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, has been transferred to the management of the San Francisco exchange, where he is now in charge. Mr. Muehlman supplants George Mann, who has become connected with the management of the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco.

Leonard A. Quill, formerly salesman of the William Fox exchange in Pittsburgh, has been promoted to manager of the Denver exchange, assuming his new duties November 26.

LOIS WEBER TO DIRECT ANITA STEWART

Concludes Contract by Wire With Louis B. Mayer to Produce "In Old Kentucky" for First National

A CONTRACT, the details of which were settled by telegraph, has been concluded between Lois Weber and Louis B. Mayer which gives Miss Weber the direction of Anita Stewart in "In Old Kentucky," second of her special super productions for distribution by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, at a salary of $3,500 a week, said to be the highest price ever paid in this department of production, with the possible exception of D. W. Griffith.

Negotiations with Miss Weber were started in a telegram from Mr. Mayer in which he offered her this sum to assume the directorial responsibility for his second First National release. This brought a reply from the noted woman director for detailed information about matters pertinent to the production of "In Old Kentucky." A series of telegrams resulted, in which questions were asked and answered by both parties. Then came the following and final wire from Miss Weber:

"I am gratified with the prospects in our business association. Have engaged a staff. What is your idea of leading man and his salary? Have you bought any plays or stories for Miss Stewart? Have you any preferences as to their character? Am anticipating most pleasant relations with her. Will exert every effort to pick best productions and will try in every way to justify your confidence."

To this Mr. Mayer wired a reply, which is a brief of his production policy. It reads:

Mayer Wants Results.

"Thanks for expressions of satisfaction with our business relations. It is mutual. Regarding my ideas of leading man, it is the same as my idea of play and cast, namely the best. My unchanging policy will be great star, great director, great play, great cast. You are authorized to get these without stint or limit. Spare nothing, neither expense, time nor effort. Results only are what I am after. Simply send me the bills and I will O K them. Best wishes."

"That telegram," declared Mr. Mayer, "may sound extravagant to exhibitors if it is published in the trade journals. It isn't, and they will help me to prove that it isn't. With me it is safety first. And when I protect my investment in a production by insuring quality in direction as well as in the star and story, I assure the exhibitor with equal fidelity to principles of good business because I am making for him a production that will have a box-office value which will be extraordinary in exact proportion to the extraordinary talents and abilities of Miss Weber as the director, of Miss Stewart as the star and of the story as screen material."

Miss Weber has long had a definite, recognized box-office value of her own. When she first entered the producing field as a director the wise ones of the industry shook their heads. They were unable to figure how a woman could compete successfully in a sphere hitherto usurped wholly by men. But as each new product of her brain brought forth convincing evidence of her genius the heads soon began to shake the other way. Her powers of characterization and description have proved to be unusual. Taste, beauty and clarity of continuity have marked her productions.

Mayer Outlines His Ideas.

A representative of the Louis B. Mayer Productions declared that had Mr. Mayer done nothing else since becoming a producer, he has earned the gratitude of exhibitors for exploding the theory that a big star was all that a picture needed to put it over. Believing that a capable star will always enhance a picture, he also believes that the right kind of a play, combined with proper direction and a real supporting cast, will greatly enhance the star and multiply the box-office value of the production. It is pointed out that there is an old axiom among showmen that a great star has never made a poor play a success, but that a great play has frequently made a star. In this connection Mr. Mayer is quoted as saying:

"When I signed Miss Stewart at an enormous salary some of my friends told me that I was foolish to spend a great deal of money on players, directors or plays. They said her name was sufficient in itself and that if her vehicle was any good at all she would be a big money getter. I did not agree with them and I am glad now that I didn't, for the confidence I have always had in my policy of a great star plus a great play plus a great director and a great cast is being justified every day.

"A striking evidence of what the exhibitors think of that policy is seen in arrangements just made with the management of the Strand Theatre here in New York whereby they are to pay Miss Stewart's 'Virtuous Wives' the sum of $3,000 for one week's showing."

He's Charles P. Raven Now.

Charles P. Romeo will hitherto not be known by that cognomen. The reason therefor is a peculiar one. Before going further it may be announced that this handsome young leading man of the screen drama will be labeled Charles P. Raven. He has just finished an engagement with Elaine Hammerstein as leading man in Harry Rapf's production, "Wanted for Murder," and is already preparing for another. Here's the reason for the change of name. Miss Hammerstein thought that although Romeo was a splendid name and full of traditions, it hardly suggested the heroic lead in the picture. It sounded like the name of some lovesick swain waiting for his Juliet. She suggested to Mr. Romeo that a change in nomenclature would be advisable. So Mr. Romeo bethought him of his mother's name, Raven, and from now on he will be so known.

Navy's Job Only Half Done Declares Lieutenant Childs

THE following article by Lieutenant H. D. Childs, Retired, United State Navy, now connected with the Navy Mobilization Station in the Transportation Building, Chicago, shows the urgent need at the present time by our Government of more men, and it should be carefully read, as it makes a special appeal to men employed in certain departments of the moving picture industry:

"Every soldier who sailed for France was given a round-trip ticket. The Navy took them over and now the Navy must bring them back. There can be no relaxation of effort until the job is done, until every one of our boys is returned to his home. To complete this task, the Navy needs more men, and the need is just as urgent now as it was before the armistice was sig ed. This condition offers you an opportunity to be identified with the Great War, your last chance.

"The cancellation of the November draft call has deprived thousands of men of the privilege of participating in the war, but the Navy's call for men enables you to volunteer your services. If you can qualify for any of the vacancies now existing, you may be inducted into the service at once.

"Men are needed now, if not to fight, then for services equally essential to the re-establishment of normal conditions. The Bureau of Navigation has issued a call for several hundred men who can qualify for posts which require specialized ability. Only those men who are registrants of September 12, 1918, or registrants of deferred classifications of previous registrations are eligible. Applications will now be received for camera repairmen. Applicants for induction in this branch of the service must be competent to care for, adjust, install and operate photographic instruments and mix the necessary chemicals required for the development of prints, actually develop the prints, enlarge prints, make photographic maps, or must be experts at reading photographs.

"Further information and full particulars will be furnished upon application at the United States Navy Mobilization Station, in the Transportation Building, Chicago. Mail should be addressed to Lieutenant H. D. Childs, Retired, commanding officer."

CRANDALL OPENS METROPOLITAN

Washington City's Newest Picture House a Model of Modern Theatre Construction—Outlay, $800,000—Ornamental Promenades to Different Levels a Feature

AFTER a delay of about a year due to war conditions and the inability to obtain needed materials, Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre opened Saturday evening, November 23, presenting what will probably be the last Government-made picture, "Under Four Flags." This latest addition to the Crandall string is something of which its projectors may be proud. Beautiful in its simplicity, it shows the work of artists, for the greatest of care has apparently been given even down to the minutest detail. The approximate cost of the building and ground is said to be $800,000. Reginald W. Geare, who drew the plans for the Knickerbocker Theatre, was the architect also of the Metropolitan, and the same builder, Frank L. Wagner, was employed.

Harry M. Crandall

The entrance to this beautiful playhouse is on F street, the lobby extending back from this thoroughfare a distance of twenty-eight feet to a rotunda promenade leading directly into the auditorium proper. The auditorium extends at right angles, occupying the remainder of the property on Tenth street. It is interesting to note that one of the walls of this theatre abuts the party wall of the old Ford Theatre, the playhouse in which President Lincoln was shot.

Has System of Ornamental Tunnels.

On the orchestra level there are approximately 1,000 seats. Extending over two-thirds of this space is hung the balcony and mezzanine. The boxes and loges will occupy the front section of the latter. The arrangement of this section of the theatre is novel in that it consists of a series of rises reached by a system of ornamental tunnels or promenades. This is said to be the first time such type of approaches have been used in the United States in theatre construction.

Naturally the house is of fireproof construction throughout, and neither trouble nor money has been spared in securing and providing such things as will insure the safety of both patrons and employes. The general plan of architecture is of the Adam period. The exterior of the theatre on F street is of Colonial design, with an ornamental facade bearing the nameplate of the theatre. The front is of ornamental brick, with Tennessee limestone trimmings.

A. S. Robb

James P. Morgan

The lobby is finished entirely in marble and the chandeliers are of the set-in type and of special design. A massive carved box office is placed midway in the lobby. This is large enough to accommodate three cashiers.

Thomas M. Eastwood

The decorative scheme of the interior is carried out in mauve, lavender and gray, finished with old gold, ivory and blue. The walls are hung in silk of special design. The stage is of permanent construction and is of ornamental plaster of shell-like formation. On each side of the central stage is a smaller elliptical stage with panoramic backgrounds. The hangings, furnishings and decorative fixtures are of blue and old gold.

Colonial Furniture for Lounge.

The main promenade lounge is located at the rear of the loge section, just above the foyer, flanking an elaborately carved orifice looking down upon the orchestra floor. The decorative colors are old rose, ivory, and gold. The side walls are broken by numerous full length Colonial mirrors. The furniture for the lounge was especially built in Colonial pattern. Shaded floor lamps add to the effectiveness of the decorative scheme.

The ornamental tunnel from the Tenth street side of the lounge leads directly to the loge box section of the theatre. Rest rooms for both women and men open out upon the promenade lounge.

The projection booth, situated at the extreme rear of the mezzanine floor is equipped with modern devices.

A triple manual twin sectional unit organ has been installed, with a newly patented echo attachment. An orchestra of twenty-five will occupy an especially constructed pit, surrounded by an ornamental balustrade surmounted with growing plants and ferns.

The lighting system installed is of the newest description, sixty-eight triple dimmers being included in the house and stage switchboard, which makes it possible to illuminate the entire auditorium in nine distinct colors, blending almost imperceptibly into one tone. A novel effect will be gained by throwing an apropriate color corresponding with particular scenes projected upon the screen. Another innovation is the installation of a synchronizer, an attachment running from the projection machines to the desk of the orchestra conductor, which automatically registers the time and speed of the projected picture.

Personnel of Company.

Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre is owned and controlled by the Crandall Theatre Company, of which H. M. Crandall is president; Col. Barry Bulkley, vice-president; R. W. Bulkley, treasurer, and A. E. Boitzell, secretary. These men, together with P. A. Drury, Michael Keane, C. C. Calhoun and G. F. Schutt, form the board of directors. The house will be managed by Arthur L. Robb, formerly identified with Crandall's Knickerbocker Theatre, and the orchestra will be conducted by Dr. Jesse Heitmuller.

The opening of the new house has brought with it quite a change in the duties of the employes of the company, and the position of chief inspector of theatres has been created for Joseph P. Morgan, who has been released from the position of manager of the Savoy Theatre, and will exercise supervision over all of the houses and will handle the booking as well.

Joseph P. Morgan is one of the best known theatre men in this section of the country, and incidentally one of the most popular. With Harry Crandall he has headed many of the activities of the local exhibitors and has always worked for the betterment of conditions in the business locally. He broke into the business nearly twelve years ago, in the old pioneer days, as half owner with Tom Moore of the Scenic Theatre, in Georgetown. He was also interested in an exchange at this time. In 1911 he sold out his interest in these enterprises and took over the control of the Princess Theatre, on H street, Northeast, remaining at this house until about March, 1916, when he became financially interested with Mr. Crandall, soon afterward assuming the management of the Savoy. As the chain of Crandall Theatres extended, Mr. Morgan undertook the supervision and arrangement of the shows for the different houses, and through his untiring efforts he has done much toward the building up of the Crandall circuit.

Robb Appointed Manager.

Arthur L. Robb is relieved as manager of the Knickerbocker to become manager of this latest addition to the Crandall string. He entered the theatrical field about twelve years ago, at which time he severed his connection with newspapers, and he has since managed theatres in Philadelphia and Baltimore. Mr. Robb came to Washington about six years ago and was connected with the Moore string of theatres until September last, when he went to the Knickerbocker.

"Tom" Eastwood returns to Washington to succeed Mr. Robb at the Knickerbocker. Mr. Eastwood is another well known moving picture man, for he has been managing Washington houses for the better part of the past twelve years. He successfully managed the Dixie Theatre, at Eighth and H streets, Northeast, from the time of its establishment until the opening by the same owners of the Apollo. He remained at the latter theatre until it was taken over by Mr. Crandall, when he became connected with the Hofheimer interests in Norfolk, Va. Mr. Eastwood has also had some little experience in the exchange end of the game.

Crandall's Initial Adventure.

Harry M. Crandall, the little-big man behind this growing string of theatres, needs no introduction to filmland. With extensive interests in Washington, and a grasp of conditions in a national way his name has very naturally spread to all quarters of the country. He started in business in Washington at a time when it was five cents for a single picture, hurried through without regard to projection or anything else, and when it was customary to have an electric piano drumming out weird tunes in much the same manner.

His first real work, after the initial experience gained at the airdome on North Capitol street, came some few years ago when he undertook to remodel a business property at Ninth and E streets into a theatre. It required something like $80,000 to put this deal across, and Mr. Crandall had the time of his life raising the money. Today, the Metropolitan alone represents expenditures of ten times that amount. It is said that even his own relatives were a bit skeptical of the project, and subscribed to the stock more as a compliment to him than in the hope of realizing anything on it.

Everybody knows what Harry Crandall did with that little five hundred seat house. He controls about ninety-nine shares of the stock and he has made it pay dividends that have helped out wonderfully when it came to taking over the Apollo, in the Northeast; the Savoy, in the Northwest; the Avenue Grand and Meader's, in the Southeast, and in building the Knickerbocker and now the Metropolitan.

Crandall is a live wire and he has been very successful also in picking as his associates men who came through just as he had expected. He deserves every bit of the success that has come to him.

George Crouch An Old Timer.

Another live member of the Crandall outfit is George (Cotton) Crouch, who dates his entrance into the motion picture business when about a dozen years ago he was employed at the Crandall airdome, as he puts it, sweeping up, taking tickets, running errands and serving as general factotum. Now he is entrusted with the handling of all of the moneys that accumulate daily from each of the theatres, as well as serving as secretary to Mr. Crandall. His work carries with it a great deal of responsibility.

The vacancy caused by these changes will be at the Apollo, and the Northeast section of Washington will lose one of its most popular house managers. "Steve" Eilbacher gets his promotion with the moving up of Joseph Morgan, for he goes to the Savoy as the latter's successor. Mr. Eilbacher joined Mr. Morgan when the latter took over the Princess Theatre, and later, when Mr. Crandall acquired the Apollo, Mr. Eilbacher rejoined his friend. It is not at all unusual then to look for him at the Savoy, now that this opening has come.

Eighty-first Street House Leads.

We have it on the authority of A. L. Shakman that the Eighty-first Street Theatre led all other New York City playhouses in the matter of results in boosting the recent United War Work drive. Mr. Shakman states that his house lost two days in working because they did not know the drive had officially started on the date it did. The collections from the Eighty-first Street Theatre totaled $16,070—surely a lot of money from what is practically a "neighborhood house."

MANDELBAUM DESCRIBES RENT PLAN

Cleveland Exhibitor and First National Franchise Holder of Ohio Outlines the System Adopted by His Organization Equitably to Assess Cost of a Picture

LESS than $600 a week for first run in Cleveland on Chaplin comedies, with return dates rental free and assessing exhibitor members for film rentals by a method which guarantees profitable returns to independent stars and producers on larger investments of money and time for the attainment of superior quality in their releases, are some of the startling features claimed for a new and radical exhibitors' co-operative booking plan originated and launched in Ohio by E. M. Mandelbaum, owner of the state franchise for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

Sponsors of the plan, and they include many of the prominent exhibitors in Ohio, claim it is more fair and profitable for the independent producers and stars than either a program or state rights releasing arrangement, providing their output has box office merit. They go beyond this in their enthusiasm for its proved possibilities and declare that for the first time in the history of the motion picture industry a distributing policy is in actual use which enables a producer or a star to invest $75,000 or more in a quality picture with positive assurance that they will be repaid with a commensurate profit.

According to Mr. Mandelbaum, whose business religion is exhibitor co-operation, the enfranchising and booking system he has adopted for the First National Exchange in Ohio was conceived and put into operation as the result of constant complaints from leading theatre owners about the "take-what-we-give-you-or-leave-it-alone" policy of some of the program exchanges, particularly those controlling the productions of big stars.

Ohio Situation Said to be Intolerable.

"The situation in Ohio," declared Mr. Mandelbaum, "has become almost intolerable for exhibitors, large and small. I understand that the same conditions exist in practically all territories. And the stars and manufacturers who are losing money on their productions or failing to make a justified profit because of it are experiencing financial difficulties equally with the exhibitors.

"What hapens when a manufacturer produces a picture which can properly be called an especially good subject because of its quality, because it features a well known star? He has invested possibly $75,000 or $100,000 in it. He wants his money back, with a profit. He is entitled to it as a matter of business principle. If he disposes of that production on a program he cannot make money. Program releases are under contract to exhibitors at rental prices proportionate with production cost of $30,000 to $40,000 a picture. With contract rental prices figured to pay a profit on that amount, how can he expect to have his $75,000 production rented at the same prices and still give a margin above his cost? It has never been done, and it never will be done. There are a number of manufacturers in the industry, men who have made really good pictures, men to whom the industry owes a debt of gratitude for having the courage to attempt to elevate standards of quality, who are sitting back, waiting and hoping that their productions, taken over by a program company, will some day earn enough at least to make up their investment.

$75,000 Cost Too High for Program.

"There are other manufacturers, who, through their intimate relations with executives of program companies, know that a feature costing $75,000 could not be placed on the program if it was to show a profit. The result has been that these productions have been offered to exhibitors in two ways, either on a state rights basis or by the formation of special distributing departments, operated under the same roofs with the program exchanges. These latter subsidiary exchanges lose no time in offering their exceptional wares to exhibitors. And the theatre owners who are tied up with service contracts are unable to book the superior attractions without shelving scheduled subjects, at a loss, thereby adding that much more to their rental of the specials.

"It is absolutely impossible for exhibitors, under the present system of distribution, to keep their box offices open and give the producers a square deal. And it is equally impossible for the exhibitor to get a square deal. Knowing that program distribution will not pay the costs and show a profit on a $75,000 production, the manufacturing distributors, planning a series of that calibre, create special brand names for them and then proceed to offer them, through separate departments in their own exchanges, to exhibitors who do not have contracts for their regular program releases.

Exhibitor Should Have First Call.

"That is absolutely unfair to the exhibitor who has a program contract. He is entitled to first call on the real quality specials made by the manufacturers whose 'regular stuff' he is playing every week the year around. Does he get first call? He certainly does not. Instead, he gets up some morning and finds the opposition house plastered with six-sheet announcements of the first of a series of Masterman features. He can read over again the trade journal announcement of three or four weeks before that Masterman was under contract to the program company whose productions this exhibitor uses on contract. But that doesnt' make any difference. The exchange promptly notifies him that he is booked, that he cannot cancel without forfeiting his 'good-faith-I-won't-steal-but-you-can' cash deposit, and that the opposition is paying three times as much a day for these Masterman specials as he is paying for the regular stuff. The fact that this exhibitor would have been willing to pay the same amount didn't merit consideration.

"Some manufacturers, stars and special producers seem to have the idea that exhibitors are quick to forget that sort of treatment. They appear by their actions and policies to consider the exhibitors only as a sort of necessary evil in the industry, upon whom any kind of gangster tactics will leave only a temporary physical impression.

As to Nut and Run of Mine.

"Suppose a manufacturer of automobiles went to a coal supply company and requested a contract for his winter's supply of two thousand tons of nut coal, and he was told by the distributor that we would have to take the run-of-mine, which would have to total eight to ten thousand tons to give him the desired quantity of two thousand tons of nut coal. I cannot imagine that the manufacturer would be gullible enough to pay the nut ton price for eight or ten thousand tons of run-of-mine to get his winter's supply of nut coal.

"Still, as an exhibitor, I want the productions of stars who are certain profit-earners in my theatres, and have to contract for the production of near stars, whose pictures, if I played them, would mean a loss, in order to book those features that I really want. I told one exchange manager, not long ago, that I was prepared to pay his price, no matter what it was, for the productions of three popular stars. He told me I could not have them exclusively. Instead, I would have to sign a contract for sixteen other pictures featuring stars who have absolutely no popularity with the patrons of my theatres.

Exhibitors Doubtful of Sincerity.

"When our co-operative booking policy, based on the fundamental features of the franchise system upon which the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is founded, was first presented to Ohio exhibitors, they looked upon it with suspicion. They had been fooled and betrayed too many times, by so many different methods, that anything new was distrusted. They admitted that there was an urgent and vital need for some system that would relieve them of the profit-mulcting premiums demanded by exchanges for permitting them to book star productions of known popularity and appeal. They were doubtful not of the practicality of our plan but of the sincerity of purpose behind it.

"This plan consists of making each exhibitor who adopts it a stockholder in The First National Exhibitors' Company of Ohio. This is the same general relation which exists between the exchanges owning First National franchises and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., itself. The exhibitors of Ohio, similarly with the various exchanges of First National, have their theatres figured on a percentage basis. These percentages vary from 10 per cent. down to 1 per cent., and as low as one-tenth of 1 per cent. To illustrate: one theatre, because of size, location, gross earning power and necessity for first runs, is classified as a ten per cent. franchise holder. Its stock holding in the First National Exhibitors' Company is determined by that percentage, and after the franchise is granted, it pays in on cash production as it is purchased by the distributing company, ten per cent. of the cost price. This sum represents its rental for the film. The duration of the run is determined by the exhibitor at the time he obtains his franchise. He plays the picture for the agreed length of time, meanwhile having absolute protection against competition, and against the possibility that another exhibitor, competing with him, may go to the exchange and have his offer of a higher rental accepted.

No Rental Charge for Repeats.

"The print then goes to the franchise holder who has second run. If the first run account desires to play a return date, he can do so by application for the first open time which does not conflict with later run accounts in his territory. He pays no film rental for this repeat booking. The only charge made averages one dollar a reel to pay for the labor of inspecting, cleaning and handling the print in the exchange.

"The exhibitors own the film for their territory, and by this plan of co-operation they have all the opportunity they want to make every production earn the greatest possible revenue for them and for the star or producer who makes it.

"The dollars and cents value to exhibitors of real co-operation is shown in numerous instances which have arisen since the First National Exhibitors' Company was started. One theatre, a first run house, is paying less than $600 a week for Chaplin comedies. If Chaplin comedies were on a program that exhibitor would pay possibly $2,000 a week for his pictures, and be obliged to book a dozen other productions he did not want, and could not use, to get Chaplin. And if he wants to play return dates on 'A Dog's Life' or 'Shoulder Arms,' it costs him nothing but the so-called reel tax of a few dollars at the most.

"Consider the value of this rental system to stars and independent producers. It enables the exhibitors to vary their rental prices in accordance with the value, quality and box office merit of each individual production. A producer who distributes, by a system of this kind, a production costing $100,000, can obtain not only his costs but a real profit, without working any hardship on the exhibitors, without worrying about bookings, and without the necessity for weeks of negotiations and bargaining for terms. The quality and obvious merits of his output determines its value. And he gets it back instantly."

It is understood that a booking policy somewhat similar in application is in operation in the Dallas exchange of the First National, under the management of E. H. Hulsey.

Kansas Exhibitors Solve Organization Work Problem

EXHIBITORS in Kansas City, Kan., have solved a problem of local organization work—and have gleaned some exceedingly important results from their efforts. A Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association was organized several months ago, and it now has a membership of eleven, practically all the exhibitors of the community. The exhibitors of all parts of the city are included, from Argentine and Armourdale, isolated districts within the city limits, and also from Rosedale, a small town "next door," only half a mile from the larger city. William Meyn, an exhibitor of Argentine who is well known to all filmmen who have attended Kansas state conventions, is president; R. G. Liggett, manager of the Gene Gauntier Theatre, Kansas City, Kan., is secretary and treasurer. The association employs an attorney, whose function it is to keep in close touch with the moving picture industry through the trade publications and to watch for opportunities to serve the industry in Kansas City, Kan. This attorney, who years ago was a theatrical man, has gained the point of view of moving picture men. There have been many occasions in which the services of the attorney have been of great value.

"The important factor in putting an industry right before officials and the public, is to have the right 'dope' to start with," said a member of the association. "Our attorney gets it, from the magazines and from us. Then, when there is necessity for the industry presenting its position to an official body, he knows just what should be said—and he goes and says it. We do not try to 'gang' any official body, though occasionally we all attend hearings where the presence of our number would help back up the presentation made by the attorney. We have found that nearly any official body or officer is amenable to reason. They all want to do what is right—but they have to get the information from somebody. If we give them the information on the film business, we know the facts are straight—and they know it, too.

"Any number of exhibitors that has been having trouble with its local officials, or even with state officials, could do no better than to effect such an organization—and hire a man to keep on the job of serving it. It takes a man who is especially assigned to the task, to keep the information up to date, and in such shape that it can easily be assembled for use. And it also takes a man who keeps studying the subject, to get this information up in shape for most effective use."

Nixon, Big Theatre Man, Dies at Philadelphia Home

SAMUEL F. NIXON, theatre man, for years one of the important figures in a syndicate that controlled many of the leading playhouses in the country, died Wednesday, November 13, at his home 842 North Broad street, Philadelphia, and was laid at rest the following Sunday. Mr. Nixon was 70 years old.

Mr. Nixon was born in Fort Worth, Ind., October 23, 1848. His parents' name was Nirdlinger and his own Samuel F. Nirdlinger, but early in life he changed it to Nixon, and it was as Nixon that he was known in theatrical and public life.

Mr. Nixon's theatrical career began when he became acquainted with George K. Goodwin, lessee of the Walnut Street Theatre, and was shortly appointed business manager. Mr. Goodwin at that time was also lessee of the Chestnut Street Opera House, where Fred. J. Zimmerman was business manager. In 1881 Mr. Nixon and Mr. Zimmerman formed a co-partnership, and upon the death of Mr. Goodwin in that year, assumed the lease of the Chestnut Street Opera House, which under their management became a signal success.

In 1882 they leased the Chestnut Street Theatre, and in 1889 the Broad Street Theatre was added to their list of playhouses. In 1896 Nixon and Zimmerman extended their interests beyond Philadelphia and took the Academy of Music in Baltimore. In the same year, in association with Klaw and Erlanger, Charles Frohman, and Alf Hayman was formed what was known as the theatrical syndicate, which booked over sixty theatres in the principal cities of the country.

They afterward acquired the Alvin Theatre in Pittsburgh, and the Garrick and Forrest theatres in Philadelphia. He also built the Colonial Theatre in Germantown, which is operated by his son, Fred. G. Nixon-Nirdlinger. Mr. Nixon's theatrical career had been always a conspicuous success, and his keen interest in his business affairs was preserved almost to the last, and up to within a few days was in constant touch with his general manager, Thomas M. Love.

McTyer, of General Film, Dead.

The southern district manager, of General Film, T. F. McTyer, died in Atlanta on November 19 after a severe illness of two weeks, removing from the organization one of its most energetic and capable sales executives. Word reached the New York headquarters of the company when his illness became acute that Mr. McTyer wished to retire, following a siege of poor health which had troubled him during the summer and fall. With the hope that he would improve, no successor was appointed, but Mr. McTyer succumbed after a rapid decline.

Before joining General Film Company last spring Mr. McTyer was connected with the Paramount organization at Atlanta. He was one of the South's best known of film men and was noted for his successful methods. At the time of his death he was supervising the Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas offices of General.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

FOX OPENS UP.

Miss Brockwell, who has worked in her last eight pictures under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint, is now being directed in "The Framers," her new picture, by Lynn Reynolds, who has been in charge of the Tom Mix productions. William Scott is playing opposite, and J. Barney Sherry and Harry Dunkinson have important parts in the picture. Le Saint will assume the reins in the next Mix picture. Jane and Katherine Lee will begin immediately on a new picture with Arvid E. Gillstrom directing Madlaine Traverse still has two weeks to go before starting a new production.

May Go to England.

The latest rumor about Fannie Ward is now that the war is over she may run over to London upon the expiration of her contract with Astra to see if her house in Berkeley Square is still there. If it is, and Miss Ward is sufficiently attracted by an offer she has received from an English film producing firm to make pictures in Britain, she may divide her time between that country and the United States in the future.

Mary at Sunset.

Mary Pickford has returned from New York after signing up to make three pictures for the First National Exhibitors, and with Marshall Neilan as her director, will begin work in the immediate future on "Daddy Long Legs," which Agnes Johnson is putting into scenario form. Miss Pickford will probably rent studio space at the Sunset plant for the production of the three First National features.

Weber Contract Sold.

A deal that has been consummated within the last few weeks is the transferring of Lois Weber's contract with the Universal Film Company, to Louis B. Mayer, manager for the Anita Stewart Company. The agreement calls for Miss Weber's services in the matter of directing the Anita Stewart features, which are to be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Miss Stewart is expected in California any day to begin work on her first production under the new arrangements. The picture will be filmed at the Weber studio, and Phillips Smalley will be co-director with Miss Weber.

Jack Standing's Widow Injured.

Mrs. Jack Standing, widow of the screen actor, was seriously injured one day last week, when an automobile in which she was riding skidded, throwing her out and causing her to break her ankle in the fall. Two companions in the car were also injured, but Mrs. Standing suffered the worst bruises. Besides the broken ankle, her wrist was badly sprained, and she received several severe cuts on her head.

Back to His Native Heath.

Arthur Shirley, himself an Australian, and well known to stage patrons of that country, has been engaged to star in features to be produced in Australia by John F. Gavin. A company, which is just being organized, will leave for Australia about the middle of January, and will film a number of scenes in San Francisco and Honolulu on the trip. Besides a number of players, the company will take along various American-made equipment, including high-powered lights and Bell & Howell cameras.

Ince Studios Soon to Be Completed.

The new studios under the construction at Culver City for the accommodation of the Thomas H. Ince players, will be ready for occupancy about the first of the year, according to present plans. The new plant, in addition to being equipped with all the very latest models of technical appliances, will have its own electric light plant, its own waterworks, its sewer disposal system, and its own fire department. The fire engine will furnish a pressure of a hundred pounds, and will throw a stream over any building on the place, besides coming in handy for rainstorms, cloudbursts, etc. A large natatorium, to be used for special water scenes, will be filled as required by means of the power plant.

B. B. Features.

The pictures in which Bessie Barriscale will appear in the future will be produced by the B. B. Features Corporation, a company organized under the state laws of Arizona, with Howard Hickman as president, and J. L. Frothingham of New York as treasurer. Mr. Hickman will continue to direct Miss Barriscale's pictures, and Mr. Frothingham will have charge of the financial end of the organization. The pictures will be produced at the Brunton studios, and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will release them through Pathe.

Vitagraph Busy.

The Vitagraph studio in Hollywood opened the week of November 10 after the regulation four weeks closing, with five companies at work, including Earle Williams' in "An American Ace," William Duncan's in "A Man of Might," and Bessie Love's.

Four Weddings Within Few Months.

The Lois Weber studo, now affectionately called "Honeymoon Studio," has furnished four weddings in Filmland within the past few months. The first first couple to step off were Lillian Greenberger, employe of the studio, and Spencer Valentine, brother to Grace Valentine, of stage fame; next in line was Miss Weber's own sister, Ethel, who paired off with Louis Holland, a Lasky employe; Mildred Harris, the bright particular star of the plant, was the third bride from the studio. And then as a sort of anti-climax came the news that Arthur Ford, studio manager, had led to the altar Maude George. Miss Weber expects to be beseiged by lovelorn applicants for work at her studio after this.

California's Novel Sign.

The huge electric sign for the new California Theatre has been completed and tested, and is now ready for business when the house is formally opened. Besides the word "California" in monster letters twelve feet high, there are interwoven in the sign several of the famous California poppies which are first shown as buds, then gradually opening into the full blown flower. The sign is placed on the building so that it may be seen from up and down Main street, and from Spring and Broadway.

Los Angeles News Notes.

Fred. Miller, of Miller's Theatre, is about again after a severe siege of the Flu.

When verification of the news arrived in Los Angeles that world peace had come, J. A. Quinn, of the Rialto, routed out his electricians to arrange a new sign in front of the theatre which voiced his sentiments in one word.—YANKS.

The date of the Motion Picture Directors' Ball, which had been originally set for Thanksgiving, has been definitely settled for New Year's Eve.

Mary Pickford has received a souvenir of the war from one of her godsons at the front in the shape of a portrait of herself painted by a German prisoner. Another

Beulah Booker, a local film ingenue, refused to have the "flu," but she admits to having had a rather severe attack of just plain old-fashioned "grippe."

Enid Bennet and her company, in charge of Fred Niblo, director, spent several days and nights in the desert recently filming scenes for a coming release.

Naomi Childers, who was playing opposite Harold Lockwood in "The Yellow Dove" at the time of his death, is on her way to California to put the finishing touches on the picture.

Helen Keller, who recently announced her intention of going to France to help the blind soldiers overcome their handicap, may go first to Russia, she says. Miss Keller will go to Washington soon to confer with the authorities there concerning her plan for foreign service.

Irving Cummings and Anna Nilsson are said to be cast for the leading parts.

Julian Josephson, scenario writer at the Ince Studio, who had never before in his life been sick enough to go to bed, enjoyed that rare privilege when he was attacked without warning by the dreaded Spanish "flu" recently.

Douglas Fairbanks has returned from his extended Liberty Loan tour in the East, and, with his director, is considering a number of stories for early production.

Paul Conlon, former publicity manager for Roscoe Arbuckle, is now established at the William S. Hart studios in a similar capacity.

Mrs. Charles Chaplin (nee Mildred Harris) has been suffering from a nervous breakdown for the past two weeks.

"Sunshine" Mary Anderson is looking for a larger house in Hollywood, as her mother, Mrs. Nellie Anderson, well known for her clever character work in Vitagraph films, is coming to California for the winter with Mary's little sister.

Because Madlaine Traverse used a ride a bicycle she thinks she ought not to have any trouble in learning to run her automobile—and she has learned to run it—but stopping it before it hits pedestrians and things is what she is concentrating on just now.

The Mack Sennett photoplay entitled "Yankee Doodle," which features Bothwell Browne, female impersonator, has been renamed "The Kaiser's Last Squeal."

Horace Harper Starts on Extended Trip to Far East

FROM New York to Australia, India, Dutch East India, China, Japan, the Philippines and back to the Inter-Ocean Film Building in West Forty-second street, was the 30,000-mile journey Horace G. Harper entered upon Friday evening, November 22. Mr. Harper carries with him some 25,000 feet of sample prints to merchandise in the interests of the Inter-Ocean company.

Horace Harper

When he reaches San Francisco he may start his journey via the Phillipines or go first to Australia, but in the months that he is away he will visit every exhibitor or possible purchaser of film territory in the countries mentioned above. Australia and New Zealand will be more closely covered than the other districts, but the larger centers of every great country in the Far East will have his careful attention.

Mr. Harper has established a reputation in the Antipodes through his early days in motion pictures which he spent in Australia in association with the Australasian Film Company, his travels then taking him into the countries he is now proposing to visit. He came to America a few months ago as the assistant representative of the Australasian company in this country, and he only recently switched his business connection to the Inter-Ocean.

In addition to his promotion of Inter-Ocean's interests on this trip he will carry as a specialty certain accessories of American manufacture, believing that conditions that peace has awakened, after the years of war, when Germany has been shut off from the world market, makes the time especially propitious to introduce and foster American exports of all kinds. As his specialty is films, Mr. Harper will carry film accessories into the markets he visits, and thus bring American manufactures to the attention of exhibitors and buyers in the several countries bristling, as he believes, with opportunities for doing American business.

Pearl White to Push Coal Mining.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., has the honor of being the first company and Pathe's star, Pearl White, the first film celebrity to make a government propaganda picture since peace was declared. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, announces that at the request of the United States Fuel Administration Miss Pearl White and her entire company will work at the Pathe Studio in Jersey City on this picture, which is designed to increase the production of coal per capita in the mining districts. It will be the first of a number to be issued by the Fuel Administration in an endeavor to bring coal production up to the absolute maximum.

Proctor on Coast for Pathe.

Ralph O. Proctor, who has "grown up with Pathe," gaining promotion respectively from salesman to branch manager at Chicago and from branch manager to district manager of the central western division, was recently transferred by Sales Manager Quimby to the Pacific Coast Division. He now has supervision of Pathe's branch exchanges in Denver, Salt Lake, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Spokane and Seattle. His genial manner and good business methods are quickly earning him friends among all classes of exhibitors throughout that territory.

The World's Classified advertising is a quick and low-priced means to business end. Buy, sell or exchange something? That's an effective method, as hundreds can testify.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

FILMLAND is waking from its five weeks' sleep. Signs of the resurgence is seen on every hand. Directors who have not worn puttees for over a month are observed with their legs adorned with these strange but unmistakable signs of their calling.

Megaphones are being tuned; dramatic climaxes are being dusted off; situations overhauled and tightened as to joints; eternal triangles are having their rusty hinges greased and otherwise getting fixed up.

People in Hollywood who have been passing the studios with hurried steps because of the ghostly silence of the places now linger and listen to the dull and dulcet thuds of low comedians fall-from high places and the musical sound of helpless heroines being choked by heartless heavies.

Villains who have worn their features in repose are reassuming their sardonic expressions; exponents of the western drama are practicing looking at folks from the corners of their eyes with steely glances newly burnished; ingenues who have been lolling around the back porches of their bungalows are patronizing the permanent hair wave shops.

Another week and smoke will be pouring from the flues and funnels of film factories everywhere. All Movieland will respond to the clang and clangor of film making and our celebrated sun will be busy from the time he arises over the oil wells to the east until he seeks his repose at eventide in the billows back of Bundy's Bath House, writing records of tense and thrilling dramas.

How a Mental Legacy Works Out.

I had the pleasure of rubbernecking one of our most prominent Flu victims this week. I refer to Benjamin, otherwise known as "Bennie," Zeidman, address, Fairbanks Lot, Hollywood.

Mr. Zeidman being by profession a press agent, a calling requiring the exercise of the utmost probity, and personally one in whom the love of truth amounts to almost a passion—and as he had the Flu with great severity and all of the trimmings, including pneumonia and a day and night nurse, I feel that his experience will be of infinite benefit to those who may yet have to entertain a flock of Flu germs in their system.

A history of the devastating influence of the Flue was gathered from a brief yet comprehensive conversation with Mr. Zeidman.

The Flu germs make their first attack on your sneezer. You sneeze with great rapidity and abandon; your eyes weep without effort; your nose assumes a hue as the barleycorn pink. Your temperature rises, you take aspirin, to your bed, and everything the doctor orders, which—if he is in touch with a well-stocked drug store—is considerable.

About the fourth day you decide that a life made up entirely of sneezes holds no charm, and you begin to put your house in order by making mental legacies of your most cherished possessions

You decide to give your automobile to Tom Geraghty, and the silver cigarette case presented to you by Mary Pickford to Pat Dowling.

The next day you remember the tree-climbing habit of your car and wonder if it were wise to give to a person of the temperamental character of Tom Geraghty. Maybe Pat Dowling, being in the Navy and having less time, could use it with less trouble, blow-outs, and police court summons.

Tree Climber Becomes a Sailor.

You change the bequests. Pat gets the car, Tom the cigarette case. That night you dream of Pat racing around and around the deck of a battleship in your car and getting court-martialed by an admiral that looks like Paul Jones.

Pat shall not have the car. He shall have the cigarette case, and that night you see Pat offering a cigarette to the admiral and saying: "This case once belonged to Bennie Zeidman," and six sailors get busy and mop up the tears that flow from their eyes.

The next day you notice for the first time that the day nurse wears a Flu mask, and you wonder how she looks without it. You ask her if there is any rule against eating in this hospital, and when she brings you a trace of tapioca pudding, you want to know if Hoover is doing the cooking.

You decide that you will think it over again about the car and the cigarette case. The doctor looks at you more cheerfully and gives you the batch of telegrams that have come for you, one of which reads.

"Heard that you were dead, but satisfied it is press agent yarn. Wire confirmation or denial at once. Al Cohen. Collect."

You finally leave the hospital with a light head and a feeling that it will take you at least two years to get back to the old pep that was yours before the Flu.

Lehman to Make More Sunshine.

Having heard that Henry Lehrman, of the Sunshine comedies, had erected a new office building, I went over to the Sunshine lot and found the report to be true.

Henry has got a new office building, and it is just about the "dernier crie" in office buildings. It is as fine as a fiddle—a whole orchestra of fiddles, in fact—and a structure that is an ornament to the film colony and a credit to our fair and famed city.

The office building is not the only new thing on the Sunshine lot, either. There is a brand new publicity representative out there in the person of J. H. Walraven of New York and elsewhere, a Pub Rep that is amply on to his job, and who hands nice cork-tipped cigarettes to the trade press and otherwise comports himself as a good guy should. "Wally" is hereby welcomed to our midst.

Things were busy at Sunshine, and they are awful careless with their props when they are busy at that plant.

I got out on the stage at the same moment that Hugh Fay made his entrance into a scene that represented the hallway in a hotel. Hugh was accompanied by 37,000 gallons of water—and they let all that good water run around all over the place, and nobody tried to mop it up.

What the Players Do to the Water.

I told Director William Campbell that they ought to dam the water, and he said, "That's what they all do when they have to slosh around in it."

Jack White was working on a big set—one of the largest I have ever seen used in a comedy. It represented a Hunt breakfast in a swell country place. Vera Steadman, Lloyd Hamilton, Jimmie Adams and a lot more were in the set. I got very much interested in the work and thought I would stick around and see it all until I found out that the action of the story included one of the hunters mistaking a polecat for a rabbit in one of the scenes, and not knowing but that this was the scene, I decided to go away from there while the going was good.

A Working Girl in Peacock Blue.

I then watched Fred Fishback directing Jack Copper and Mac Swain in one of those go-like-the-devil panorama comedies, and if I ever had the idea that a comedian doesn't earn his money, I changed my mind after watching Jack Cooper at work.

I saw Ethel Teare going somewhere with a comedy make-up on and two dogs, and got her to stop long enough for the "still" man to take a shot at her for Rubbernecking, and then just as I was about to leave I was witness to a touching scene between director and player—one of the little misunderstandings that sometimes mars the pleasures of work in a studio.

The First Reading of "Cheating Cheaters," at the Sunset Studio, Los Angeles.

Besides Miss Young are to be seen Anna Q. Nillson, Jack Holt, Tully Marshall, Frank Campeau, Edwin Stevens, Mayme Kelso, Frederick Burton and Nicholas Dunaew. Under the direction of Allan Dwan.

Director Campbell had told Betty Carpenter to change her costume to that of a working girl, and Miss Carpenter came and stood in the door of her dressing room in a charming peacock blue outfit and said, "Will this do?"

Campbell threw up his hands.

"I said working girl," he said.

Betty said she was a working girl and that this was the one dress she liked best to work in, but just to please the director she went back and got the dowdiest dress in her wardrobe.

FAVORABLE CHANGES IN EXPORT RULES

Removal of Restrictions Should Assist American Producers in Regaining Foreign Trade

REMOVAL of restrictions upon exports should assist American film producers materially in regaining the foreign trade lost during the war and improving our business with new markets developed during the past few years. How much ground we have lost is shown by figures of the Department of Commerce, which give the exports of exposed film during the first nine months of the current year as 60,522,121 linear feet, valued at $3,467,875, as compared with 128,362,032 feet, with a value of $5,571,613, during the corresponding period of 1916. Exports of these films during the first three quarters of last year amounted to 86,745,357 feet, worth $4,793,098.

Our exports of unexposed film also have fallen off. Whereas, during the nine months period of 1916 they amounted to 53,041,959 linear feet, with a value of $1,675,269, during the same period of 1918 they amounted to only 46,753,910 feet, valued at $1,198,153. Last year the total for the nine months was 49,242,907 feet, valued at $1,051,178.

Practically all the loss in exports of exposed film is in shipments to countries engaged in the war. The United Kingdom, for instance, to which during the first nine months of 1916, we shipped 75,692,219 feet, valued at $3,247,390, during the corresponding period of last year took only 23,459,426 feet, with a value of $1,824,627, and this year 13,132,998 feet, worth $854,120.

This was, of course, by far the greatest loss, the United Kingdom having been our heaviest customer. France, however, also showed a tremendous loss, the total for the nine month period of 1918 being 1,077,776 feet, worth $183,860, as compared with 9,627,550 feet, valued at $236,998, in 1917, and 14,708,901 feet, valued at $412,336, in 1916. Italy also shows a big loss, although her imports jumped from 7,698,938 feet, valued at $193,516, in 1916, to 10,057,102 feet, valued at $254,066, last year; this year, however, the total dropped to 633,797 feet, with a value of $14,889.

Canada shows a slight increase as the net result of two years' work, the total this year being 9,905,554 feet, with a value of $719,018, as compared with 9,418,691 feet, worth $706,623, in 1916. Her imports last year, however, amounted to 11,070,394 feet, valued at $837,841, for the nine-month period. Exports to Newfoundland and Labrador are slowly falling off, having dropped from 1,368,320 feet, with a value of $71,184, in 1916, to 1,149,600 feet, worth $44,439, last year, and 1,038,905 feet, valued at $32,932, this year.

The only country to show a steady increase is Australia. Exports to that market, during the nine months ended with September, 1916, amounted to 5,701,498 feet, with a value of $430,347. For the first nine months of the following year they climbed to 6,902,467 feet, worth $462,401, and for the first three quarters of 1918, amounted to 8,988,369 feet, valued at $476,137.

South America should prove a fertile field for American film, judging by the success with which our exporters have met in Argentina and Brazil, two markets which have acquired a prominent position within the past year. Exports to Argentina for the first nine months of this year amounted to 3,258,196 feet, valued at $131,394, and to Brazil totaled 1,904,839 feet, with a value of $112,606. Neither of those countries had heretofore consumed any appreciable quantity of film.

Exports to all other countries except those specified amounted to 20,591,687 feet, valued at $942,919, this year, as compared with 13,773,465 feet, worth $510,217, in 1916. The total for the first nine months of last year, however, was 24,478,818 feet, with a value of $1,132,726.

Import Figures Show Big Decrease.

Imports of all classes of motion picture film show heavy decreases this year, according to figures secured from the Department of Commerce, in which the imports of the nine months ended with last September are compared with those of the corresponding periods of 1916-17.

According to the department, our imports of sensitized but not exposed film this year amounted to but 22,048,979 linear feet, valued at $362,070, as compared with 50,671,136 feet, with a value of $756,522, for the corresponding period of 1917. Imports for the nine months of 1916 were 30,200,326 feet, worth $444,811.

Imports of negative film appear to have dropped from 757,246 feet, worth $237,061, in 1916, to 622,448 feet, valued at $290,892, last year, and 283,038 feet with a value of $99,969 this year.

Positive film imported also has dropped greatly in quantity, the total of 4,125,726 feet, valued at $189,016, reported for the first nine months of 1916, having dropped this year to 1,582,847 feet, with a value of $105,524. Imports of this class of film last year amounted to 3,070,697 feet, worth $187,492.

Miss Calvert in Paramount Picture.

Catherine Calvert, the well known screen star and actress of the legitimate stage, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to play a leading part in the big Salvation Army picture which the company is about to produce in conjunction with the big charity organization. Miss Calvert shortly after signing her contract left for the Lasky studio in Hollywood, where the film will be started in the near future under the direction of Edward Jose. Eugene O'Brien also will be seen in the production.

Eastern States Now Freed from Lightless Nights Order

LIGHTLESS nights in the Eastern States affected by prospective coal shortage have been abolished by the United States Fuel Administration effective November 23. Exhibitors in New England, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Maryland and the District of Columbia no longer need dim their lights on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights, nor those in Michigan and Ohio on Mondays and Tuesdays.

So well have the people of the country lived up to the coal conservation program of the fuel administration that the policy will hereafter be to eliminate all restrictive orders gradually, and to carry on necessary voluntary conservation through educational means, it was announced. Accordingly, the only exceptions to the lightless night order's removal will be those States, while the State fuel administrator believes the situation to be such as to necessitate a continuance of the regulations.

The text of the order lifting the ban is as follows:

"The United States Fuel Administrator, acting under authority of an executive order of the President of the United States, dated August 23, 1917, appointing said administrator, and of subsequent executive orders, and in furtherance of the purpose of said orders and of the act of Congress therein referred to and approved August 10, 1917:

"Hereby orders and directs that the order of said administrator, dated November 7, 1918, establishing a regulation entitled 'Regulation restricting the use in cities, villages and towns of light generated or produced by the use or consumption of fuel', and the regulation established by said order, be, and the same hereby is, vacated and set aside as of the effective date of this order; provided, however, that if the Federal Fuel Administrator for any State shall, by an order in writing signed by him, provide for the continuance of said regulation, or of any of the restrictions thereby imposed on the use of light, then such regulation, or the restrictions specified in the order of such Federal Fuel Administrator, shall remain in full force and effect within such State until other or further order in the premises of such Federal Fuel Administrator, or of the United States Fuel Administrator.

"This order shall be effective November 23, 1918."

ANITA STEWART TALKS ENTERTAININGLY

Off for Los Angeles, the Popular Little Star Carries Magnificent Wardrobe for Studio Work

ANITA STEWART, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Martha Stewart; her manager, R. W. McFarland, and her assistant manager, Miss Virginia Norden, stopped over in Chicago between trains Tuesday, November 19, on her way to Los Angeles, where she will at once engage in her second feature for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit under the direction of Lois Weber.

I called on the party in the Hotel Sherman, where I found that Miss Stewart was slightly suffering from a cold. But this did not dampen the fervor with which she discussed anything pertaining to her moving picture activities.

She dwelt for a moment on her work in "Virtuous Wives," her first picture for the First National, letting me know in passing that it will be given its premiere at the Strand Theatre, New York, sometime in December. In this feature she plays the part of Amy Forrester, with Conway Tearle in the opposite role. She pronounces the cast a superior one, which also includes such well known players as Edward Arden, Mrs. DeWolfe Hopper and William Boyd, the latter now being leading man with Ethel Barrymore. She also spoke enthusiastically of the merits of the production as directed by George Loane Tucker.

The cast is now being selected for Miss Stewart's second picture and when she arrives in Los Angeles her approval will decide the final choice. The title of this feature was not given out for obvious reasons. Miss Stewart did say, however, that among the photoplays to be produced while she is in Los Angeles will be "In Old Kentucky," in which she will have a strong support. Just who will direct it has not yet been decided.

At this juncture Miss Stewart's cold made it a trifle difficult to continue conversation and this was sustained thereafter by her able lieutenant, Miss Norden. With her fine, instinctive love of things sartorial, Miss Norden drew my attention to the magnificent wardrobe purchased by Miss Stewart before leaving New York, most of which will be used during her Los Angeles work before the camera.

When Mac Grabs for a Dictionary.

Pardon me, rugged, masculine reader, if for a moment I should appear effeminate; but as a news gatherer I cannot forego the pleasure of enumerating some of these nifty articles of a woman savant's preference. Among them are four fur coats—four, mark you, of ermine, beaver, seal and kolinsky. Being a bachelor, I was obliged to thumb the dictionary to find out what the last mentioned fur is and where it comes from. My labors show that it is one of the best mink furs to be found, the animal wearing it having its habitat in northeastern Russia. It may also mean the fur of any one of several Asiatic minks.

But the coats are only the beginning of this costly wardrobe. There are a full dozen of evening gowns, for which the claim is made that they are the most exquisite and most elaborate which the smart shops of New York have ever turned out. In addition, there is a dazzling list of afternoon gowns and a collection of hats, of the very latest styles, which would turn the head of the fairest debutante.

In my crude judgment of grace of form and personal attractiveness, and their adornments, I would say that Miss Stewart is of a type which is especially suited to the wearing of smart clothes.

Now please bow your grateful acknowledgment, Miss Stewart!

R. W. McFarland, at one time the most trusted and able lieutenant of the managerial forces of Henry W. Savage, is manager of Miss Stewart's company and Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, is the president. It is known to the trade as Anita Stewart Productions, Inc.

Lubliner & Trinz Buys the Lakeside.

When Lubliner & Trinz opened the Pantheon on Sheridan Road, near Wilson avenue, every informed man in the business knew that the Lakeside, one block north, on the same thoroughfare, would be badly pinched, for the simple reason that the latter had only 700 seats or thereabouts, as against the 2150 seats of the Pantheon. The expected has come to pass, for the Ascher Brothers, who are good business men, knew they were up against a losing game, and so they have sold the Lakeside to the owners of the Pantheon. Under the new management, the Lakeside will charge the same admission as obtained before they acquired it—namely, 17 cents, while the Pantheon will continue to charge 22 cents. This makes the thirteenth house on the Lubliner & Trinz circuit in Chicago.

Mutual's Pacific Coast Manager Visits Chicago

JOSEPH MERRICK, who has been district manager on the Pacific Coast for the Mutual Film Corporation (now known as the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation) for some time past, with headquarters at Los Angeles, arrived in the city Sunday, November 17. He will remain until about November 25, when he will return to the coast by way of Seattle.

Mr. Merrick was seen Tuesday, November 19, and informed me that all of the Pacific Coast has been under strict quarantine since October 10 on account of the influenza epidemic. Mr. Merrick himself had a severe attack, which lasted two weeks. Conditions had abated a little when he left, on November 14.

All theatres in Los Angeles were closed October 10, and on November 11 the cases had increased 500 per cent., showing that the partial closing law in operation was not equal to the emergency. The Theatre Owners' Association then went to the city authorities, and after showing them that partial closing had been ineffective demanded that the entire town should be closed, excepting only groceries, drug stores and meat markets.

There are many cafeterias in Los Angeles, one of them seating 900 persons, and it was shown by the association that from 12 to 1 o'clock p. m., in one day 2,700 people had visited it—more people than usually attended any one theatre in the city for the entire day. The self service method prevalent in such places, it was shown, had tended to scatter germs broadcast, and it was insisted that the authorities should close all such places.

The City Council then told the Association that it would either close or open the town on Sunday, November 17. At the time of writing, Mr. Merrick had not been advised of the Council's action.

During our conversation Mr. Merrick received a telegram from the Coast to the effect that San Francisco, Sacramento and San Jose had been opened November 14, and also that Washington, Oregon, Montana, California, Nevada, Arizona, and New Mexico had been closed tight since October 10, not a theatre being opened in any part of any of those states for about five weeks.

During this closed period all theatres in army camps had been kept open and not a single case of "flu" or pneumonia had been reported in any of them. This was due to the strict quarantine established in each camp, no one being allowed to go out or come in.

The severity of the epidemic in Los Angeles was such that the business of the street car system of the city lost $5,000 daily during its run.

Chicago Censor Board Holds Second Meeting

THE second meeting of the Chicago Censorship Commission — composed of fifteen lay members and four aldermen appointed September 24 by Alderman Otto Kerner, chairman of the judiciary committee of the City Council, to recommend back to that committee suggestions to be incorporated in a revision of the present censorship ordinance—was held in the rooms of the judiciary committee, in the City Hall, Friday afternoon, November 15.

The industry on this occasion was represented by George Kleine, Joseph Hopp, M. A. Choynski and Mr. Donovan, the latter being manager of the Chicago exchange of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing orporation. Messrs. Hopp, Choynski and Donovan addressed or interrogated the commission briefly, while Mr. Kleine occupied an hour answering questions put to him by members of the commission or explaining his stand on the censorship question.

Hopp Speaks on Pink Permits.

Mr. Hopp referred to the fact that the proposed censorship would include all advertising matter for films as well as the films themselves, and pointed out that great care should be exercised so as not to injure the property of the manufacturer. He was asked by a member of the commission what he thought of the "pink" permit, and he replied that proper discrimination had not been exercised in the past in the issuing of such permits. He asserted that some pictures for which "pink" permits had been asked should have been given "white" permits and vice versa, thus showing that the required intelligence had not been exhibited.

Mr. Choynski charged that the "pink" permit had tended to arouse unusual curiosity on the part of the public and resulted in large patronage, whereas had a "white" permit been issued only the normal attendance would have been secured by the picture.

Mr. Donovan asked a few questions concerning the object of the meetings of the Commission. He was answered by the Rev. Father Dineen at some length, who said that the present investigations would be conducted along the lines followed by a similar body in London, that body having been appointed on the request of the exhibitors themselves. The work of the London commission he said had resulted in rules of censorship which have worked admirably ever since they were adopted and enforced.

Kleine Upholds Reasonable Censorship.

George Kleine recited his views on censorship in a lengthy, conversational manner. He upheld reasonable, legalized censorship, saying he differed with many of his competitors in this respect. He was severe in his condemnation of salacious pictures, but drew attention to the fact that the makers of such films were few in number and were steadily growing less.

He held that there should be a board of censors, of three or four intelligent people, of broad views, and that they should be appointed and liberally paid. He held that other boards, of the same number of members, should be appointed in case the work was too great for one or two such boards, thus protecting manufacturers from loss caused by any delay in the censoring of their films.

The Commission will hold these meetings Friday afternoon, every week, until the labors of the members have finished.

Paul C. Hinz Goes to New York.

Paul C. Hinz, who has had charge of the business department of the Chicago office of the Moving Picture World for the past four years, left for New York Tuesday, November 12, where he joined the business force there. Mr. Hinz was widely known in firm circles in Chicago and was a great favorite with patrons of this paper. Since his departure many have expressed their regret that he has moved to a new field, but everyone wishes him the greatest success and feels certain that he will achieve it. Paul is sadly missed at the Chicago office, where he was always to the front to render efficient service and then more.

Chicago Epidemic Dying Out.

The deaths from influenza and pneumonia in Chicago show a steady decline for the week ending Friday, November 22. On Saturday, November 16, a total of 199 new cases were reported—135 influenza and 64 pneumonia, the deaths being 43 in all.

Friday, November 22, showed 101 new cases of influenza and 29 of pneumonia, the deaths being 18 from influenza and 17 from pneumonia—35 in all.

Henry B. Walthall Goes to Coast.

Henry B. Walthall passed through the city Tuesday, November 19, on his way to Los Angeles, where he will begin work as the star in several features for the National Film Corporation, of which "Smiling Bill" Parsons is president. On the way Mr. Walthall will stop over at Phoenix, Arizona, for about two days to visit his brother.

Mr. Walthall was seen for a few minutes at the Hotel Sherman and advised me that three stirring stories have been lined up, from which will be selected his first feature for the National. He could not just say at the time who would be the leading woman of his company. N. W. Aronson, manager for "Smiling Bill" Parsons, accompanied Mr. Walthall to the Coast.

Mutual's Advertising Manager Here.

My old friend, Colvin W. Brown, advertising manager of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Company, has settled down in his new quarters on the eleventh floor of the Consumers' Building, in the executive offices. Mr. Brown held the position of advertising manager under Terry Ramsay for the Mutual for nearly two years.

Joseph Hopp Resigns Position.

Joseph Hopp, who has been the American Film Company's representative in Chicago territory since August 19, operating from the Pathe Exchange, tendered his resignation to R. R. Nehls, general manager, which took effect November 16. Mr. Nehls replied in a complimentary letter, in which he expressed regret and also conveyed the thanks of the company for the efficient services rendered during Mr. Hopps' term in the office. Mr. Hopp will devote most of his time for the immediate future to personal business interests, with offices in the Masonic Temple.

Asks President to Auction Peace Session Film Rights

PRESIDENT WILSON has been asked by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, to consider selling in the open market by bidding among the American motion picture concerns the American rights to make moving pictures of the coming Peace Conference. His communication was sent to Washington, November 23, and in it Mr. Smith also suggested that part of the profits of the sale be devoted to the erection of a wing to the Metropolitan Art Museum in Central Park to house a motion picture mausoleum and public projection hall where the best cinema history of the war and the Peace Conference may be stored and exhibited from time to time during the years to come.

For Moving Picture Museum.

In the announcements a few days ago of the departure for Paris to do this Peace Conference work, of the members of the Division of Films of the Bureau of Public Information, no mention was made whether the films to be subsequently exhibited would yield a profit, or just be shown at cost. Mr. Smith evidently believes that their exhibition all over the civilized parts of the globe should afford an immense profit.

Mr. Smith says he hopes the President will approve the project and start the bidding immediately through the proper official channels. "There are a dozen big picture concerns in the United States and Canada," he adds, "which have factories in Europe and can be on the ground with cameramen in a few days. Most of them are already represented in the war field. The bids can be telegraphed, confirmed by mail, and the results cabled to Europe, all before the President arrives there. Men of the motion picture industry are accustomed to work fast—they love speed. I think all should be given a chance to do this historic work of photographing the most momentous events of the world."

A Kansas Banquet for Goldwyn.

The Kansas State Board of Review has accorded the highest approval possible for two Goldwyn Star Series productions recently released. "Hidden Fires," Mae Marsh's first Star Series picture, and Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," with Will Rogers, received the coveted star mark from the Kansas censors.

Manager Richard Robertson, of the Goldwyn Kansas City office reports that the star rating is giving productions which are not only approved for general exhibition in the state, but which also are highly recommended for use on the so-called "family nights," when only the most select attractions are suggested for use of exhibitors.

FRANK KEENAN MAKES PROMISES

He Is to Become Independent Producer, Releasing Through Pathe, and Declares He Will Make Evenly Good Pictures at Brunton's Eight Times a Year

REPRESENTATIVES of the trade press were invited to Pathe headquarters in New York one afternoon last week to hear from Frank Keenan's own lips a statement of his ideas on picture production and distribution. For more than an hour Mr. Keenan discoursed upon his plans and aspirations; told how he had studied the picture producing business and explained his purpose to depart, in a general way, from the usual methods of preparing pictures for the screen.

Mr. Keenan made many statements that recalled like expressions that have come direct from the publicity department of motion picture magnates; and said other things that were not, in the same measure, "old stuff." Taking him entirely at his word, believing in the sincerity of his purpose and expressing an entire willingness to let time tell the story, it is only fair to state that if Mr. Keenan goes on as he plans he will fetch up in greater public esteem than a vast majority of the adventurers who have voyaged into picture production.

Not that Mr. Keenan may be considered an adventurer in anything save actual production of pictures as applied to show business in general and pictures in particular; his years of experience, his splendid reputation as an actor and stage producer warrants even the most skeptical "Missourian" in giving him credit for his experience. But the actor now comes forward as the producer of pictures—simply as the untrammeled director, actor and deliverer of the finished product.

Will Make Eight Pictures.

In the eight pictures that Mr. Keenan will produce will be told the story of an actor's venture into the realms of production—they may be the most important pictures ever made and circulated in that they will point a new and better way to gaining and holding public confidence. The Keenan way may revolutionize the picture business. It will take only a year to find out—for in that year will be issued eight of the best pictures Mr. Keenan and the forces at Brunton's Studios can devise. Mr. Keenan makes no claim that they will "be the best ever"—he claims that they will be as good as they can be made.

Because he does not make extravagant claims Mr. Keenan's remarks at Pathe headquarters were exceedingly worth quoting, in so far as we can give the space. Among other things he said:

"I want simply to announce my object in making pictures independently," he said. "I have been for three years in the motion picture game and a rather close observer. Now I want to be an independent producer. I want to be able to produce motion pictures without dictation from any syndicate, from any personal manager.

"In other words, I am going into independent motion picture productions, the Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., to produce as good pictures as I can; to make as much money as is possible to make under the circumstances, and to make them without the handicap that is part and parcel of wholesale production of pictures as an industry.

"We have reached the stage in motion pictures today where our public knows pretty nearly as much as men who make the pictures—and do not make any error about it. The man who works for the public today in a motion picture is and must be a slave to a certain extent.

Director Thinks of the Conventional.

"The director thinks of the conventional moving picture situation. Now we are getting beyond that. We are reaching the stage where the public demand reasonableness. We have guyed exhibitors. Some people think some of them are rather primitive; but they have, as a rule, a wonderful conception of what their public wants, because their tempo comes from the box office; and the tempo of the public, as registered by selling tickets, is the finest thing to establish right and wrong of anything I know of in motion pictures.

"We must sink the egotism or personality in the endeavor to bring about a splendid general result. Otherwise we are lame, and the thing I am coming at is that to a dominant directing force, a man who knows the game artistically and dramatically and all that sort of thing, the making of the pictures itself cannot be a failure.

"Our plans are very carefully and, I think, fairly and equitably laid out. I leave to Pathe the business end, advertising, publicity and all that sort of thing, and I will attend to the other part. My part will be to try to do the best I can, and I feel quite confident the others can do the same; or if not, I would not have signed contracts with them.

"I am releasing through Pathe, because I believe it is the biggest growing concern. It is going to do bigger things; and, above everything else, Pathe is honest. Pathe, in all my connection, has never broken its word with me; it has given me more than I asked for. My idea of working with Robert Brunton is because he is distinctly honest. I know he will perform every detail."

Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe, announced the signing of a contract with Mr. Keenan for the distribution and exploitation of a series of eight pictures.

"We consider ourselves fortunate, indeed," said Mr. Brunet, "in being associated with Mr. Keenan in this undertaking to which he will bring his ripe stage experience as both actor and producer, his concededly high personal gifts as an actor and his high ideals regarding the making and the quality of pictures. He will do big things in a big way, so far as artistry is concerned.

"His place as a screen star is secure, and I am absolutely sure he will brilliantly achieve in shaping these pictures, made without restrictions and into which he can put the quality and convincing elements he considers essential to his ideals.

"His screen version of 'The Bells' is now being shown to the highest appreciation, and as an actor and director Mr. Keenan promises to give all of the best he possesses in sincerely endeavoring to make pictures that will mark a big step forward in the advancement of the art of the cinema."

Fox Employes in Service May Have Old Positions

WITH the return of American soldiers and sailors a matter of the near future, the Fox Film Corporation announces that all of its employes who had entered the service of the country will find their jobs open for them when they return to civil life.

Nearly every department of the organization throughout the country was affected. There are two gold stars and one of silver on the Fox Film Corporation's service flag. Word was received this week that Arthur Ficke, formerly an employe of the auditing department in the home office, was killed in action while fighting with the 107th Infantry in the campaign in Picardy.

The other gold star is for George Tyson Shea of the Denver offices, who was killed April 17, on the supply boat Florence H.

The silver star is for Corporal Harry A. Murray of the Contract department. Murray was gassed early last spring. Recovering from this, he returned to his command, Company M of the 165th Infanty, and took part in several of the battles of the Rainbow Division. In one of these Murray was wounded in the jaw by a piece of schrapnel, and at present is in the hospital.

HOW McCORMICK'S BOOMED COMEDIAN

Indianapolis Manager Made the Excitement Over the Victory Help Push the Latest Chaplin Issue

ALWAYS interesting as an advertiser, S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, conducted an unusually good campaign for the Chaplin "Shoulder Arms." This picture opened November 3. Unconditional surrender was the cry of the moment, and this was the keynote of the first example, which demanded the unconditional surrender of General Gloom. The catchline was right in the spirit of the moment. It was described as "a three-reel laughing-gas attack upon Heinie's dugout." It was run on Saturday, the day before the opening. A second advance took up the other angle of the news and presents the comedian in a more or less martial attitude with "Say, who said soft peace?" The under billing remains the same. Both examples hook a comedy directly to the biggest news event of the day, and do it legitimately, the appeal is direct and powerful. It demands a place in the attention along with the world news.

Examples One (at Right) and Two.

Somewhat the same idea as in the second example was followed for the opening day. Four fifteens and three elevens were used for the advance. The Sunday space was also four fifteens, and the rumors that the Kaiser was ready to abdicate were accounted for by the picture of Chaplin in full marching order as shown in example three. It might be noted in passing that all of these displays make use of the signature with the warning that the signature appears only in the new "million-dollar" product. In none of these displays is any great amount of selling talk used. Not much is really needed. Not only does the comedian sell himself to a very great extent, but the news value of the title backs up this. It is considered necessary only to hook up the advertising to the news and let the imagination of the public do the rest. For this reason there is also little done for the dramatic attraction, the five-reel feature being announced below the three-part comedy.

The first example shown in the next cut, in the upper left hand corner, was the Monday display. Here the obvious reference is to the capture of the town, and this was played up in a three sevens. The next example, to the right was run the day it was announced that the Kaiser had fled from Germany. It was the big break in Wednesday morning's news and was used as the basis for the "Boy, page Kaiser Bill." This was a four elevens, and gives more space to the dramatic story than does example four. Example seven, in the lower right hand corner, was used the day that Austria completed here separate peace. It recapitulates the surrenders to date and repeats the request to page the Kaiser. By that time Mr. McCormick had the town watching for his advertising to see what was coming next. The portrait fits in well with the text, for the expression on Chaplin's face might well have been specially designed for illustrative purposes, though it does not show well in the reproduction. The other example in this group, number six, used two verses from "Over There"—"And they won't come back 'til it's over, over there." It has no direct hook up with the news, but is in the general spirit of the public temperament.

Examples Four to Seven.

Example Three, a Four Fifteens.

Examples eight and nine are general run displays, one three sixes and the other two fours with a white top and bottom. "Cootie Cottage" is an improvement on the "Vermin Club" of the original advertising, but the scene cut is from the stills. They merely serve to keep alive the interest in the campaign and hold the name before the public. The latter is the smallest space taken during the run. It would be large for many houses, but is comparatively small under the Circle policy.

Examples Eight and Nine.

Example ten was run the day Germany was told to apply to Marshal Foch for the terms of the armistice. It is a two sixes and the chief text reads: "Two messages that make the world happy. Germany—see Foch. America—see Charlie Chaplin." The second example on this strip is a three sevens employing a cartoon to take a good-natured fling at the men and women who pretend that they do not care for Chaplins and yet go to see him. It is the old story of the entire family of adults who were busily employed in taking one small boy to the circus, but it is applicable to those who are too highbrow to admit that they like good comedy. Even this is hooked up with a war phrase and the picture is referred to as "A three-reel raid on General Gloom's divisions."

The last example shows the McCormick's preparedness. It did not seem probable that an armstice would be agreed upon before the ending of the run, but early in the week the cut shown in example twelve was prepared and the striking advertisement was set up and held in the newspaper offices for release as a three sevens should opportunity offer. It was a hundred to one shot, but on Thursday the United Press gave out its erroneous report of the ending of the war and the advertisement was at once released for the afternoon papers. There would have been no time for the preparation of a cut or even copy after the news broke, but with the type all ready to slip in, it was an easy matter to substitute this for the display previously ordered, and the most effective cut of the series found a use.

All over the country this subject was being used during the week, but no one else appears to have seen the news value of the subject. No effort, apparently, was made to connect the comedy with the cable news. It was a Chaplin comedy, and was boomed as such. As such it made money, but it made something more than money for the Circle. It made advertising for the house that will last when the flurry of those exciting days has been forgotten. Even after the boys are back there will exist a feeling that the Circle is up to date, not solely because of this advertising, but because of the alertness, of which this advertising is an indication.

Film Division Indorses Blackton Film.

J. Stuart Blackton has been advised that the Committee on Public Information, through Charles S. Hart, director of the Division of Films, has decided to officially indorse "Safe for Democracy," the producer's new "work-or-fight" picture written by Anthony P. Kelly.

CANNIBAL PICTURES AT HOTEL ASTOR

Spirit or Adventure Characterizes the Subject—Beynon Musical Score Replete With Atmosphere

A PRIVATE showing of the Martin Johnson interesting collection of pictures, "Cannibals of the South Seas," of which the world rights are controlled by the Robertson-Cole Company, was given on Tuesday evening, November 19, in the small ballroom of the Hotel Astor, New York City. The exhibition was attended by a large and appreciative audience, who during the intermission were privileged to listen to a few words concerning their trip to the South Seas from Mr. and Mrs. Johnson. On her wrist Mrs. Johnson, who vivaciously confided to her listeners that she felt safer with the South Sea Islanders than she did on Broadway, carried a beautiful bird of the parrôt family taken from one of the islands which they visited. This bird of wonderful plumage is evidently a rare specimen, none of whose particular kind has been discovered at any of the zoological gardens here.

Those of the audience who viewed some of these pictures at the Rivoli Theatre during the summer realized that double the footage was being shown on Tuesday evening. To the 5,000 feet exhibited at that time an equal length had been added making in all about 10,000 feet. These pictures are well subtitled, splendidly photographed and were accompanied by a musical setting arranged and partially composed by George W. Beynon, and interpreted by an orchestra directed by Mr. Beynon. The score was especially well arranged, and great credit is due Mr. Beynon for the colorful character which he was able to impart to it. The writer was especially conscious of this as the journey progressed from civilized shores to the habitations of the savages. The growing mystery was splendidly brought out in the arrangement of the music, which prepared the mind for the scenes which were to follow.

Carries Spirit of Adventure.

There can be no doubt of the success of "Cannibals of the South Seas" for the reason that the pictures carry with them the spirit of adventure. It is evident that dangers which thrill the heart of the true sportsman confronted the Johnson party as they advanced to the very heart of the cannibal country.

The journey which took them to Honolulu, Sydney, Australia, and then to Samoa, continued from here to the Solomon Islands and thence to the New Hebrides. The various peoples met with on the journey included a tribe with long brown hair, kindly in disposition, and who, owing to certain conditions with which they are confronted, are dying off with alarming rapidity. A tribe of pigmies, so fearful of strangers with their camera that they darted back into the forests from which they emerged, like frightened animals at the approach of the white man, are shown among many others of equally interesting characteristics.

Most thrilling of all is the visit to the domain of Chief Napagate, of the tribe of Big Numbers, on an isolated island of the Hebrides. This reveals the unvarnished cannibal. Heaps of skulls are not uncommon sights, and the meeting with the big chief and his people leaves little to be imagined as to their intentions and customs.

We are not attempting a full review of these remarkable pictures, for the reason that considerable detail was included in a review which appeared in the Motion Picture Educator of our issue of August 10.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

A CALL has been issued for a meeting of the membership of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to be held on Tuesday, December 10, to consider a series of amendments to the constitution and by-laws of that organization in order that the affiliation of the Exhibitors' League with the N. A. M. P. I. may be completed. This action, when completed, will make the Exhibitors League Class 2 of the National Association with a representation of 50 per cent. on the board of directors and all committees of the organization. It will also be decided at that meeting what the dues of members of the new branch shall be.

It is possible that this bringing of exhibitors into active participation of the affairs of N. A. M. P. I. may solve the question of exhibitor organization. For ten years or more all efforts to get a majority of the exhibitors of the country into a compact organization have failed. Exhibitors have been keen to ask for help when their interests have been threatened, but they have never discovered the necessity of being prepared in advance against adversity. Time and again they have come post haste to New York for aid in fighting their battle. True, those battles have been the battles of the trade at large, but the unfortunate feature of the fight has been in most instances lack of proper local organization upon which to build an effective defense. The great need has been and is a nucleus—a definite center of organization, something to build around provided with facilities for building. In other words some one who will make the work of organization a work to be prosecuted to completion.

Heretofore there has been in almost every state an organization of exhibitors, but in no state have such organizations been able to exist for any considerable time. Lack of interest on the part of either officers or members or both has caused the speedy disintegration of many promising beginnings. State organizations that exist at this writing are, for the most part, moribund. Some come to life for annual meetings, but in the interim they are dead to the world. In but one or two states have a majority of the exhibitors ever taken part in the state leagues, and at no time since the first effort was made to band exhibitors together have more than three thousand been enrolled in the several state organizations. This lack of interest is partly due to individual indifference, but mainly due to incompetence and indifference of administrative officers or their too great readiness to use their positions in the trade for personal advantage.

Now, then, if by making a combination with the National Association a permanent rallying point shall be established and effective mechanism of organization shall be set in motion by which a definite purpose shall be defined and interest therein be kept alive, it should be possible to form and to maintain effective units in every state and thus establish an effective line of defense against any unjust official or legislative restriction or encroachment. To establish such a central and adequate organization and to maintain it at the proper degree of efficiency will cost a pretty penny, but with all the exhibitors of motion pictures in America back of it the pro rata of cost would be small. Properly administered it would be of incalculable benefit to all interested.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has always maintained that a combination of all branches of the trade could not be accomplished, but the prospect for good that is held out by this new effort is so alluring that we are willing to set our prejudices to one side and give the promoters a chance to demonstrate what can be done when all hands unite in one cause.

DAILY press reports announce modifications in the forthcoming tax bill which is to be trimmed from eight billion to six for 1919. So far nothing definite has been said publicly regarding a possible reduction of the taxation proposed to be levied upon the motion picture industry. It would be mighty interesting to hear that the ten per cent. film tax had been abandoned and that the admission tax would be no more than it now is. This would not be asking too much, for with that reduction there would still be the seating tax and the present admission tax, which is burden enough for one industry to carry.

FUNCTION OF CRITICISM

By Robert C. McElravy.

IF we are to look upon art as a game in which the artist or creator strives to interest those watching on the side lines, we are perhaps equally justified in regarding the critic as an umpire or referee. If it is the business of the former to exert himself for the general amusement of the spectators, it is equally the business of the latter to render decisions on doubtful points and see that the game is properly played.

The effort by all concerned should be to play the best possible game, and to this end neither players nor referee should be too conscious of the watching crowd while the contest is on. If the game is baseball and the man at bat fans out, he must expect an adverse decision; and the umpire in making this decision should be entirely unmindful of hoots and jeers or flying pop bottles from the bleachers. If the game happens to be literary golf, the referee has a right to demand that the player use the proper club at the proper time and to see to it that he does not try to go round the course with a driver and a putter.

The critic's lot, like that of Gilbert and Sullivan's policeman, is not entirely a happy one. He is often regarded as a mere interloper. But his function is nevertheless a valuable one and is so regarded by experienced players, who welcome an unbiased outside view. An occasional player is misled by easy cheers from the grandstand and holds the less vociferous views of the critic-referee cheaply, but in the long run he comes to respect the latter's decisions as representing greater knowledge and experience. The referee who knows the game is the player's best friend, for his decisions are based on points and not upon the shifting breeze of temporary popularity.

The critic, to get away from our analogy, has difficulties that even the artist, or creator, does not face directly. The artist turns out a novel, a play or a scenario; it may represent by the merest fraction his entire philosophy of life, the thing that so far as he is worthy of consideration at all the public is most anxious to understand. The "world globes itself in a drop of dew," but the artist does not always reveal himself in a single paragraph, or even in an entire volume. This in itself is a stumbling block for the critic, and some amusing errors of judgment often follow if the critic lacks experience, is prone to jump at conclusions, or to read meanings into the work of the artist that are not really there. For to criticise effectively, and we are speaking now of more serious efforts, the critic must know the motive that animates the creator of a given piece of work. One or two stories of O. Henry may leave the observer pleased yet uncertain, but the cumulative effect of several of them almost invariably creates a desire to see more.

Even in passing upon average stories, the critic must be careful not to miss the occasional gem that flashes out among more indifferent offerings. It is not always the ambitious production that brings the most pleasure; we think rather that the real popularity of the moving picture rests upon the every-day feature, with its quiet, unassuming story that touches the heart. And with all due respect to "box office" reports, which have a curious way of swearing at each other, we do not think it possible for an exhibitor to tell from the casual comment he hears in his lobby just how successful an offering has been. The loose comment of a crowd is not a good criterion of judgment, for people do not readily admit it when their feelings have been deeply stirred; if anything they are apt to remain silent. If an exhibitor will sit quietly through a picture and trust his own reactions as he watches it, and nothing else, his judgments would probably be better than that of the crowd around him, but few exhibitors have time for this.

The work of criticism calls for a curious compound of detachment and self-revelation on the part of the critic, something that usually requires long experience to acquire. In passing upon a story the critic is not governed entirely by his personal likes and dislikes, but keeps in mind always the universal aspect of his occupation. He may well remember the advice of Henry James and "try to be one of the people on whom nothing is lost." At the same time he cannot claim omniscience and perhaps does not want it, for Anatole France says, "If we knew everything, we could not endure existence for a single hour." On this latter theory a lot of us would seem destined to live to a ripe old age, for truth is hard to capture.

While there may be more or less obscurity about the motives of the creator of a story, the standards of the critic are easily understood, for he passes upon a finished piece of work. His decisions are human and necessarily subject to error, but if they are fair and consistent in every case the exhibitor, or anyone else who follows them, can usually get a pretty close idea of the offerings under consideration.

LET'S START SOMETHING

By Edward Weitzel.

IN the chaotic phrase of one of the masters of a particularly ostentatious style of disjointed English, most people are "much satisfied to leave things well enough alone." Others, again, are filled with an ardent desire to start something. Good idea, that! The wonderful little man with the marvelous brain who is the chief wizard of the General Electric Company has pointed out that it is the dissatisfied man who is the motive power in this world, with his constant desire to start something new. This is invariably true—except when the discontented person happens to be a woman.

During the years that the moving picture has been attracting spectators to the theatre it has stuck almost exclusively to a form of construction which ignored the dramatic climax. Eight and ten reel pictures have been shown in two parts, but of dramatic climax as it is understood on the stage the screen has furnished but one notable example, the finish of "War Brides."

This play was written by a woman, discussed nothing but woman, and now a motion picture with the title of "Woman" has been built upon lines which permit the introduction of not less than five legitimate climaxes during the action of its seven reels.

It is more than possible that "Woman" has started something.

The novelty of getting away from the conventional form of the screen story is an advantage in itself; and there is no question as to the value of building up a big situation and bringing it to a climax that thrills the spectator, and then give him time to feel the full effect of the scene before taking up the thread of the plot again. Not every moving picture can be handled in this way, but the full stop at the end of each episode in "Woman" is an innovation that completely justifies its use in the Charles Whittaker scenario. It is most forceful in the Messalina episode. From the moment that Claudius gives the order for the death of his sinful empress until the shrinking and horror-stricken woman is literally forced to bury a sword in her own breast the dramatic tension increases step by step, and the suspense keeps gaining in force.

Nothing is allowed to divert the attention from the act of retribution that is being enacted before the spectator's fascinated gaze. The human element effaces every other thought, just as her terror drives every other feeling from the mind of Messalina. Such an effect would have been impossible without the wide artistic range of the director, Maurice Tourneur, and the care and skill he has lavished on the episode. Its finish has the compelling power of the stage climax.

The Heloise-Abelard episode is handled with the same mastery of sustained action and cumulative strength. The quiet intensity of the assassins' movements while stealing upon the doomed monk, the murder in the moonlit room when the uncle of Heloise gives the signal, and the death of the girl herself at the hands of the relentless churchman, lead up steadily to a climax that permits the spectator to retain the full effect of the tragedy, by stopping the action at its moment of highest suspense.

The Cyrene-Fisherman episode has been shaped with equal artistic preception. Its end is tragic, but the legendary nature of the story prevents the climax from having so poignant and so dramatic an appeal as the finish of the second and third episodes.

It has always been the opinion of the writer that the climax is too valuable an adjunct to drama to be neglected by the moving picture. "Woman" has demonstrated that its use in special forms of screen fiction is not only feasible but highly desirable. With a better understanding of its technical requirements there will follow a larger field for its employment. The ending of some situations strike upon the senses with such force that a pause, a breathing spell in which to recover from the mental shock, is absolutely necessary. Sound may be entirely absent. The effect can be reached on the screen as well as on the stage; the episodes of "Woman" prove it beyond a doubt.

LOS ANGELES PLAYERS FORM UNION

Elects Officers Under Charter from American Federation—To Co-operate With Manufacturers

THE formation of Local No. 1 of the Picture Players' Union, which took place in Los Angeles on November 16, is the second of a series of steps to be taken to bring the players into the ranks of organized labor, and follows closely on the granting of a charter to the union by Samuel Gompers, head of the American Federation of Labor, at a recent convention, held in Laredo, Tex.

The officers of the first local are: Duke R. Lee, president; B. C. Apling, first vice-president; Andrew E. Arbuckle, second vice-president; Seymour Hastings, financial secretary and treasurer, and Jack McCready, recording secretary.

Mr. Lee says that while efforts to give the players the benefits of organization have been made for the past nine years, little of a practical or lasting nature has been accomplished, and he feels sure that the present movement, which is built up along the right lines, will succeed and prove to be a lasting benefit to both players and producers.

The aim of the union is to give the player the same standing and protection that is enjoyed by any other craftsman who belongs to a labor organization. No attempt will be made to dictate to the producers or studio heads. On the other hand, every effort will be made for perfect harmony at all times. With the exception of a minimum of wages, no attempt will be made to establish a salary scale.

It is expected much good will result from unionizing the players and that many evils heretofore uncontrollable and many undesirable conditions deplored by the producers as well as the players will be eliminated by the friendly co-operation between the union and the industry in general. Locals will be organized at all producing centers until the entire picture field is unionized.

Approximately one thousand applications for membership in the Los Angeles local are under consideration, and a total of at least two thousand is expected.

The roster of the local will be kept open for the reception of charter members, which will be admitted for a fee of $1, until January 1.

As soon as the influenza ban is lifted an open meeting, to which all members of the picture colony are invited, will be held at Labor Temple. Due notice of the open meeting will be given.

George King, of London, Here to Purchase Films

ON one of the first steamships that crossed from England without dimmed lights and war-time precautions George King, of London, came to New York for the purpose of negotiating some large transaction in American films. The World representative found him at the Hotel Astor too late to prepare the extended interview we shall present next week, but in the plans Mr. King outlined we see some extensive investments in the products of the American producer and distributor.

Mr. King is general manager of Oswald Stoll's film interests—a separate organization from the vaudeville circuit that has made the name of Stoll a family word among English theatregoers. He came purposely to extend Mr. Stoll's dealings with Goldwyn and has arranged to present first at the London Opera House all of the product of that firm on a long-term contract.

The Stoll picture interests are represented in eight distributing centers for films outside of London; in the management of the Alexandria Palace, Stoke Newington, London; and the London Opera House, a beautiful structure which, it will be recalled, was built by our own and only Oscar Hammerstein before the war. It is to supply these demands that Mr. King has come to New York, where he will remain for three or four weeks looking at features, visiting our picture theatres and getting a line on matters of interest to Mr. Stoll in his undertakings.

World Offices Become Division Branches

Because of the unprecedented number of bookings secured by the World Film Corporation on the second official government picture "America's Answer," all branch offices of the corporation have been made branches of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information. This has been done through a special arrangement with Mr. Hart, director of the division, and the honor has been accorded the World because of its great success in distributing this government picture.

While all records for wide distribution of films were broken by "America's Answer," the indications are that this distribution will be excelled by the third government picture, "Under Four Flags," which is also being distributed by World Pictures. Owing to the fact that everyone is now interested in seeing the final punches in the great war as they were delivered in France, England, Italy and the United States, "Under Four Flags" is attracting a simply tremendous amount of attention from exhibitors everywhere.

Rainbow Soldiers to See Peace Festival in Film

HAPPY Minneapolis celebrating its joy at the end of the world war will be brought straight to France for a Christmas treat to its boys of the famous Rainbow division already dreaming of home.

"Big Bill' Lochren and his cameramen in charge of the "Mile of Smiles Film for France," to be sent to the front for release during the holidays, were on the job all day when the great peace news came, and gay Nicollet avenue, with its joyous mobs, horns, confetti and impromptu floats and parades, will all be shown in panorama and "close-ups."

Pictures were also taken of the Christmas boxes being packed at the Red Cross for the soldiers, completing the film.

The "Mile of Smiles" film will be sent to Paris, November 23, in care of a representative of the local Y. M. C. A., whence it will be rushed to Base Hospital No. 26 in time for a showing Christmas eve, Mrs. Arthur A. Law, in charge of the film, said.

Colonel George E. Leech, of the Rainbow division, has been notified to have an orderly in Paris Christmas morning to take the film to headquarters of the 151st Field Artillery (former First Minnesota Field Artillery) for a special entertainment that day. It will be returned to Paris, shown briefly there and then sent to all American military camps in France.

Permission to show the film during the week of November 17 was granted to the New Lyric Theatre. Money derived from the showing will be used in relief work among disabled soldiers. The business details of the enterprise are being handled by the Base Hospital No. 26 organization of home folks, which has purchased 6,000 seats for the showing of the film.

Ince Culver City Studios Rapidly Near Completion

THE new Thomas H. Ince photoplay studios at Culver City are rapidly nearing completion and promise to be the last word in efficiency and expediency in motion picture production. It is announced by the builders that they will be ready for occupancy in about three weeks.

The stages and buildings have been grouped so they will require little or no lost motion in the handling of scenery, players and films.

The dressing rooms and directors' offices, not shown on the detail design, are located along the rear of the administration building, facing immediately upon the lot. Beyond the buildings now being erected is a big expanse of land which will be used for exterior sets and the construction of additional stages and buildings as required.

The studios are situated on the main boulevard, running from Los Angeles to Venice of America. So on the one side is the big city, on the other the ocean and to the rear is an imposing range of mountains. Picture atmosphere of every quality is conveniently available.

The studio will be complete in itself, Mr. Ince having provided the installation of his own electric, water, heating and sewerage plants. A private fire department will also be maintained, the swimming pool serving as a water reservoir. Engines are being secured that will throw a hundred-pound stream of water.

In these buildings Mr. Ince is placing the most modern equipment available.

Bring Pershing Picture Up to Date.

"The Land of the Free," a big special production which not only shows the close of the Great War, but also, it is said, gives a vivid, moving epic of American heroism and sacrifice, is announced by the Fox Film Corporation as having been completed and now ready for bookings. This picture, including the events that occurred up to and through the signing of the armistice, is described as being one of extraordinary timeliness and authenticity, and affords exhibitors unique opportunity to give their patrons a photo-drama that pictures the closing chapters of the Allies' and America's triumph, including the capture of Sedan.

"The Land of the Free," it is stated, is based on "Why America Will Win," the William Fox photobiography of Gen. John J. Pershing; but the revisions made in this picture have converted it into what is announced as a picture that brings the war up to the minute.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Tell It All.

TAKE up copies of any newspaper and look over the advertisements and you'll notice that the effort is made to tell of complete stocks. A dry goods store does not merely announce that it is selling silk stockings. It aims to suggest the entire stock. A meat market does not merely announce that it sells steaks. It may add that it has pork and mutton. A cigar store may sell many things besides cigars, and most drug stores carry side lines and admit it. Why not tell that you sell entertainment and not merely a five-reel feature? Why not tell that you have a certain comedy, instead of merely "A good comedy?" "Good comedy" means little. Telling its name means a lot more. Telling what news feature you carry will help, and it helps, too, to tell of the music, unless you're ashamed of it. More than once a neighborhood house has taken forty cents from us because it has named a comedy we wanted to see. Another house does not tell of the comedies, and we either are attracted by the feature or do not see the show. It is the same with a lot of other people. You can often bring some people to see an educational you merely used for filler. Just because it does not appeal to you is no reason why it may not appeal to someone else. Tell all you show. Tell it attractively, then tell of other features. Tell that the music is good. Tell of your community singing or whatever you have to offer. Tell everything you have to sell. It all helps.

Steve Farrar sends in some of the advertising done by other small town houses in his territory, which is southeastern Illinois. Steve has not given up the idea of getting this department bound in quarterly form, and he sends in the examples to show that good might be done. Apparently something should be done, for the showing is very poor. Steve does not mark in the towns, but take the Joy and Gem, for example. The Joy is a two

GOOD PROGRAM AT GEM TODAY

A three, three-and a halfs without a punch.

Joy is winding up a run and refers to past patrons. The Gem is just talk, save for a little punch in the three line bank. There are no sales in the statement that it is "A picture to deepen the sympathies of men and women." The Gem also takes three 3½ now and then. Here is one for Constance Talmadge that is not correctly stated. If the copy had omitted the "in" between the star and her play, then it would have read that "Up the Road With Sallie gives Constance Talmadge, etc." but the "in" makes Constance Talmadge give Constance Talmadge the role. Possibly not many realize that there is something wrong, but even the illiterate cannot read that without a mental bump, even though they may not realize the cause of the bump. All three examples are too hackneyed in their setting. They attract because of their size and not because of any tasteful placement of the types. The next display is much worse. At least the Gem and Joy may be read with ease, but the Family and Isis cannot. The Isis is particularly poor; about as poor as they come. There is no display at all here, merely a program announcement, which would be all right were it not intended to make the advertisement last the week. But apparently this is from a daily paper, and even in the Saturday edition there is no excuse for this catalogue. The right hand pair of advertisements are from the Friday issue. It will be seen here that the Isis is at the end of its program and apparently has not been bothered about the Saturday show. If it pays to advertise the Friday show the preceding Saturday, it should assuredly pay to advertise the Saturday show the day before, but they start out with the Saturday to Friday bill on Saturday evening and gradually pull in the advertising space as the days are played off. There may be some more stupid way of doing things than this, but we cannot imagine it. The Family had a better scheme in the two day advertisements, but should get more display in a five-inch space, even though it is but a single column wide. Possibly the same Family house is responsible for triple nines and tens for "The Unbeliever," That on the right is badly punctuated and read. Such breaks as "novellitte," and "consistant," are inexcusable. For some reason a cut wholly unrelated to the play and put in just because it is "cute" has been widely used by the releasing company. Smashing big scene cuts should have been supplied, but they were not, and the Family does not supply this deficiency with type, but trails along with some rather bald facts and little appeal. It is better than the other work, but it is not good. It is a relief to find one house, the Opera, really doing something in a four fives. Here the copy writer seems to know something about the pictures he is talking about. He uses three styles in a single space, but all three are well planned in their way, but we think the middle section tells the most and should have pulled the most business. It tells that the story deals with that section of society which, in its chase after pleasure, "becomes utterly reckless and too frequently immoral." You can almost see the crowd coming to take that picture in. We agree with Steve that there is ample room for improvement, but it takes a hustler to get results out of a country office, and not many are hustlers.

Waltmasoning.

Johnny Mack, of the Hill, Newark, is getting to be a regular poetry guy. Witness the following:

Autumn days are with us once more. And most of the folks are back from the shore. Soon they'll forget their freckles and tan. Soon they'll remember the Photoplay man.—He's worked, and he's planned while you've been away. He's been on the job, by night and by day. Booking stories of love, and stories of hate, stories of fun that the screen will relate, from city and village, from hillside and farm, come stories to instruct, to please and to charm.

With handshake and smile at the door he will meet you. With wholehearted welcome once more he will greet you. So remember, our Patrons, we know that you will.—Remember a welcome awaits at the "HILL."

It's not as good as it might be, and yet a whale of a lot better than it might be, too. It will, at any rate, attract more than double the attention than a prose effusion would. Many will glance at it, see that it is a waltmason and read it carefully all the way through just to see if it keeps up. And reading it, the argument will sink in. Try it sometime, or get someone to write it for you.

McCormick and the State Fair.

Instead of being afraid of State Fair week, S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, made it work for him. He had one three fulls that was more of an advertisement for the house than for the attractions it offered. It was all type, save for a cut of the theatre, and it told why the Circle stood by itself. Only the lower third gave the space the bill required. This was done on a smaller scale in a three elevens. He knew that the fair would bring visitors from all over the state. He knew that it would pay to send them back talking about the Circle, so he not only booked in a strong show, but he talked to them about the house and gave them facts to take home to the neighbors. For years the Eden Musee in New York was supported by the out-of-town patronage. New Yorkers only went when they had friends from the country visit them, but to go back home and admit not having visited the wax works was to admit the failure of the trip. In the same way Keith's Theatre, Boston, had to be seen by all visitors to the Massachusetts capitol, because there was red velvet carpet on the engine room floor. The house was handsome throughout, but the carpet was the talking point that sold most of the transient admissions. Mr. Mc-

Cormick, working on the same lines, makes the Circle the test of a successful trip. A five elevens is more particularly devoted to the show. He doubled up the bill with a war picture and a Fairbanks comedy, and made the war picture the feature. A cross page eleven is largely eight and ten point type, and more eight than ten point. He had something to talk about in the Italian picture, so he used the space for good argument with which to back up the drawings. One good line is the box near the centre of the space. It reads, "Yours are the eyes of a general when you see this picture." It is a nice line to suggest the survey of the battle afforded by the cinema. It is elaborated in another similar space when he says, "You have eyes on the air, on earth and sea when you watch these pictures." Both are good lines for any war picture. The drawing is effective, but the portrait of Fairbanks, apparently looking over his shoulder for another airship, is a bit out of place. It would have worked better in the lower left hand corner even though it is separated from the battle scene by the house signature. Mr. McCormick's artist is unusually successful in handling black masses. He knows how to make them throw up the display instead of overclouding it.

Ruff Stuff.

Ralph Ruffner writes that he pushed up the record at the Rialto, Butte, by $180 with a double bill, for which he took seven elevens; practically a half page. He might have done better, but the Fox office could send him absolutely no newspaper stills whatever for "Riders of the Purple Sage." He sends the letter from the exchange to prove this. We think it would pay the home office to see to it that each exchange has plenty of press material for its big stories for the sake of the Fox reputation. If newspaper stills will help clean up, then they will help the Fox reputation for money-making. Zane Gray is a widely liked author, and his stories will clean up almost anywhere, but they must be properly advertised to do this, and the man who can run the right sort of campaign cannot use newspaper cuts. He needs the stills to work from. This half page is nicely displayed, but Ruff does not claim credit for the cut, which came from the Coast houses of the circuit. Another display is a 5 by 8 four-pager Ruff got out when he received a circular letter asking for some dope on the Pickford pictures. The front carried a cut of Miss Pickford with a line to the effect that the star wanted the Rialto audiences help her pick her repertoire. It added that all replies would be sent Miss Pickford, and there were plenty of replies. The inside pages are so laid out that the name and address of the recipient are on one sheet and the replies on the other. The last sheet can be taken off and sent Miss

A Five by Eight Four-Pager Asking for Data on Pickford Subjects.

Pickford and the rest kept to build up the mailing list. Ruff's latest slide stunt is a good one. He explains:

Throughout the U. S. different Councils of Defense are publishing warnings to every draftee to keep his card with him at ALL TIMES. Since the appearance of this order we have been running two slides at every performance: "Every man in the house with a Registration Card in his pocket, STAND UP!" . . . A big hand greets them immediately, and we finish off with: "If only William could see us now. Ach! Gott in Himmel!"

It's just a little "hokum," but like the Pickford appeal, it will do a lot of work for the house. It keeps the Rialto to the fore.

Ruff Comes Back.

In reply to C. Post Mason's claim that he was the first to work the fire department in connection with "The Still Alarm," Ralph Ruffner writes that he read of the stunt in the Denver paper at the time his own department was at work. Seems to be an even break.

Better.

Don't be content merely to keep your house going—keep it growing. That's the better way.

What Counts.

umn inches to "America's Answer." We have shown how merchants have advertised with full and double pages for "Pershing's Crusaders," but here is a scheme for tying up with all sorts of advertisements from gowns to groceries and getting the benefit of reiterated advertising. You can do it only with the Government issues, and markedly propaganda pictures, but you can do it with these, and do it easily. Try it.

Colored Covers.

Here is a rather new idea in layouts for a colored cover of the ready-print sort. It is that of the Pastime, Ravenna, Neb., and covers two weeks in a space 3¾ by 7½, not counting the house signature. This leaves plenty of room for advertising on a six by nine sheet—almost too much, in fact, since the back page is also taken by foreign advertising. It would pay the management to take some of that space for chat on its own wares. Sometimes it is rather hard to let paid advertising go by, but it does pay if you can make that space bring you as much as the advertising will bring in, and this generally can be done.

A Two-Week Layout for a 6 by 9 Ready-Print Colored Cover That Leaves Plenty of Room for Advertising.

Montreal Advertising.

Montreal theatres treat the papers nicely and get good treatment in return. We show pages from the English and French papers. The larger space is taken in the English editions, and here the photoplay advertisements are displayed on another page than the theatre advertisements. The value of this is largely a matter of opinion. Some hold it is better for the picture houses to be away from the competition of the theatres, but we think that right now the picture house can more than hold its own against the theatre on account of the prices. The picture advertising is slightly in excess of the space bought by the drama and vaudeville houses, but it is more of an even break with the French issue. The displays are well laid out and intelligently set.

"Art Work."

One of the funny things in life is that this cut was probably billed at the house as "art work," though it is far from being artistic. We do not think that it pays to run such a cut, yet this was used as the attractor for a four fifteens. Better to use type or ornament than to offer a monstrosity with which to advertise attractiveness. Miss Farrar may be interested to know that this is supposed to look like her.

Ruff Stuff.

All over the country the order has gone forth to discontinue supplying the correct time to telephone users. Ralph Ruffner advertises, "Call ten for the correct time. That's the Rialto." He gets an average of a thousand calls a day, and to each call the time response is made with the addition of some brief and carefully prepared comment on the current bill. The idea was first used by the Liberty, Portland, a sister house on the Jensen and Von Herberg Circuit.

Both Count.

"What do you think counts most in an advertisement?" asks a correspondent, "the way it reads or the way it is set up?" The answer is both, for the two are inter-dependent. In one sense the text is perhaps a trifle more important than the display, but selling talk is of small value unless it is conveyed to the reader, and this is accomplished through the display by means of cut attractors, catch lines and general typographical layout. The two are so nearly related that the slight advantage held by selling talk is hardly worthy of consideration. The good advertisement must be both well written and well displayed. Some managers trust too much to the display, however. If the advertisement looks pretty, they think it must be good. They do not realize that mere arrangement of type cannot sell entertainment. The types must be made to talk.

Franklin and Chaplin.

Here's Harold B. Franklin's idea of an advertisement for Chaplin. It is a three fives, and the border is in benday. Most managers would not think they were getting their money's worth if the silhouettes were not as black as ink could make them, but Mr. Franklin knows that the sketchy effect will get more attention because it is different from the heavy black borders more generally employed. The chief factor is Chaplin, and the line drawing of the star will better dominate the space without a heavy border in competition.

Hoist Both.

It is poor economy to pay an extra $50 for service and then "save" it on your advertising bills.

Wordy, But Wise.

WENTWORTH BARRAN, who signs for "Barran Bros. & Bills," more or less like a vaudeville act, sends in a four-page letter with a lot of big words, but also a lot of good sense, though it is not good sense to demand the right to write continuity when the manufacturers insist upon synopsis only. We agree that many stories would be lost in the synopsis only, particularly one largely dependent upon the action to bring out the full value of the plot (and we take it that the real film story is almost wholly dependent upon the action), but if the man who signs the checks says "Synopsis," then send the synopsis only. We are giving the letter in full in the hope that you will enjoy it as much as we have.

We do not want to bore you by having you wade through a lengthy letter, but as we are three of your many followers and close observers of your serviceable department and all that you advocate, we have sensed a strong desire to write you, and at the risk of being ridiculed, and resented, and considered "high-brow," we type the following:

To us, it is quite obvious, and an iron-clad brass-riveted fact, that if the free lance expects to sell, he or she must write novel sure-fire stuff that will go over with a bang!—so to speak. Are we not correct?

For over one year we have studied diligently the technicalities of photoplay writing; the fundamental requisites of the game; the limitations of the cinema; the paramount factors in general, before submitting any material; and now—they have sent out a call for the "jazz synopsis"; i. e., the bob-tailed script—as you have said—with bits of scenes and titles shot in here and there. But of course we're not wailing. Study?—why we'd strain a nerve that we might wax qualified. We've been known to sit through a five-reel feature thrice; once for story, once for sub-title and scene-counting, and lastly for analysis. And at this writing we are thrashing out grammar in the curriculum of high English and rhetoric, that we may put forth good diction, punctuation, capitalization, spelling, etc., on a par with any newspaper man. And we might add that in order to delineate good syntax, one must know at least the parts of speech, from article to gerund (verb-noun), inclusive.

We now contemplate taking a close range shot at the game, but want to write continuity.

We have on paper the main scenes of what we think is a 100-horsepower detective drama, and should say that it would be a crime to submit this devoid of the working script, as it would have a mammoth chance of dying the death of a rag baby if ever mailed in synopsis form. This will not be ground out in time-clock order.

Our initial consideration after the germ is hatched is: Is it novel material? Secondly, will it get by the censors? Thirdly, it must not necessitate a mint of money to stage. Fourthly, will it enable the producer to "mop up" with it (to use the slang term), thereby reaping a harvest? Then comes the market, and the star, and has the title drawing power?

As yet, we have never written a timid letter to any editor, neither have we ever asked questions or even tried to prevail upon any authority to scrutinize a script for use. This is the wont of many beginners. (Of course we're knocking wood.)

We believe that sub-title writing is an art in itself and a separate lesson in "screencraft."

We do not profess to be writers of an air-tight scenario which will not warrant the injection of, or the striking out, of anything on the part of the coach.

Tempo is the thing—the speed of the story, throttled down at the commencement and running wide open when nearing the big finale; i. e., the climax. Tempo and suspense are the two master ingredients, and when coalescent and kept alive they keep the story in high and the interest at its vertex—without anything left to flag.

The jack-of-all-trades, and arts, comes into his own when he contemplates writing for the picture sheet; but he must be master of this one ultimate thing.

The only person that has a monopoly on thought is nobody.

When one takes up photoplay writing he doesn't know how much he has to know in order to know how little he knows.

Trying to sell scripts is just as hard as it is for a small-time act that is trying to get the U. B. O. big time.

That possibility exists that one's stuff might be so far in advance of its time that the editor will not take it seriously.

We are in no hurry whatever to submit our material that we may dream of the check which it "might bring."

When the grammatical sense will warrant, and without robbing it of its merit, we focus our main title down to one or two words. This we term juggling the main title.

The plot is the intrigue of the story. Right?

Broadly and strictly, to write absolute novelty, a certain amount of inconsistency must be woven in, but masked (camouflaged), so as it does not stand prominently.

We are inclined to take issue on that last proposition. Novelty does not necessarily mean inconsistency, though inconsistency is the shortest road to novelty. The art of writing the really novel is not to write the inconsistent (no matter how clever the camouflage), but to make consistent what has hitherto seemed to lack plausibility. Take the seeming inconsistency and through skillful treatment make it plausible and you are apt to have a novelty, but to let it remain implausible is also to make it impossible. It is true, for example, that no amount of argument can make Frankenstein possible and consistent, but the telling gives a certain sense of plausibility, even while we know that it is not possible for man to endow his handiwork with life. We know that it is not humanly possible to shoot a projectile to the moon, but Jules Verne made such a trip seem and sound plausible during his clever story.

Knowing the Market.

You positively must know the market before you undertake to sell. Even at this late day we get letters from readers expressing surprise that they cannot sell one-reelers, and today one correspondent writes that his story was sent back because the plot was too slight for a five-reeler, and he points out that not long ago Carl Laemmle declared that the one-reeler would never go out of the market. This man reads the department regularly, and it is to be presumed that he reads some of the rest of the paper. If he will turn to the calendar of current releases, he will probably be surprised to find that Universal does not release one-reel dramas. Turn to the list in this issue and it will be found that Universal releases a one-reel news weekly, some one-reel educationals and comedies and five and six-part features. It is also doing some special two-part western stories of a sort that the free lance cannot write to suit production needs, but there are no general one or two or three-part dramas. We do not know where you can turn to find current one and two-part dramatic releases other than reissues, and there are few of those. No market is offered for one-reel stories, and yet this writer is trying to market his lone one-reeler, apparently his first and only effort, though he has been studying for some time. We hope some day to see the one-reel stories come back; as indeed they must, but meantime write only fives, and write the synopsis only to those fives. We have said this before, but it does not seem to sink in, so we say it again and probably shall again and again.

'Simmons and Stories.

Edward R. Akester, who lives in the persimmon belt, takes the toothsome 'simmon for his text when he writes:

> Took a look at a 'simmon tree the other day and the young 'simmons are like my first (and perhaps like some of my present-day) stories. They are just starting. The big idea is in them, yet it would be very foolish to try to get anyone interested in those green 'simmons. Next fall, after the frost has supplied the climax, they will be more interesting.

If you have ever eaten the green persimmon and the ripe fruit, you'll see how apt is the simile. The new plot is like the green fruit, good only when it is matured, and the green story is no more puckerish than the green 'simmon. Let your stories get fully ripened before you seek to interest others in them. It pays better.

Retire the Vamps.

Retire the vampire stories for the duration of the war. We are coming more and more to heart interest, comedy drama and keenly melodramatic stories; the latter type being stories of action rather than of the crime type. Most markets are not now open for the horrible and the unhappy. To serve its purpose the motion picture theater must offer enjoyable entertainment as an offset to the horrors of the war, and the gloomy and depressing story has no place on the modern program. Perhaps after the war there will again be a demand for the sombre story, but right now you must at least make them smile if they do not laugh.

One Advantage.

An author recently remarked, more or less with envy, that one of his stories, "far more original than Tarzan and yet more plausible," had been rejected because it was not plausible. Apparently he did not realize that the wide sale of the Tarzan books had prepared audiences for the film story, and even at that, in the film Tarzan is provided with an instructor in speech instead of being permitted to figure it out for himself, as was done in the original story. That is one advantage the filmed fiction enjoys. It does away with a lot of affidavits. Remember that when you make your flights of fancy and do not get too fanciful.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

As to Optics.

John Solar, Watertown, New York, arises to remark:

Referring to Friend Griffiths' interesting article appearing in issues of October 19 and 26, it is evident he is not letting any optical grass grow under his feet. Page 378, October 19 issue: I can see no reason why a larger diameter lens would require a wider cutting blade in the revolving shutter. The correct shutter position is in the plane of the image (aerial) of the front condenser formed by the projection lens, and the conjugate distances of object and image and focal length of lens determine the size of this image. The aerial image of the condenser will, therefore, remain the same regardless of projection lens diameter. (Quite right, but other equations enter. First, there is the item of vagrant light, which, however, cuts no figure if a shield is at plane of aerial image having opening the size of the image. Then there is the further fact that physical limitations of projection machines very frequently prevent revolving shutter being located at condenser aerial image plane, or even near it, though you might claim that this has no effect on the matter. The fact remains, however, that unless projection lens diameter is kept at lowest dimensions consistent with economic operation the stray light must be cut off or the shutter blade width increased.—Ed.).

At end of last column, page 378, editor says he thinks cone does not begin at film. The ideal condition for perfect image at screen is that all rays coming from a point in the film be focused to a point at the screen. Draw a diagram of front condenser lens and aperture located as in actual projection practice. Draw a line from any two points on the condenser surface through a point in the aperture, and you will have a pencil or cone beginning at that point and diverging toward the projection lens. The same will be true of any two points you may choose on the condenser surface. The location of the crater image has nothing to do with the pencils or cones beginning at the aperture. (Um, Neighbor Solar, mebby you are right, but I cannot just see it. To my mind we must either disregard the condenser and consider the film as being an original source of light, insofar as concerns the beam beyond it, or we must accept the conjugate point (image of crater) and the point where rays focus and diverge into pencils of light. However, that could hardly be, because we would then have an out-of-focus effect on the screen unless the crater was in exact focus at the film, a thing which could not be, taking the crater as a whole, since the conjugate distance varies at different portions of the crater. I think, however, we are probably agreed as to its meaning, and that this discussion really amounts to little. I cannot see where your two lines has anything to do with the matter either. In a way I believe, as I have always believed, we must just consider the film as a light source in its relation to the projection lens, modified by the fact that the light energy is given its direction and its area is confined within certain limits by condenser diameter and distance. There are so many different ways of looking at this puzzling thing that I confess I get considerably balled up on it.—Ed.).

As to photographic and projection lenses, you were quite right in correcting Brother Griffiths in the matter of converging rays, unless he is considering the principal ray of each pencil. There is always one ray in each pencil of light from a point in the object to the corresponding point in the image which, aside from slight displacement in passing through glass, forms a straight line. These rays are termed the principal rays of the pencils, the same as the axis of the system is called the axial ray. As these principal rays all pass through the lens, and the lens is much smaller than the screen, which is now being considered as being a photographic plate, they must be converging, but in considering the pencils from points on the screen they must be diverging to the lens. In projection we have an optical system (condenser) back of the projection lens, and, as Brother Griffiths stated, the principal rays diverge from a point on the axis at the centre of the condenser, and the principal rays, in this case, will not be a straight line from point to point in object and image. Griffiths' statement was: "In other words the photographic lens receives them as diverging rays." If the word pencil were changed to "principal" his statement would then be correct, and I think that was what he intended to say. Editor says that if the lens were used for photography the strain would be greater than if it were used for projection. (October 26 copy not at hand. If I really said that I meant precisely the opposite.—Ed.). Um, Friend Richardson, can't see it. In photographing the screen the light would be subject to the same refraction and pass through practically the same points in the lens and at the same angles in passing from screen to aperture as from aperture to screen.

Quite right, but, Friend Solar, that is an unfair statement. What I said, or intended to say, was that I believed the lens was subject to greater strain in projection than in photography. I reiterate that statement, but merely to reverse the action in a projector is not sufficient. My belief is based on the fact that the projection proposition couples up two complete optical system, whereas in photography (normal photography) there is but one; also in projection there is highly concentrated light over small space, with consequent tendency to reflection and vagrant light. Under such conditions it would require considerable proof to convince me the lens used in projection does not have placed upon it a very much heavier strain (as to its optical powers) than does the one used under conditions where the object is normally illuminated, and is situated a comparatively long distance from the lens. You may claim that, as to the latter, the conditions are merely reversed, but this I also doubt, though frankly I would be puzzled to put my view of this into words. Perhaps I might explain by saying that in photography the lens does its work by handling light rays of comparatively little divergence, since they come from a relatively long distance. True they are delivered to a screen (film or plate) at wide angle. However, once the ray leaves the lens the work of the lens is finished. In projection the opposite is true, and to it is added the concentration of illumination, the heat generated thereby and the tremendous magnification of a very small photographed (not original) object. There, that is an extremely crude statement, but maybe you can glimpse my real idea—also maybe you cannot. Anyhow, Griffiths has an article saying that he really meant the central ray. But even so, while probably it all amounts to the same thing, my own view of the whole matter is somewhat different.

In the illustration we have two sections, A and B. A represents my view of what we are discussing as applied to photography. From each pin-point of the object a cone of light represented by the lens diameter is gathered from the rays, which go forward in every direction within view of the object. This cone is sent forward to the corresponding pin-point of the screen, and the illumination that pin-point of the screen will receive in a given time will be directly dependent on brilliancy of illumination of the object, its reflective powers and diameter of the lens. I therefore say that the lens receives diverging rays from the object. With principal rays I am not concerned, since they represent theory only.

In B we have the projector system as I see it. A pin-point in crater D sends forth rays in every direction within its view. That means that rays from that point (and every other point) are received by the entire condenser lens. These rays are converged by the lens to point R, where the crater image is formed—back of aperture A in order to break up image R, which would be projected to the screen were it focused at A. So much for the primary optical system, the condenser. We now have an aperture over which is stretched a semi-transparent photograph. As applied to the second or principal optical system of the projector this photograph becomes a sort of original light source corresponding to the crater in the condenser system. Or, as compared to photography, it becomes the object, and from each pin-point of that object a diverging cone of light goes forward to projection lens P. But there is this difference as compared to the object in photography, viz: The rays do not go forward in every direction visible to the object, but are confined to a given space and direction, which same is governed by the diameter and the distance of the condenser (and right there I am not quite certain that I am entirely right, except as applied to the whole beam. Would like views of Solar, Griffiths and projectionists as to what, in their opinion, limits the individual cone of light as to its area at plain of lens). The dotted lines represent shape and size of light cone as a whole under condition shown in drawing. There now, rip that up the back—if you can, but make it in simple, understandable language, so that all may understand; also as brief as is practicable.

A Bundle of Whys.

From an eastern projectionist, who wishes his name and address kept a dense, d-a-r-k secret, comes the following dope on screen and package of whys:

After six months of operating automatic printing presses ('nother kind of "operator." Ed.) am back in the good old game. Have just finished a screen which is giving fine results. Have previously made half a dozen the same way, all of which proved successful, hence I will pass the dope along for what it may be worth to moderate-sized houses which are not able to afford a manufactured screen. Here it is: cover any white surface (cloth, canvas, plaster, etc.) with at least two coats of pure white Alabastine. Be sure same is thoroughly dry before doing anything further. Next, purchase ordinary aluminum powder, together with the oil prepared to mix it with, and coat entire surface of screen with same. This usually leaves brush marks and yellow spots where oil covers, but aluminum rubs off under brush. Re-touch all such places when aluminum coating is about half dry, seeing to it that entire surface is solid aluminum. Allow this to dry for several days. Next mix enough Alabastine to coat the surface once, using ⅓ more water than direction on package calls for; also a dash of blue alabastine, say one ounce of the blue to three quarts of white. Mix well and apply as rapidly as possible, using a large, flat brush, starting at upper left hand corner and working diagonally down to lower right hand corner. Be sure to work fast and keep edge of work wet, because if edge of work dries there will be a "lap." Let this last coat dry 24 hours and then block out in black as usual. If done carefully, and the last coat applied rapidly and evenly, you will have a screen equally good for wide or narnow houses; also one which will give fully twice the light value to be had from an ordinary, plain white surface; also there will not be a particle of glare. The Alabastine surface gives a projection free from rain, such as films a few weeks old show. The aluminum beneath the thin coat gives the reflective power necessary to save the juice and win the war. Moreover, the picture on this screen is, on the whole, more artistic than on a metallic surface screen, most of which reflect too much.

Regarding "Lens System Up To Date," as per recent department articles, we are using what we found in machine when we took over the house. Have nice picture, but it may not be the best we can do. If you will tell me exactly what information you require to enable you to determine what condenser lenses we need, distance they should be from each other, etc., etc., will forward same. (Only want to know whether it is A. C. or D. C. and at least approximately accurate amperage. Ed.). Also will pay whatever charge there is for same. (No charge, unless you want mail reply. See a note at head of dept. Ed.). Have learned a lot about projection during past seven years, but don't yet know the one-hundreth part of it all. Expect to do some studying this winter. Before closing let me offer suggestion to inventors of signal (change-over) devices. Use ordinary signal for light-up, then invent a fireproof box, similar to film magazine, to go between upper magazine and machine head. Inside this box arrange electrical contacts so that signal will sound when tail-pieces passes through and out. (Nothing doing, brother. Scat! Bum stuff! You must never allow tail-piece to show on screen. Ed.). And say, brother R., if condenser next arc throws diverging ray, why not have condenser of larger diameter in front to prevent loss of light? (It is done in England, Germany and France—or rather an arc condenser of smaller diameter is used. There is little if any advantage in using a lens greater than 4.5" diameter, this for several reasons. Ed.) And towns start their pictures out of frame. say, Brother R., why don't machine manufacturers arrange to eliminate the slide carrier which cuts off a lot of light? (Good stunt. One machine, the Motiograph, does do it. Its slide carried swings out of the way. Ed.). And say, Brother R., why not attach an air pump to projection machines, running a very tiny hose inside head, pointed at aperture edges, so that we small-town guys might blow off the dust and garbage which accumulates when we run the dirty, oily, Heaven-forsaken J-U-N-K film exchanges hand us. On the aperture edge it looks small; on the screen it looks like stationary poodle dogs. (Use auto horn bulb, small hose and suitable nozzle. Ed.). And say, Brother R., fix up some sort of light which will illuminate inside of mechanism so a fellow can see to thread in frame. Most fellows in the 5,000 and 10,000 And say, Brother R., when will the first left-hand machines be out?

Last named is up to machine manufacturers. When there is sufficent demand, doubtless. As to the screen, why I pass the idea along without comment, except to say I am not certain there is not something in it, though I very much doubt a gain of the 100% efficiency the good brother claims. His whole scheme hinges on the thin coat of Alabastine, the idea being that light will be reflected back through or upon back of the thin coating. If this holds good I would imagine that it would be well to have the aluminum applied to a smooth surface and polished. However, it is quite possible to try out the scheme by making a small screen, say a yard square, finishing it according to directions and laying it over a newly coated calcimined screen. I would like to have reports on tests of this kind. The thing may have real value. At least, I think it worth a trial. As to illuminating inside of head, why many plans for that have been published in this department during the past nine years. It is very easy to do. A one or two c. p. low voltage bulb inside the head, connected with battery and suitable switch is one way. Another is a small lamp on front wall, arrange to swing over in front of projection lens and to automatically light when swung over and extinguish when swung back. These plans are described on pages 595-96 of handbook. Well, anyhow the good neighbor is a live one. He notices things and realizes that he has much to learn. It is from such timber that real projectionists are made.

Gets Action Quick.

Clifton Peirce, manager Star Theatre, Springville, Utah, had trouble with a portion of his projection equipment. An electric coil went to the bad, or its insulation did, rather. His projectionist effected temporary insulation with paper, and a new part was ordered. But something quite different, and much more expensive, was received; also it failed to work. This was returned, and another coil was, after much delay, received, but that, too, failed to work. After Mr. Peirce had, as he expressed it, suffered fully a hundred dollars' worth of annoyance, besides the danger of the injured coil burning out entirely at any time, he appealed to this department. We immediately took the matter up with the manufacturer of the apparatus. Mr. Peirce now writes: "You cannot imagine how I appreciate your interest in my trouble. You certainly got action, and got it quick. Received the coil today, and it works just fine. It is a wonder I did not appeal to you sooner, but I really thought I was myself in error—that it was I who didn't know anything. I now have evidence, however, that it really was the manufacturers' Salt Lake agent who was the solid ivory top."

Getting action and getting it quick is one of our specialties. The reason lies mainly in the fact that we don't monkey with branch managers or other understrappers, but go straight to the head of headquarters, leaving him to deal with Further Down, and when Mr. Further Down receives request from Mr. Higher Up to know what is wrong, he IMMEDIATELY proceeds to get extremely busy. He would much rather tell Mr. Higher Up that the matter has been cleared up than that he "will look into it," hence the cloud of dust surrounding him, and the quick and entirely satisfactory settlement of things which have dragged along indefinitely and might still have dragged indefinitely, but for the pointed question of Mr. Higher Up.

Local Union 306 Moves.

Local Union 306, New York City Projectionists, has moved into new and larger quarters. It now occupies half the sixth floor of the Gayety Theatre Building, 1547 Broadway, in the center of the theatrical district. The telephone number remains the same—Bryant 9524. The business agent reports things running smoothly, and that the local is in healthy condition; also that the new wage scale is being generally accepted by Greater New York theatre managers. The officers recently elected are S. Kaplin, president, Richard E. Weis, vice president; Harry Sherman, financial secretary; Morris Rotker, recording secretary; Will C. Smith, treasurer, and Sam Goldfarb, business agent. The latter, I am reliably informed, is making good in his new office. Goldfarb is, I think, a man who has ability and honesty, two highly necessary qualifications in an office of that kind, especially in a large city.

Put on a Stamp.

Albert H. Estes, whom department readers will doubtless remember, writes from Camp Sevier as follows:

> Dear Brother Richardson: Just a few lines from one of the projection fiends now in the service of Uncle Samuel. No, I am not sorry I had to leave the projection room. I am right with the boys and glad of it, but when we have reeled off the last episode of old Bill Kaiser, I am going right back to the ranks of the film fiends. I have a request to make. Won't you ask exhibitors, projectionists and others to take advantage of the offer of the postoffice department, stick a 1-cent stamp on the dear old "World" and ship it along to we boys, both here and over there. It is extremely hard for us to obtain it, and we would surely appreciate the kindness very much. Would send some news, only there aint no such animal around here. My best regards to the boys, to the M. P. W. and to yourself.

This would be an act really worth while. We appreciate the fact that you wish to keep your Worlds, but nevertheless advise you to comply with the very reasonable request of Brother Estes. There are many projectionists and exhibitors in the army who would hail the World as a message from home.

Discolored Screen.

From Iowa comes the following:

> What is the cause of a green or blue light on screen when the picture is in motion. Is it the carbons or size of spot? Have handbook, third edition, but fail to find this particular thing.

Now see here, brother, suppose some one wrote you as follows: "Picture is not steady on the screen. What is the reason." Could you answer? No description of the trouble at all. Many things could cause a picture to be unsteady on the screen, several of which produce different kinds of unsteadiness. In asking questions you should give full data. Tell me everything in any way bearing on the trouble. Far better, give unnecessary information than too little. I imagine that you are using a. c. and that the discolorization consists of vari-color streaks on the screen, or maybe on a small portion of the screen. This may be caused by several things. Tell me the kind of current, number of amperes, kind of set you have given your carbons and whether or not you get a round, fairly good spot. Also, provided you can tell me accurately, the number of amperes used at the arc, give me focal length of condensers, distance between condenser lenses, distance from center of condenser combination to aperature, distance from aperture plate tracks to back end of projection lens and diameter of projection lens opening. Meanwhile try moving your lamphouse back and forth a little. Quite possibly you have the crater in exact focus at the film, and that won't do.

Try and Have Patience.

This department is being called upon just now to straighten out a great number of seemingly inexcusable blunders in filling orders for repair parts, and errors in other directions. Theatre men, both managers and projectionists, write highly indignant letters, pointing out the lack of any possible excuse for some of the mistakes made or for failure in other directions.

This would be entirely true in normal times, but these are not normal times. Manufacturers and dealers, both great and small, have had their very best men taken away through war's grim necessity, and have been compelled to substitute untrained, or partially trained, help in their stead. This explains the whole trouble. All business people are confronted with the same condition. Recently the editor sent a red hot letter to the Harley Davidson Company, makers of his Nancy Hanks the Go Devil, for what seemed a perfectly stupid blunder on their part in filling an order sent them. Mr. Davidson himself investigated the trouble (I sent the complaint to him personally), and wrote me a letter which made me blush for shame. In effect it said: "Just count the stars on our service flag, Mr. Richardson, consider that they stand for a large percentage of our very best men, and then tell me how we can do any better—if you can. Your complaint would be entirely justified in normal times. The mistake would then be beyond pardon. But now, why we must just do the best we can and be thankfull it is no worse."

And what Mr. Davidson said about the motorcycle factory is equally true of the manufacturer and dealer in motion picture equipment. We must all have patience, remembering that the dealer and manufacturer is harrassed and almost at his wit's end through inability to give 100 per cent. service with his organization shot almost all to pieces by the requirements of war.

As to Ordering Repair Parts.

This department again points out to projectionists and to exhibitors the absolute necessity for giving full and very complete data when ordering repair parts. If it is a part for a motor generator, for instance, don't just give the minimum of information, unless you are issuing an invitation to trouble. Give every scrap of information available. Give too much rather than too little. Above all things give everything on the brass plate attached to the machine, if it has one.

Lack of sufficient definite data places the dealer or manufacturer in a bad position. He must either delay the filling of the order until further data can be secured by wire or by mail, the one involving delay and the other additional expense, or must "take a chance," well knowing he will be cursed long, loud and deep in case the wrong guess is made—that the theatre man will most emphatically not blame himself, but the dealer, who is not to blame. The dealer or manufacturer may put out several different models of any given apparatus. He may have half a dozen of models in use at the same time, each put out at different times and each later machine having improvements over the one which went before. Not only this, but it is quite possible that certain parts, such as rectifier relay coils, for instance, may be used for a variety of purposes, and that it is necessary to know precisely what machine it is to be installed in if trouble is to be avoided. This involves the serial number of the machine, which must be sent, if the machine has one. In fact, look the machine over carefully and give every mark you can find thereon. You may take it for granted that the dealer and the manufacturer want to please you. That is how they make their living. They will do it too, barring carelessness of individual employes, if you give them a fighting chance, or at least the responsible ones will, and they are the ones you should deal with, and the only ones.

Focusing from a Distance.

E. A. Nelson, Duluth, Minnesota, is the inventor of and has secured letters patent on a plan for focusing the image on the screen from any desired part of the auditorium. It is known as "remote control," and enables the user to move the projection lens back or forward, to focus in the ordinary way, at a point remote from the projection machine. The thing is quite simple, also it is adapted to use on the various makes of projection machines. It may be accomplished in three ways, all of which are covered by Nelson's patent, viz: By means of a small electric motor attached to the projection mechanism, so wired that it will run in either direction, or so geared to the lens focusing arrangement that it may be rotated in either direction, or by means of a small belt attached to the crank shaft and to a special pulley operating the lens control mechanism by means of two gears or by friction.

In the illustrations we get a fair idea of how two forms of the mechanism operates, there being variations such as substituting friction for gears, etc. Figures 1 and 2 show the Power's machine equipped for belt drive control; also we see the motor as it would appear if substituted for the belt drive. Figure 3 shows Simplex with motor drive control and wiring diagram therefor.

The advantage of this scheme is that the man who is close to the screen, hence able to determine with accuracy the fineness of definiture, is able to perform the function of "focusing." There can be no question but that this presents advantages, especially on long distance projection. Nelson has still another plan for rotating the projection lens barrel from remote points, also covered by patent, viz: By means of magnetic plungers, one on either side of and below the lens. These plungers are actuated by magnets, and at each movement engage a tooth at periphery of lens barrel, thus rotating the barrel just that much. This could, of course be applied to an auxiliary toothed wheel geared to the regular lens focusing screw in cases where the focus-by-rotation lens is not used.

Film Renovater Wanted.

The manager of the Kansas City, Mo., branch of the Southern Triangle Pictures Company writes asking if we can recommend any special process for renovating old film. We are out of touch with that particular proposition, and would ourself like information as to what film renovation processes are now on the market; also details as to their nature. The address of the Kansas City branch is 22d and Grand avenues. Write them direct if you have anything to offer.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

Lest "Chickens Come Home to Roost" Let Cue Sheets Be Properly Prepared

AT last, the producer is alive to the value of properly prepared cue sheets, and scents the danger in those that are not the work of competent musicians and put out in a manner acceptable to the average leader. This fact is a source of infinite satisfaction to musicians who have for years patiently devoted themselves to missionary efforts in the picture playing profession, knowing that the time would surely come when the importance of music would be appreciated and honest and conscientious endeavors receive their reward.

The film magnate is now strongly convinced that good music will put his picture over and that poor music will ruin the work of priceless months. He is beginning to ask questions—a very hopeful sign. Real music service will be the result if a thorough investigation is begun. The average business man knows but little of music values, but once convince him that it is "good business" and the musician has won out.

Monetary remuneration should not be considered as of paramount importance by either the producer or arranger. Every laborer is worthy of his hire; but money should not be discussed except as a secondary consideration, dependent upon the expertness and ability of the arranger, coupled with the length of the picture and the necessary time it takes to prepare a good cue sheet. Technical work of this kind can be bought at practically any price, and the result obtained will always reflect the amount paid. Cheap opinions will convey poor suggestions; and, unfortunately, some of the more unscrupulous musicians will charge a high figure for mediocre cue sheets, because they are trading upon the musical ignorance of their employer and they feel safe. That much-abused ignorance is fast disappearing, we are glad to state, and with it will go the bluffers, the panhandlers, and those who use their positions to exploit their own wares, thus abusing the trust imposed upon them.

Recently, we were informed through the columns of the musical department of an esteemed contemporary, greatly to our edification, that there were but two men capable of preparing cue sheets. It was solemnly stated, with many recriminations upon the heads of all "claiming to be musical film experts," and an urgent call was sent out for the elimination of "these pseudo-professional music cue sheets." Absurdly funny in its puerile attempt to corner the market on cue sheets, the article will do more to throw confusion into a situation that now bids fair to bear fruit, than all the poor attempts to cue pictures. The leader knows and appreciates the defects of a poor cue sheet and has complained to the proper authorities and, as has already been stated, the producer begins to see the matter from the leader's standpoint.

There are many excellent musicians arranging cue sheets in a conscientious manner and they are meeting with more or less success. There are also some who use it as a means of publicity, while the worst offenders are those men who are subsidized by, or hold an interest in, a music publishing firm.

Bad form also has had much to do with the inefficiency of cue sheets. The arranger may possibly have had an excellent idea of the musical requirements of the picture and probably prepared a fine lot of musical suggestions that, from the standpoint of their suitability, would play the picture. But the printed form in no way indicated it and looked like a page of Egyptian hieroglyphics, and was about as intelligible to the leader.

In a previous article we have gone into the subject at length; but for the benefit of the producer, the exhibitor and some leaders, we shall try to explain in a few words the requisite qualities for a perfectly prepared cue sheet. Our personal opinion will play no part in the explanation which is based upon hundreds of letters from all over the country, expressing the needs of the leader in an orchestra playing pictures.

After the name of the picture, the number of reels and the releasing company have been indicated, the cue sheet begins. First, there must be the cue to start the music. These cues may be subtitles, descriptions of actions, or inserts, but they must be clearly defined in any case. They should be printed in large or bold type so that the leader can read them in the half light of the pit when the house is dark.

Next should come the duration of the scene started by the cue, in minutes and fractions of minutes. These should also be plainly indicated. It is useless to attempt to time a scene to the exact second, for music is elastic and two measures will easily account for anything up to fifteen seconds. Thus minutes, their quarters, halves and three-quarters are ample indications for the leader. The time may be placed at the right, the left or below the cue, but must be printed in a comprehensible form and must not prove an arithmetical problem in subtraction.

Following this placing of the time comes the suggested number, which should be followed by the name of the composer. Some cue sheets contain no mention of the author responsible for the music but take particular pains to indicate the music publisher. The clever idea back of it all is apparent, but why should the producer advertise the publisher? The printing of the musical suggestion may be in small type if necessary, for, after the leader has fitted his picture and the musical setting has been arranged in rotation, he has no further need for that portion of the cue sheet.

The tempo of the music suggested is most important, for it provides the leader with an alternative. If for any reason, he cannot play the music suggested upon the cue sheet, he may select something else of the same tempo and character that will fit equally well. This may be placed under the musical number for convenience.

Thus we have five essentials in the properly prepared cue sheet form, the Cue.	Music Suggested.	Composer.

T. TILLY TOLD TOM.	Cavatina.....	Bohm
4 minutes (Time Duration)	Moderato (Tempo)

cue, the time duration, musical suggestion, its composer, and its tempo. Its very simplicity proves its effectiveness.

The proper qualifications of a musical arranger must be ascertained by the producer. The said arranger must be capable of fitting each and every scene with due regard for atmosphere, screen action, and plot gradation. He must have had practical experience in fitting and playing for pictures in a theatre. He should have a large library of all the available material suitable for pictures, produced from all possible sources, which should be properly classified and catalogued. He should never suggest a number about which he is in doubt and by no means indicate a number which must be repeated many times to fill out a long scene.

Above all, the film companies should check up the music noted in the cue sheet and see to it that no particular music firm predominates in that column. Music publishers have their own peculiar field of operation and should play no part in arranging cue sheets for films. The temptation invariably proves too great, no matter how conscientiously they may embark upon the enterprise, and results in a tearing down of the woven fabric of which good music is the woof and the picture is the warp.

Sooner or later greed and selfishness defeats itself. The time comes when the motives which actuate actions are understood and appreciated by every one. It does not take long, however, even when men are as busy as the average producer, for a realization that cue sheets which continually mention only six or eight composers have behind the seeming madness, a well-schemed-out method. When the method is comprehended and the producer learns that he is not getting the service for which he is paying and which he has a right to expect, he will become disgusted, discontinue the service, and the avaricious and unprofessional musician will find the old adage verified.

"Tenting on the Old Camp Ground."

The majority of patriotic songs have been born or manufactured outright because of an intense love of country and an inspired desire for service. There are a few, however, of these national songs, which are better left unsung when an appeal must be made to heroic effort, for the effect of the lyrics on the mind is depressing rather than stimulating. Among these, and ranking in the same class, are "Just Before the Battle, Mother," by Dr. Root, and "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground," by Walter Kittredge. During the Civil War, both these songs had such a tendency toward lowering the spirits of the army and causing a depression so fatal to the soldier on the eve of battle, that the troops were discouraged from singing either, and frequently the regimental bands were ordered to refrain from playing the music associated with them.

Born of poor parents on a farm near Merrimac, New Hampshire, in 1832, the tenth of eleven children, the advantages for study accorded to Walter Kittredge were, as can readily be understood, notably few. His education embraced what he could learn by observation and diligent application to study in the common school near his home. As to music—he never had a teacher in the art, but at a remarkably early age displayed unusual talent. He says: "My father bought one of the first Seraphines made in Concord, and well do I remember when the man came to put it up. To hear him play a simple melody was a great treat, and this event was an important epoch in my child world." This little harmonium coming into the home when the lad was daily growing into a greater appreciation of the art which it interpreted, completely changed the outlook on life for the music-starved boy.

A musical instrument upon which to play and work out his compositions gave the lad an impetus and an inspiration that colored his whole existence. When he was but twenty years old—at the age when most boys are in college—he began giving ballad concerts by himself, and a bit later joined forces with Joshus Hutchinson in the same professional work.

In the first year of the Civil War, Mr. Kittredge published a small Union song book. Shortly afterward he was drafted into the army. But while making his preparations to leave for the front he found time to write "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground." Both the words and music are his own composition.

This little poem was in good company, for, like many other and more ambitious forms of literature, it was at first unappreciated and refused publication. But Mr. Kittredge was not easily discouraged. He sang it in public, putting into his voice all the pathos which had inspired him to write the lines. As he had hoped, a remarkable and spontaneous popularity resulted. A certain Boston publishing concern was not slow to see the possibilities of the song and engaged someone to write one with a similar title. History fails to state why it did not obtain the original from Mr. Kittredge—but that it did not do so meant a bit of good fortune for the Messrs. Ditson, another publishing firm in Boston, who availed themselves of that privilege and showed their business acumen thereby. The song was in great demand everywhere and the sales exceeded even the brightest expectations of the author and the publishers, being enormous.

This little song differed materially in essential quality from the grand rank and file of war songs so contagious and popular at the period in which it was written. It did not express a warlike sentiment in a single line, but breathed a spirit of sorrow over the sacrifice of life and the suffering consequent upon the conflict. The thought conveyed found an echo in scores of American heart, worn out, depressed and well nigh discouraged over the battling between brothers and the breaking up of erstwhile peaceful homes by internal dissension and strife. The music possessed the characteristic rhythm of a negro melody which lifted the words a bit from the melancholy tone which they alone expressed, and pleased and charmed by the very simplicity of the composition.

Victor Schertzinger an Ince Director.

From a musical career as soloist, director and composer Mr. Schertzinger laid down the bow, baton and pen to use the megaphone. The productions which have appeared under his direction forcefully substantiate his contention that the eye is as susceptible to the delights of rhythm, harmony and the poetry of motion, as the ear.

Public and critics alike have accorded to Mr. Schertzinger's pictures a pleasing individuality, and he generously credits this to his musical instinct. What is now being realized by the public was forseen by the keen vision of Thomas H. Ince, the master producer. Appreciating the importance of musical settings for pictures, he engaged Mr. Schertzinger to write scores for Triangle productions, then under Mr. Ince's supervision. Thirty-one of these were written by the man who provided the song hits in "Tik Tok Man" and Kitty Gordon's "Pretty Mrs. Smith." Then Mr. Ince assigned him to the work of writing music for "Civilization." It was decided as a novelty to present this great spectacle with a pantomime prologue with living actors. As Mr. Schertzinger wrote the music for this he was asked to direct the prologue that the action might fit in perfectly with the music. So successfully did Mr. Schertzinger suit the action to the rules of music, making a superb impressive scenes, that Mr. Ince at once saw a new development in screen story telling and offered Mr. Schertzinger one of his directorships.

"The photo-play, which has become distinctive art," said Mr. Schertzinger in commenting on his work, "is developed much along the same lines as a musical composition. The composer is given inspiration for his music by some theme, and in the developing of this he conveys to the ear of the listener an impression of his own mental picture. So it is with the photo-play. The director receives from the scenario writer a story written about a theme. It then devolves upon him to visualize this for the human eye. The methods of development are practically the same—the tools of expression are different. The composer must use the variations of tone, the divisions of time, the modulations of volume, the crescendo, the diminuendo, etc. The director has at his command the diversity of scenery, the various modes of expression in living beings, the effects of lights, the contrasting of locations and character, etc. But in the picture as in music there must be harmony. The character must fit into the proper atmosphere; the settings must suit the period in which the story is being developed; the players must conform to the lives they portray. The poetry of motion plays no small part. Every scene may be perfect in detail, but if the scenes are not arranged with care there will be a discord as acute to the eye as is the mis-striking of piano keys to the ear. One might well call this a matter of tempo. If the musical director does not maintain his tempo, the musician is well aware of the result; if the same principle is not applied by the photo-play director, he gets a 'jumpy' picture.

"There is unquestionably a great kin between the musical composition and the photo-play. The one is poetry to the ear, the other to the eye. My knowledge of music, I am sure, is responsible for whatever success the public may be kind enough to accord the productions I have directed."

Before entering the picture profession, Mr. Schertzinger had a notable and enviable career as a musician. When but seven years old he was featured by the symphony orchestra of Philadelphia, his own home town, as "the boy prodigy violinist." After studying with numerous instructors in this country he went abroad, and for three years was under the tutorage of Brussel's masters. He was then featured as soloist with the bands of both Sousa and Prior. He became musical director for Oliver Morosco and then attracted attention as composer. Hits in "The Tik Tok Man" and "Pretty Mrs. Smith" were due to his genius. Then in a vaudeville tour he demonstrated his versatility by proving himself a master of both piano and violin. He also plays the cello and practically any string instrument one may place in his hands.

Under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince he has directed photo-plays featuring Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett.

Devotion of Picture Player to the Art.

Having always maintained that the picture playing profession is a dignified art and that musicians are awakening to an appreciation of its possibilities, it was with much pleasure that we had our convictions sustained in a letter from a picture theatre organist of a western city. We are quoting in part from this letter, believing it will be an inspiration to other musicians in this field:

"I am most anxious to obtain a position near New York where I can continue in my study of the organ, harmony and counter point. My organ experience has been confined to work on a three manual 'Moller.'"

"I am an earnest worker and am not satisfied with the results I am getting and probably never shall be. I want a better opportunity to study and advance than this city affords me. But I do not want a position where I can simply get by and grind out my salary, but where I can study three hours a day on the organ and piano. I want an organ teacher who has had legitimate knowledge combined with picture experience."

It is people with the above spirit who are taking away the obloquy formerly attached to motion picture playing, and who are placing the profession on a plane where only the best instrumentalists can hope to obtain positions in this field.

Three New Puccini Operas Presented.

Lovers of Puccini music will be glad to know that his three latest one-act operas will be heard for the first time on any stage at the Metropolitan Opera House, on Saturday night, December 14th. "Il Tabarro" is a tragedy; "Suor Angelica," a mystery play; and "Gianni Schicchi" is described as a "side-splitting farce." Moranzoni will conduct all three operas. Such a diversity of operatic music is especially welcome at this time when the war has relegated the German music to the background.

Cannibal Music at the Hotel Astor.

It seems almost impossible to conceive that pictures have already arrived at the dignity compatible with the atmosphere of the Hotel Astor. But November 19 will go on the pages of the history of filmdom as the date when a specially invited audience viewed 'The Cannibals of the South Seas," presented by Robertson & Cole, in the ballroom of that famous hostelry.

In the proper presentation of this picture, the music plays a very important role, as it must be atmospheric, and there is so little music written that is adaptable to cannibals on their native heath. But, judging from the many flattering comments made by people who were entirely disinterested, the musical score prepared by Mr. Beynon was equal to the exigencies of the occasion.

The overture chosen was "The Red Man," from the Sousa suite, "Dwellers in the Western World." It at once wafted the audience away from Broadway and prepared them for the adventures of the evening.

As Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, who filmed the picture, embarked on their long journey it was an undecided question just where they would land. The orchestra accentuated that fact by playing "Where Do We Go from Here."

When the boat was leaving Honolulu, where the party stopped en route, the music was distinctively characteristic and very appropriate, being "Aloha Oe," known as the Honolulu farewell song. Also in the Samoan Islands, the "Dance of the Swans" fitted the scenes admirably.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson landed at Sydney, Australia, to do a bit of shopping for their savage friends. The national anthem, "The Song of Australia," a stately number, was greatly appreciated by the audience, particularly by the many British subjects who were present.

As the boat again wended its way toward the Solomon Islands, it glided over the placid ocean to the strains of "Luana," a dreamy number which was the embodiment of peace.

While the scenes were shifting from one island to another in this remarkable picture, the music became more weird and touched up the views like a brush in the hand of a master artist.

Many of the selections used were original ones, several of them being the compositions of Mr. Beynon. One of these, the "Cannibal Lament," was used for the mourners in the burial scene, and it breathed the spirit of the Cannibal who suffers as an animal suffers, but not as one whose soul is awakened to fullness of life. The "War Dance," composed by Mr. William C. Stickles especially for the occasion, was very effective, and so realistic that the audience swayed with the rhythmic flow of the music, which was in perfect synchrony with the gyrations of the dancers.

The population is rapidly dying off in some of these islands. And a picture was shown where a census was being taken. As the people filed along in the most dejected procession ever seen outside of a cemetery, the music "Indian Wail," by Dvorak, was singularly appropriate and impressive.

Throughout the evening the musicians labored under gigantic difficulties. As one of them remarked: "I have been an orchestra man for thirty years and have never played such difficult music." There was one singularly unique feature about this music. It is seldom that the oboe has the stellar position on the musical program for an entire evening. But this score almost continually required the weird and uncanny wail which the oboe alone could emit. Near the end of the picture, the orchestra began to show the effects of the terrific strain put upon them and the music fell off a bit in quality. But the audience was keenly alive to the situation and appreciated the splendid work that had been done.

This picture is only the first of a series of presentations which will be given by Messrs. Robertson & Cole. Many very prominent screen stars will be presented in a spectacular way in pre-releases.

Animated Songs at the Strand Theatre.

For the week of November 17 the Strand offered a musical program that was exceptional for its attention to detail.

The overture, "Selections from La Boheme," conducted by Carl Edouarde, revealed the possibilities of this kind of music as a form of entertainment in picture theatres. Although its familiarity makes it popular, yet a poor rendition or a deviation from the traditional trend will mar its effectiveness. Mr. Edouarde sensibly stuck to the usual interpretation and the overture made a decided sensation through his careful handling.

"La Boheme," an opera in four acts, music by Puccini, is an adaptation of part of Murger's La Vie Boheme, which depicts life in the Quartier Latin in 1830. The principal characters in Puccini's delightful opera are the inseparable quartette described by Murger, who with equal cheerfulness defy the pangs of hunger and the landlord of their little garret. Into the scenes of careless gaiety is interwoven a touch of pathos, and the music is in turn lively and tender, with a haunting sweetness that is most fascinating.

The Strand Topical Review received the usual accompaniment of marches and two-steps. These are always played too fast for the fastidious taste of a musician, but no doubt add "pep" to the performance.

Yon Collignon, a baritone of mediocre ability, sang Oley Speak's "When the Boys Come Home." At this time the song has a strong appeal and should receive rounds of applause upon its merits, but the poor diction and enunciation of the singer detracted from its worth. To make up for this deficiency, scenes showing transports laden with returning soldiers were projected while the singer was dimly outlined in a spot light. Also there was depicted the returned sailors on parade, with a hint of the big peace celebration to come.

This is the first time we have seen pictures accompanying the voice and the audience showed their appreciation of the novelty in an unmistakable manner. It only goes to prove that music and pictures are so closely allied in principle that either may accompany the other and be most interesting in any case.

Billie Burke in "The Make Believe Wife," a Paramount feature, was her usual vivacious self. The music was very well fitted. Special mention might be made of the banjo effect in perfect synchrony with the hand movement of Miss Burke as she strums upon the instrument. In fact, the synchronous part of the piece was more than usually well done. No one has a monopoly upon synchony, and the Strand orchestra is daily becoming more proficient in this phase of the art of fitting pictures. All that remains is the perfecting of the Review music.

The entire performance ran largely to Grand Opera, the fifth act from "Faust" being sung in its entirety, and the organ elosing with "Il Travatore." The "Faust" number was sung by Alys Michot as Marguerita, Ralph Erolle as Faust and the Mephistopheles role was taken by Mr. Collignon. It was done in costume with the proper setting.

The opening duet was splendid, both voices showing off to excellent advantage. The following recitatives were clearly enunciated and the plot well worked up for the entrance of the Devil. Mr. Collignon tried hard, but he is not and never could be a Mephistopheles. His lower tones are lost in the trio and his portly figure conveys the idea that he must be a jolly Devil and incapable of separating two such fond lovers as Marguerita and Faust.

The acting was well done and the climax intensely dramatic and well-timed. Mr. Reiser conducted with a keen appreciation of the requisite volume of accompaniment. During the trio, which is heavily scored, there is a temptation to "pull out all the stops," but Mr. Reiser suitably graded his volume to that of the voices. These excerpts from Grand Opera are much liked and do splendid missionary work in educating the people to the higher standards of music.

After a scenic and cartoon, Ralph H Brigham, the noted organist, played Selections from "Il Travatore." Mr. Brigham is at home in music of this class and made a good impression.

Film on Social Hygiene to Have Wide Distribution—Is Method of Presenting Subject Right or Wrong?

A STARTLING exhibition of a seven-reel film whose chief mission is the teaching of social hygiene took place in the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Astor on the afternoon of Thursday, Nov. 14. The exhibition, chaperoned by Katherine Bement Davis, director of the section on women's work of the social hygiene division of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, took place at the close of the afternoon session of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs. The picture is entitled "The End of the Road."

This film, the story of which was written by Katherine Bement Davis, encompasses a great deal, opening with illustrations of the right and the wrong way of meeting the inevitable question of the child, "Where Do Babies Come From?" One of the salient points of the picture will be found to reveal truths regarding syphilis, including the dangers of infection and necessity for prompt treatment. It includes also a series of horrible revelations of the outcome of non-treatment of the disease photographed in a hospital in which these cases are isolated. The dangers and indignities to which girls and young women expose themselves through flirting are illustrated by stories of individual cases which have come before the notice of the author, including improper conduct toward the soldiers at the cantonments, and revealing the vigilance of the Y. W. C. A. workers in attempting to restrain and direct the erring ones.

The picture was intended for selective use and exhibition before women and girls. Since its completion, however, there has come a request from the Y. M. C. A. to have it distributed for exhibition throughout the camps at home and abroad, which has been granted.

The fact that the production would gain in appeal by being assembled in a more compact form and by a more dramatically correct arrangement does not erase the fact that it is a production of unlimited usefulness distributed in the proper channels. As it now stands in the telling of the original story, other stories which have no relation to the original story except in similarity of suggestion or subject, have been incorporated in a disconnected manner. The way in which it has been arranged does, however, admit of showing one portion without the others which may prove at times to be an advantage.

There are two ways of presenting the lesson that "The End of the Road" proposes to teach. The one to which Miss Davis has resorted follows the idea that a revelation of its consequences may prove a preventive of the evil.

The other would seek to arrive at the same goal by eliminating the evil thought which is father to the deed through glorification of purity and an appeal to the reason and a sense of justice to humanity, which includes also a feeling of social responsibility.

Whether the effect of the presentation of the horrible side of life to the uninitiated youth will be good or not is something to be considered. Whether a careful combination of the two ideas might not have been made to meet all conditions, the tarnished as well as the untarnished, is a question.

MARGARET I. MacDONALD.

"How Life Begins" Is a Record Educational Film

AN example of what can be done with a truly educational film carefully made and properly exploited is seen in the instance of the biological picture made some years ago by George E. Stone, of Berkeley, Cal. This picture has been in circulation almost constantly for at least two years, during which time it has been in the hands of Mrs. Katherine F. Carter, of the Exhibitors Booking Agency, 220 West 42nd Street, New York City.

At the recent convention of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, New York City, it was exhibited accompanied by a delightful address by Mrs. Woodallen Chapman, noted writer and lecturer. This instance reminded the writer, who was present at the showing, that our readers might be interested in a brief summing up of the career of this film which should serve as a precedent for other strictly educational pictures. The following submitted at our request by Mrs. Katherine F. Carter will no doubt be welcomed:

Ever since the motion picture has been used as a means of entertainment for the great masses of people, there has been much speculation as to what its value would be in the field of education.

"How Life Begins" has solved that problem and has proven beyond all doubt that the motion picture as an educational medium has come to stay.

Daring scientists with microscope and camera delved into the realm of nature and have placed upon the screen those great secrets which in a logical and comprehensive manner give a clearer understanding of life itself. These men risked their time and money in the production of this picture, not knowing what appreciation it would receive. But their most sanguine hopes have been more than realized.

Many universities and colleges have purchased copies of the film for the exclusive use of their respective institutions. The American Museum of Natural History has purchased a copy for its own use, and likewise large commercial corporations, as the National Cash Register, Battle Creek Sanitarium and others have added copies of the picture to their library of educational subjects.

Its use in public schools, however, has been limited, due no doubt to the fact that as yet our public school system has no established appropriation for motion pictures or equipment. As a result it has found its greatest recognition among the institutions of higher education, though in some towns, as in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the President of the Board of Education was quick to recognize the educational value of this film, and it was presented with a lecture to the several grades from the seventh up.

During the last six months of the war this picture has been used very extensively by the War Department of the National Government in the training camps throughout this country and in Canada.

The Young Women's Christian Association has also used it in its National Social Morality Campaign, and its presentation with lectures to high-school, factory and shop girls, to parents' and teachers' associations, and other social centers, has met with marked success.

Many other organizations have made this picture a special feature of their war programs, and plans are now being completed for its extensive use during the reconstruction period.

The reason given by the manufacturers of the great photoplays that they could not afford to make educational films because the institutions of learning would not pay a price that would make possible such productions, has been refuted by the financial success of "How Life Begins."

The first twelve months of its existence it scored a decided financial success; the sale during the eighteenth month surpassed those of the entire first twelve months, and the demand for its use is increasing every month.

The satisfactory results obtained with this really educational picture has given us courage to proceed with other productions of equal or greater educational value, and these will be placed on the market in the very near future.

"How Life Begins" is now being released for general distribution throughout this country and in foreign territory.

Naturalization Bureau Outlines Its Film Plans

THE following will throw much light on the work which has been mapped out by the film section of the Bureau of Naturalization, and which is under the direction of David K. Niles, and Clara De Lissa Berg who for the past four years has been active in educational motion picture work.

The films, which are intended to show precisely what the Government of the United States stands for and what it aims to do for its citizens, will be exhibited to the members of night school classes composed of aliens who are taking advantage of the opportunity offered them of receiving free instruction in English and in the duties and privileges of American citizens.

One series of pictures will project before the eyes of the newcomers the history of the United States from the landing of Columbus to the present day, showing the struggle of the early colonists, so similar to, and yet so different from, the upward fight of the immigrant himself; the battles of the Revolution for independence; the growth from a child-nation occupying but a strip of land along the Atlantic to a country of millions on millions of free peoples spreading over a continent; the conflict of 1861-65 to preserve the united nation so hardly won; the agony of reconstruction, the development to a world power and the final participation of America in the world war against autocracy.

There will be travelogue pictures displaying the splendors of America's scenery and governmental, industrial, commercial, agricultural and educational activity. There will be films showing the service rendered the citizens by each of the great federal departments. Reproduction will be thrown on the screen of, for example, the latest scientific methods of farming; the highest development of industrial machinery, penmanship, letter writing, marketing by mail, through the parcel post, household economy—in brief, the aliens seeking a home in America and a part in its national and community life will be afforded visual representation of the benefits and responsibilities of an American, and of the social and business customs that make up the machinery of daily living. To a considerable extent the series will be a reproduction upon the film of the printed pages of the text-book of Americanization written by Raymond F. Crist, deputy commissioner of naturalization, for the use in the schools of the very audiences who will watch the unrolling before their eyes of the drama of a nation.

Nineteen hundred schools throughout the country have expressed already their willingness to co-operate with the Department of Labor in the campaign, and an elaborate plan has been worked out for carrying on the work by David K. Niles, motion picture expert of the Information and Education Service of the Department of Labor. The films will be distributed from 28 centers and will reach practically every American community that has alien inhabitants. The exhibitions will be held in the local motion picture houses of each city and town, provided the school house is not equipped for motion pictures. The classes will be transferred for the occasion from school house to motion picture theatre, by virtue of the cooperation of the leaders and managers of the motion picture industry, without whose cordial assistance, Mr. Niles declares, the inauguration of the campaign on such a magnificent scale would have been imposible.

"On Caribbean-Lapped Shores."

This is another Post-Pathé scenic number devoted to the West Indies. It gives further scenes from the life of the islands where Columbus landed in 1492, under the impression that he had encircled the globe and reached India. A bull fight, various religious edifices, a native drink known as "The Swizzle," and mud volcanoes come in for special treatment. The tropical verdure of the islands is also shown in some striking photographic views.

"The Ghost of Slumber Mountain."

A novelty film presented at the Strand Theatre, New York City, during the week of Nov. 17 by Herbert M. Dawley and produced by Willis H. O'Brien will be included among the semi-educational. It opens with a scene showing a couple of children being told a story by their uncle. The story which he tells is then illustrated, and we follow a couple of mountain climbers and their dog up the mountains and over the valleys until they come to Slumber Mountain. Here they fall asleep and the dream of "Uncle" takes him to the cabin of Mad Dick, a former resident of the mountain, where he is greeted by the ghost of the dead man and invited to look through a mystic glass in which he sees scenes of prehistoric times. The glass shows him the thunder turtle, the dinosaur, and other prehistoric animals roaming over the earth. This part of the picture was made in the studio with the employment of mechanical figures especially made for the purpose. Considerable success has been met with in this effort, and the idea suggests itself that films of great educational value might be made after the same principle. "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain" has its faults, the most noticeable one being the failure of the animals to measure up to their backgrounds. In other similar trials faults of this sort could easily be eliminated.

"A Mile in the Sky" (Ford-Griever).

One of the most remarkable of aeroplane pictures that has been made is that which the Griever Distributing Corporation is handling for the Ford Motor Company. This particular number of the Ford Educational Weekly is entitled "A Mile in the Sky," and is especially fortunate in having been well photographed. Here we get the sensations of the "nose spin" and the "loop the loop"; and in fact in viewing the former it really seems as if the earth in revolution is being photographed. One of the most interesting features of the picture apart from this is the view of Niagara Falls and river from the aeroplane. This is remarkable and could be used to advantage in schools.

"Old New England" (Ford-Griever).

This number of the Ford Educational Weekly is divided into three parts, each of which will be sent out by the exchanges separately. It encompasses the history of Boston, Mass., and in making the picture great pains has been taken to cover the subject thoroughly. The many historically famous points of the city and also its public buildings and monuments are shown. This picture will be a welcome addition to the ever-widening circle of films which are suitable for school use, and is also guaranteed to entertain a theatre audience partly by reason of its carefully worded subtitles.

Official War Review, No. 22 (Pathé).

Another collection of actual views on the various fronts. Big guns being transported through the mud of Flanders visualizes something often read about in the news despatches. There is also more than a touch of interest in the way German prisoners are questioned for information. Transportation of supplies, speeding forward of batteries, views of the motorcycle corps and big tanks are included.

Bruce Returns With Twenty New Ones.

Robert C. Bruce, whose artistic service to both the moving picture industry and the public has placed him among those whose coming and going is watched with more than the ordinary amount of interest, has again returned to the east. Mr. Bruce has been absent on a picture making tour for several months and has covered with his camera during that time considerable ground, including California, Oregon, Colorado and Idaho. He has brought back with him some twenty different pictures and has been busy for the past couple of weeks with the editing of them at the Lyman Howe laboratory in Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

These films will as usual be distributed through the Educational Films Corporation of America.

Screen Magazine Resumes Business.

After several weeks of non-releasing the Universal Screen Magazine announces its intention of returning to the screen December 1. This issue (No. 95) contains subjects of interest which are as follows: "The Birth of a War Poster," in which James Montgomery Flagg is seen making his famous poster subject "Tell That to the Marines," and "Rounding Up the Long Horns," which lives up to its title and shows us what a group of broncho-hustling cow-punchers can do in the way of a cattle round-up. Other subjects included an animated interview with Richard E. Enright, a musical revue staged by children, a group of paragraphs from different newspapers under the heading "Flowers for the Kaiser's Grave," and an animated clay cartoon by Willie Hopkins, entitled "Made in Germany."

Neilan Under Garson Grant to Direct Pickford Picture

SPECIAL arrangements have been made with Harry Garson, who directs the destinies of Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet, to have Marshall Neilan direct Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," Miss Pickford's first production under her new contract with the First National. Mr. Neilan has just completed "The Unpardonable Sin" from the story of that name by Major Rupert Hughes, in which Miss Sweet is being starred, and which picture, by the way, serves to bring this popular actress back to the screen after more than a year's absence.

Mr. Neilan will direct Miss Pickford in this one picture only, as he and Mr. Garson have some big irons in the fire for the coming winter, which will result in at least one or two important productions, which will be announced later.

Arrangements have also been made with Mr. Garson whereby Miss Pickford will occupy Mr. Garson's part of the Sunset studio and the use of the entire Garson organization intact, including all employes from office help to stage hands.

Mr. Garson found this arrangement dovetailed very well with his plans of coming East to place "The Unpardonable Sin" in one of the Broadway Theatres for a run, which project he wishes to see safely launched before starting his next big production, by which time Mr. Neilan will have completed the Mary Pickford picture, and he and Mr. Garson will then proceed with the plans they have formulated for the coming season.

Clara Kimball Young, who has just finished what is said to be one of her best pictures, "Cheating Cheaters," is also expected in New York within a few days on a flying business trip, and may remain over the holidays.

KANSAS CITY FILM MEN HOLD MEETING

At Luncheon Held at Muehlebach Hotel a Committee Is Appointed to Develop a Plan or Organization

KANSAS CITY amusement men will soon have an organization of the industry which can tackle problems efficiently—and win. The most important meeting of moving picture interests that Kansas City has ever held was staged at the Muehlebach Hotel Friday noon, November 15. It was the most important, because representatives of exchanges, of exhibitors, of supply houses, and of "legitimate," burlesque and vaudeville theatres were present.

And—constituting one of the gratifying features of the occasion—the members of the Kansas Board of Review were present, expressing their desire to join in co-operation.

The meeting was arranged without the explicit purpose of producing an organization. L. D. Balsly and other exchange managers, as a result of conversations with W. B. Tuteur, exhibitor; J. B. Fitzpatrick, manager of the Shubert Theatre, and others, conceived the idea of a luncheon for good fellowship's sake to be participated in by all phases of the amusement business. The affair was hastily arranged, but highly successful. The finest banquet room in Kansas City was engaged and decorated; the orchestra from the Royal Theatre and singers provided music. Seventy men and women attended.

Dr. Sophian Speaks on Epidemics.

W. B. Tuteur presided. The principal speaker was the Rev. Burris A. Jenkins, a popular local pastor, who has spent much time in the past year in the war zones. Dr. A. Sophian, a physician who was brought to Kansas City three years ago to help fight an infantile paralysis epidemic, explained the cause, rise and fall of epidemics, with particular reference to the influenza. Dr. Sophian pointed out that when an epidemic once starts it is fairly certain that practically everybody is almost immediately exposed—at least after the disease has seemingly got a hold on the community. Then the only measures that can check its spread are preventive for the individual, such as vaccination, personal cleanliness in washing nostrils and mouth. He pointed out the lack of logic and reasonableness in continuing a ban on gatherings, when everybody in the gatherings had undoubtedly already received the infection, and either would get sick or would effectually continue to resist the disease. Dr. Sophian had advised exhibitors and exchangemen during the recent epidemic, and it was only because of his expert support of their position that they had proceeded with their suggestions to the board of health with reference to removing the ban on shows.

Fitzpatrick Wants Co-operation.

The introduction of J. B. Fitzpatrick, manager of the Shubert Theatre, was a climax of the session. Mr. Fitzpatrick asked this question: "Why is there this indefinable line between the theatrical man and the picture man?" He said there shouldn't be such a line, and declared that they should walk and talk and act together. "Let us co-operate—let us get together as one man, so that if there is need to present a case we can go as one man and get something," he urged.

L. D. Balsly, manager of the Metro office at Kansas City, spoke for the exchangemen, but in behalf of amusement enterprises. "Theatrical and moving picture enterprises are more tampered with by ill-advised public officials than any other," he said. He referred to the loyal support of all war enterprises—and of local projects by amusement men, referring especially to the Four-Minute speakers and the sacrifice of business that is involved in the many drives. He suggested that the moving picture industry would provide an important field for wounded men, particularly the jobs for operators.

Censor Board Strives to Strengthen.

Mrs. J. M. Miller, chairman of the Kansas state board of review, declared that while the board was generally supposed to be antagonistic to moving picture enterprises, the fact was that this board deeply appreciated the helpful counsel of film men. "We try not to kill, but to strengthen," she said. She commended the spirit of co-operation—and declared that the board wanted to be counted in on any plans for bringing about closer co-operation in the industry.

William Flynn, of Richards & Flynn, owning two local houses, declared that as a member of the city council, he had tried faithfully to serve the public and the industry—and that it was inevitable that he would seem to be hurting somebody or other and that criticism would result. M. Lehman, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, vaudeville, said that the theatrical and moving picture business would not have been discriminated against if an organization had been on the job to foresee and plan proper presentation of facts. George Gallagher, manager of the Gayety, burlesque, urged a big co-operating organization of amusement interests.

Plans Organization.

Charles W. Harden, manager of the Equitable Film Corporation, brought the discussion to a definite point by suggesting an organization. As a result of his motion, Chairman Tuteur appointed the following committee to develop a plan of organization, and report at a later meeting: Frank L. Newman, manager of Royal and Regent theatres; George W. Curtis, manager Doric Theatre; Charles W. Harden, manager Equitable Film Corporation; L. D. Balsly, manager Metro; Martin Lehman, manager Orpheum Theatre; J. B. Fitzpatrick, manager Shubert Theatre.

Cambria County Exhibitors Organize.

The "flu" epidemic and resultant closing order in Pennsylvania had one good effect, at least. It has resulted in the exhibitors of Johnstown and Cambria county getting together for the first time.

During the epidemic showmen in all branches of the business met to go over the "flu" situation, and decided to effect a permanent organization. H. W. Scherer, of Scherer & Kelley, operating the Cambria, legitimate, and the New Park, motion pictures, was made president in recognition of his position as the oldest showman in the county.

H. H. Gardner, of the Lyric theatre, Merrellville, a neighborhood house, was made vice president. L. W. Barclay, advertising manager of the Grand Amusement Company, controlling the Nemo, Parkview, Grand and Victoria, was elected secretary and treasurer. An effort will be made to get every exhibitor in the county into the organization.

People We Have Met Recently.

Lionel Belmore, who was for several years a Vitagraph director, is playing with "The Masqueraders." He has just returned from Australia with this company. "The Masqueraders" was presented at Melbourne and Sydney for eighteen weeks, with Guy Bates Post in the lead under the management of I. & N. Tait.

Fox Directors Change Stars.

With the resumption of activities in the William Fox studios at Hollywood, changes were made in the assignment of directors.

Gladys Brockwell, who has just begun work on a production temporarily titled "The Framers," is now working under Lynn Reynolds.

Tom Mix is about to start work on a new picture, "The Wilderness Trail," under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint, who has directed Miss Brockwell for some time.

ROBERTSON-COLE MAKES LONG CONTRACT

Under the Agreement Concern Will Supply All Pictures for the Exhibitors' Mutual Corporation

A SIGNIFICANT deal was closed November 20, when a long term contract was signed between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation.

The officials of the two corporations who have been in conference in New York since Monday with Walter Hoff Seely, director of the department of motion pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company, are William J. Clark, H. A. Brink, James M. Sheldon, H. C. Cornelius and Charles C. Pettijohn.

The Robertson-Cole Company is a banking institution, and was one of the countrys' important exporting organizations before it became interested in the handling of pictures. Finding a steadily growing demand for American films in every part of the globe, they entered the motion picture business. At first they were interested in film solely for export. Realizing that in order to secure the best in photoplay productions for the world market they must also control the same pictures for this country, a domestic department was organized. From the first, Robertson-Cole has been applying established business methods to the exploitation of their film products.

Since its entrance into the field of motion pictures Robertson-Cole has steadily demonstrated that it intends doing things differently. By the terms of the new contract Robertson-Cole will furnish all the pictures for the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation. This concern has in full operation twenty-six exchanges in the United States and three in Canada, which guarantees a remarkable and consistent distribution.

Company Acts as Banker and Agent.

"The Robertson-Cole Company is not going into the producing or distributing business," said Walter Hoff Seeley, director of the department of motion pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company. "It is determined to act solely as banker and exclusive agent for manufacturers of high grade pictures who are worthy of the support and co-operation which Robertson-Cole Company are able to offer through this organization and offices throughout the world. We have made a contract with the Mutual and a contract with the Affiliated, because we believe they represent the best thought in the industry, and have the most comprehensive plan of distribution and operation.

"The Mutual and Affiliated have been equally complimentary to Robertson-Cole and have, therefore, expressed their satisfaction at taking pictures for distribution solely from Robertson-Cole Company. We have decided to release pictures solely through the Affiliated and the Mutual because it is our purpose always to make sure that pictures of approved merit; and the only way to insure this is to control the entire program. It is interesting to observe that there is no hysteria or peculiar elation about the organization of these plans. They are based solely on business ideas which have their foundation in extreme conservatism."

By the terms of the contract the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, which is owned and controlled by exhibitors, will maintain a committee, which will select from the pictures furnished by Robertson-Cole those best suited and adapted to be marketed as distinct Affiliated releases.

Will Supply One Feature Weekly.

The Robertson-Cole Company is now prepared to furnish to the exchanges of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation at least one feature a week. It has acquired control of the world's rights to the series of de luxe features starring Billie Rhodes, of which eight will be produced in the next twelve months; eight with Henry B. Walthall, eight William Desmond productions, eight features starring Bessie Barriscale, eight with Sessue Hayawaka, besides Martin Johnson's remarkable feature, "Cannibals of the South Seas." News of the transaction whereby Robertson-Cole control the rights to the Barriscale and Hayawaka pictures came to light last week.

Several other contracts of significance to the exhibitor are now pending, including the release of a number of super-features. One of these, announcement of which is authorized by Robertson-Cole, is Hallie Ermini Rives' story "Long Lane's Turning," which the National Film Corporation of America is producing with Henry B. Walthall in the stellar role.

According to Mr. Seely, definite plans have been formulated for the following releases: Dec. 8, Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas"; Dec. 15, Billie Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams"; Dec. 22, Henry B. Walthall in "And a Still Small Voice"; Dec. 29, Bessie Barriscale in "A Fair Imposter"; Jan. 5, William Desmond in "The Love of William"; Jan. 12, Sessue Hayawaka in "Bonds of Honor."

Robertson-Cole announces that the deal will not affect its foreign business, which will continue to be expanded along the lines which made the organization one of the biggest factors in the world's general exporting trade.

In connection with the announcement of the new deal by Robertson-Cole, corroborating statements have been issued by officials of the other corporations interested, James Sheldon, chairman of the board of directors of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation; William J. Clark, president of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, and the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, by H. A. Brink, president; W. J. Clark, vice-president; H. C. Cornelius, secretary and treasurer.

Charles Christie Is Cheerful.

Charles Christie, who is the business end of the Christie Comedy combination, dropped into the Moving Picture World office the other day radiating optimism. He said that the progress his company was making was most satisfactory, and that the plan his company had adopted for the disposition of its product had proved so productive of profits that there was no disposition to make any change therein. Mr. Christie made several stops on his way to New York, which resulted in increased bookings for Christie Comedies. This and some of the prospects gathered here since his arrival undoubtedly accounted for his cheerfulness.

Canadians Take Steps to Have Reel Tax Revised

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, with headquarters in Toronto, has made its first definite step in the direction of securing a revision of the present fifteen cents a reel a day tax imposed by the Dominion Government on all pictures in use in Canada.

Secretary Thomas Scott recently made a trip to Ottawa as the official representative of the association to interview high Government officials regarding the tax which has proved a burden for many small exhibitors. Since that time Mr. Scott has received encouraging letters from both Sir Robert Borden, Prime Minister of Canada, and the department of inland revenue.

Mr. Scott declared that he has received assurances that the tax will receive special consideration at the next session of the Canadian Parliament. The latter will convene early in January.

Complants have been received from many parts of Canada regarding the injustice of the Canadian reel tax. Many small exhibitors have suggested that the tax be graded so that they will not be required to pay as much as the big theatres in large cities.

Would Duplicate Tax on Tickets.

"Ridiculous" is the expression used by Secretary Scott in reference to a suggestion by Finance Commissioner Bradshaw, of the City of Toronto, that the city duplicate the war tax on theatre admission tickets so that Toronto's revenue may be increased. The war tax has been collected by the Province of Ontario for several years, and it was only recently that the tax on high-priced tickets was materially increased. Commissioner Bradshaw now believes that Toronto can secure about $200,000 a year by the imposition of a special tax on tickets amounting to one or two cents on each ticket.

The civic legislation committee was supposed to have met on three different occasions recently to consider the proposal, but only one or two members of the committee have attended, and the meetings have had to be postponed. It is hinted that the members of the committee are lying low because of the approaching civic elections. They do not wish to incur the wrath of local exhibitors just before election time. The Provincial Legislature also meets in January, before which time the city is supposed to have its drafts of proposed legislation ready for approval by the Ontario authorities.

Developments, or the lack of them, are being watched by the executive of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association because it is believed that if Toronto gets away with the plan of imposing a special local tax on admission tickets every municipality in Ontario will follow suit, thus adding to the burdens of the exhibitors throughout the province.

TEN THOUSAND AMEXES SEE BILL HART

How George Balsdon Traveled 200 Miles to Provide Hurry-Up Entertainment for Soldiers

Paris, Sept. 30.

OLD BILL HART, who sneers into the apertures of six-shooters aimed at him by bad, bad guys, here goes on record as having played to the largest audience to witness a moving picture in France. Which the same is some record, when one considers that on an average 2,500,000 Americans, soldiers, marines, sailors, laborers and other war workers in France witness the Y. M. C. A. and K. of C. movies each week; a considerable record for "Bill," who played to 10,000 at one run!

Here's the scenario: A General, anxious to have entertainment provided for several thousands of new troops just arrived at a concentration camp in the south of France, called his chaplains and demanded suggestions. "Movies," they chorused. The general asked where they obtained them and they again chorused "From the Y. M. C. A. in Paris." So the general urged them to it. A chaplain sped to Paris and sought George Balsdon. Almost everyone in the "movie" game knows George. Almost everyone knows that when George starts anything he never stops until he finishes it.

George listened to the chaplain's story and put on his cap.

"Let's go," he remarked in words of one syllable, quoting a noted strategist.

He loaded a generator, a projector and a few reels of "Bill" Hart's choicest sneers into a camionette, which had been twice wrecked, twice condemned and twice reclaimed. He drove nearly two hundred miles without any trouble except a couple of flat tires, a carburetor that kept displaying a mean temper and a brake that worked only when coaxed, and reached his destination at half past 8 o'clock that night.

"Just in time for a show," gloated the chaplain. George groaned, having hoped for a night's rest first. However, he asked for the best place to set up.

Place Screen Across Hotel.

The town square was the place. The screen was stretched right across the front of the leading hotel. They rigged the generator up on an idle wagon and fixed the projector on the camionette's trailer. Meantime a few trusty soldiers circulated with the glad tidings of "movies." At 9 o'clock everything was ready and ten minutes later the town square was so filled with soldiers that a fat man couldn't have squeezed in without the aid of a crowbar. Other spectators hung out of windows around the square. Fully thirty eager ones climbed all over the camionette.

"Ten thousand in this crowd," estimated the chaplain, who was good at figures, and his fellow officers agreed.

"Fair enough," said George Balsdon, fighting his way back and forth between generator and projector. He had discovered a soldier who could operate the projecting machine, so there was never a hitch as "Bill" Hart rode, sneered at bad guys' six-guns and finally permitted the adoring heroine to hurl herself into his arms.

The record crowd went wild with joy and declared the Y. M. C. A. and the K. of C. would have to project a lot more film before they ever entertained a larger audience of Americans at one showing. Still audiences ranging from this size down to a hundred soldiers make up those which weekly enjoy the film shown by the Y. M. C. A. and the K. of C. in France. A. H. GURNEY.

June Elvidge Marries Canadian Soldier Hero

JUNE ELVIDGE, who has appeared for some time in World Pictures productions, was married in New York on Tuesday, November 19, to Lieutenant Frank C. Badgley by Magistrate Peter T. Barlow. The bride, who has been playing in pictures for the past three years, was born in St. Paul, Lieutenant Badgley was in the first Canadian Expeditionary Forces which went overseas in 1914 and was a member of the field artillery. He remained on the Western front until December, 1916, when he was wounded, having won the military cross for bravery at Courcellette in the meantime. He was invalided home and later was placed in charge of the photographic section of the British Bureau of Information.

Mr. and Mrs. Badgley are spending their honeymoon at the Badgley home in Ottawa, Can.

Salt Lake City Operators Demand Increase in Salary

DEMANDS for an increased salary schedule are made upon the Salt Lake City picture theatre managers by the Salt Lake Moving Picture Machine Operators' local No. 250 in a new contract submitted recently. The regular operators are seeking an increase of $5 a week. Under the new contract they ask $35 a week, or $7 a day for anything less than six days' work. For relief operators they ask 70 cents an hour and for overtime $1 an hour.

The operators have been receiving $30 a week of seven days. Now they demand $35 for a week of six days. Seven hours will constitute a day's work under the contract terms and overtime is described as time put in after 11 p.m. or before the regular opening of performances.

It is proposed that the new contract shall be binding until December 1, 1919. A meeting of the Salt Lake City theatre managers has been called by George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress Theatre, to consider the terms of the contract, which has received the indorsement of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, with which the motion picture operators' local is affiliated.

Katterjohn Headquarters To Be in Los Angeles

THE announcement of the formation of Katerjohn Films to produce a number of special productions during the coming year has caused numerous inquiries from state rights buyers evidencing the interest created by the announcement. In Denver considerable competition has developed among those operating state rights exchanges anxious to secure the Katterjohn Films for that territory, and an invitation has been received to establish a studio in the Colorado city. Similar interest has been aroused among exchanges in the south.

San Francisco has come forward with an offer of a studio site, and an especially attractive proposition has been made. Mr. Katterjohn has fully determined, however, to produce his pictures in Los Angeles.

Eastman Company Ready for Business Expansion

THE Eastman Kodak Company at Rochester, N. Y., is ready for the period of reconstruction that is to follow the war. It is making all of the raw materials which before hostilities it purchased from Germany. Instead of cutting down the number of employes the company is preparing to add to the size of the plant and to furnish work for at least 500 additional persons as fast as that number are available. This information is given out by George Eastman, in response to a question regarding business and financial conditions following the war.

"Beginning about four years ago, the industries of the country have increasingly devoted themselves to producing war materials, and for the last year practically everything has been subordinated to war work," said Mr. Eastman, Rochester's largest employer. "During these years replacements have been postponed, improvements have ceased and stocks of merchandise have been depleted.

"Why, then, should there be a business depression when so much is needed? If there is a depression it can come only from lack of confidence and lack of skill in readjustment from war to peace work. If rightly directed there ought to be work for everybody, including soldiers and those who have entered industry and want to stay.

"If the Kodak Company can maintain supplies of raw materials we have work for all of our present employes, and as soon as we can obtain additional supplies, which we believe will be forthcoming very soon, we can find work for at least 500 more.

"Our engineering force is already at work on plans for a number of new buildings, including one which will quadruple our production of gelatine, a material we formerly bought from Germany. In this connection I may say that the Kodak Company is making practically all of the raw material it formerly purchased from Germany."

Plans have already been approved for the erection of an immense gelatine plant by the Eastman Company on its property in Dewey avenue. The building will be 400 by 600 feet, with a three story center and two main floor wings. Kodak Park and the lands adjacent to it, which the company owns, are humming with activity that promises to increase during the next few months. A large overflow office building will rise on the Ridge road to house many of the offices now laboring in the cramped quarters of the main office of the plant. A big warehouse is partly completed and a great film storage building is now being finished for use. The material aspects of things at Kodak Park prophesy the prosperity which Mr. Eastman says will follow the conclusion of peace.

Gaby Deslys Heads Pathe for December's Opening

THE Pathe program for the week of December 10 is especially strong, being headed by the six-reel special feature, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, with Harry Pilcer. It is a charming rendition of Marcel L'Herbier's romance, directed by Louis Mercanton and produced by the Eclipse Film Company of France. It is both romance and big spectacle, and great masses of brilliant costumes are handled to advantage in the scenes taken in Casino de Paris.

"Milady o' the Beanstalk," starring Baby Marie Osborne, is a Pathe program feature which shows the little favorite at her best, the story being a commingling of fairy tale of youth and of hard realities of maturity. It is equally strong in its appeal to both kiddies and grown-ups.

Harold Lloyd, Rolin comedy star, disports himself in a series of laughing acrobatics in "Hear 'Em Rave." And the spectator in witnessing the attitude of some of the characters, realizes just what a blessing the silent drama is on such an occasion the nimble Harold has 'em all raving.

The eighth episode of "Wolves of Kultur," with Leah Baird and Sheldon Lewis, is called "In the Hands of the Hun." It has high tension and many thrills.

November 24 Attractions at New York Theatres

RIVOLI.—Enrico Caruso, the famous tenor, made his screen debut at the Rivoli the week of November 24 in "My Cousin," written by Margaret Turnbull. Carolina White, the noted soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, heads the support. A new Robert C. Bruce scenic called "A Wee Bit Odd," the Rivoli Animated Pictorial, and Mack Sennett's extravaganza, "Who's Little Wife Are You," were also shown. Vincent Ballester and Anna Rosner were the soloists.

RIALTO.—Pauline Frederick in Alicia Ramsaye and Rudolph de Cordova's story, "A Daughter of the Old South," a Paramount production, was the screen star at the Rialto. Pedro de Cordoba and Vera Beresford are members of the cast. The Animated Magazine, a Sunshine comedy called "Mongrels," and a travel picture of Java completed the picture program. The soloists were The Rialto Male Quartette and Sascha Fidelman.

STRAND.—Geraldine Farrar in the Goldwyn picture, "The Hell Cat," the first western drama in which the star ever appeared on the screen, was the chief attraction on the Strand program. A new comedy entitled "A Straight Crook," was also on the program. The Strand Quartette and Malita Bonconi furnished the special musical features.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—First half, Julia Arthur in "The Cavell Case." Latter half, Mildred Harris in "Borrowed Clothes."

BROADWAY.—Second week of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Chaplin. "Shoulder Arms" and "Borrowed Clothes" remained the pictures. "After the War" is announced as the attraction at this theatre starting December 1.

CIVIL WAR PLAY HISTORY MAY REPEAT

If It Does, the Best Screen Drama of the Great Conflict Will Not Appear in the Present Decade

LEE KUGEL, publicity producer for the World Film Corporation, walked into the editorial rooms of the Moving Picture World the other day and proceeded to ask a question.

Said Lee: "Any of you boys alive at the close of the Civil War?" He was looking straight at Tony, the office-boy, when he spoke; so Tony shook his head and answered, "No, sir."

"Neither was I," said Lee; "but I advise one of you to look up the Civil War crop of plays. Their history should make interesting reading for the men in the film game. The war closed, you know, in '65, and they were grinding out war plays as late as 1895. 'Held by the Enemy,' 'Secret Service,' 'Shenandoah,' 'For Fair Virginia,' and 'The Heart of Maryland' were the winners that held the boards, season after season, and set a new standard for the American drama. The crop of war plays that will result from the Great Conflict just closed will be spread over as many years and will show a marked improvement in technic and depth of thought as time brings a clearer perspective."

Lee then turned his attention to the oldest man on the staff and proceeded to interview him:

"How old are you, Old-Timer?"

"Old enough to remember the close of the Civil War," was the reply.

"What about the war plays then?"

War Plays Were Crude Affairs.

"This was long before the days of the traveling combination, but the stock companies around the country all produced war plays. Crude affairs, all of them, but full of patriotic fervor and hearty support of the Union. One of the favorites was called 'The Drummer Boy.' It was the first theatrical performance I ever witnessed, and I have a vivid recollection of the scene in Libby Prison, where the drummer boy reached over the dead line for a piece of bread and was shot by the guard. I remember how hard I cried when his big brother, also a prisoner, held him in his arms and received the dying boy's last message to the folks at home."

"How long did the stock companies continue to put on this class of dramas?"

"Not many years; but they were kept before the public by a number of one-man organizations, ex-soldiers mostly, who traveled about the country and produced war plays of their own manufacture with local amateurs, recruited largely from the G. A. R. posts. The first really successful Civil War play was William Gillette's 'Held by the Enemy,' produced in 1886. This was followed by the same author's even more successful 'Secret Service.' It had two long runs in New York, you remember, and one in London.

The latter information was a well-thumbed page out of Lee's own history of the drama.

Best War Pictures Will Come Later.

Said he: "Bronson Howard's 'Shenandoah,' produced in 1889, and Belasco's 'The Heart of Maryland,' brought out at the Herald Square Theatre in 1895, both gave 'Secret Service' a close run for first money. Thomas Dixon's profits from the picture, 'The Birth of a Nation,' had a counterpart in the easy money made by Uncle Dick Hooley, manager of Hooley's Theatre, Chicago, out of 'Shenandoah.' Just before Charles Frohman produced the play at the Twenty-third Street Theatre he was in need of a little ready cash, so, when he met Uncle Dick on Broadway, he persuaded him to buy a third interest in the play for fifteen hundred dollars. Uncle Dick did it more as a matter of accommodation and because he liked Frohman. Nice tidy interest he got on his money."

"Just how do you think the film manufacture can profit by the experience of the Civil War play?" Lee was asked.

"The moving picture histories of the great battles and the interesting sidelights on actual events connected with the war and its after-effects in the near future will have first call for some time to come. Screen fiction dealing with the 1914-18 struggle for world freedom will repeat the history of the Civil War play: its finest examples will not be produced in the present decade."

Henley Signs Long Contract to Direct Goldwyn Pictures

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of Goldwyn Pictures, has made public the fact that Hobart Henley has signed a long-term renewal of his contract to direct the productions of various Goldwyn stars. His first assignment will be with Pauline Frederick, shortly to make her bow in her big Goldwyn star series productions.

Though Mr. Henley is the youngest Goldwyn director in point of years, he is the senior in point of service. He has successfully directed six Goldwyn productions—four starring Mae Marsh and two written by Rex Beach.

Mr. Henley's service at Fort Lee began with the making of Mae Marsh's "The Face in the Dark." In his first production, the story of which was written by Irvin S. Cobb, Mr. Goldfish was delighted to find a certain indefinable quality he knew existed in Mae Marsh but which had not heretofore been particularly evidenced on the screen. It justified his belief in Miss Marsh and in her new director.

Mr. Henley's first success was followed rapidly by three other Marsh productions that immediately became box-office successes. These were "All Woman," "The Glorious Adventure," and "Money Mad."

Mr. Henley's directorial skill was even better evidenced in his next production, the Rex Beach story called "Laughing Bill Hyde," featuring Will Rogers, famous cowboy monologist of the stage. Wiseacres shook their heads when Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Beach announced that Rogers had been engaged for the leading role in this picture. They said nobody could be found who could transmit the unique Rogers personality to silver sheet. They said Rogers was a world-beater with his patter, but that, deprived of this, he could be no better than ordinary. And Hobart Henley stepped right in and fooled everybody.

The critics of the country have yet to pass judgment on Mr. Henley's newest effort, a Goldwyn production of Rex Beach's unpublished story, "Too Fat to Fight," in which Frank McIntyre has the leading role.

"I regard Hobart Henley as one of the most able directors," says Mr. Goldfish.

Famous Players Take "Little Women."

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the William A. Brady production, "Little Women," which delighted capacity audiences at the Strand Theatre during the week of November 10. It will be released through the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges as a Paramount-Artcraft Special probably in January.

Publicist Expresses Surprise that Theatre Seats Are Comfortable.

MISS NEWBRO HERPICIDE is a most remarkable young person. In company with a girl chum, she approached the Rivoli box office, very unostentatiously waited on the line, purchased two orchestra tickets and made her way into the theatre. After a delay an usher succeeded in locating two seats quite a distance from the screen and considerably to one side.

The all-observing publicity man, ascertaining that there were two loge seats vacant, deferentially suggested that the girls occupy them as guests of Mr. Rothapfel. Imagine his surprise when the screen queen thanked him sweetly, but insisted that she was quite comfortable where she was.—Publicity.

We Present Important Item of News In Film Society.

THE following is a verbatim report of an incident that occurred at the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation last Tuesday: A boy enters and bawls out: "60 cents C. O. D. for Miss Edith Baum." Miss Baum is the genial stenog and assistant bookkeeper of the Arrow Film Corporation and was out at the time.

"What's the C. O. D. fer?" said Dave, the office boy.

"Aw, it's a hitchin' ring," answered the messenger.

And David opened the package and there was revealed a wedding ring.

The 60 cents was for an inscription, which read "I. L. to E. B., November 17, 1918."

When Miss Baum returned, David without much ado and without malice aforethought, kissed her on the cheek and said:

"I congratulate you!" and showed her the ring. The cat was out of the bag, and she confessed that on the previous Sunday the hymaniel knot was tied and she became the lawfully wedded wife of one Irving Levy.

When representatives of the various daily newspapers, as well as of the Associated Press and International News, called to interview Miss Baum she was asked:

"Are you still going to stick to the Arrow Film and the motion picture business?"

And she replied: "I committed bigamy; I was already wedded to the Arrow Film and I merely took on Irving Levy as a side line. I'm going to stick to both."

Mrs. Levy insists that between nine A. M. and five-thirty P. M. she be known as Miss Baum; after that it's Mrs. Levy.

JOHN P. WADE, who plays John Craig in J. Here's the point: An "extra" who carried a spear in the same pictures is today one of the most famous comedy producers in the business. The extra had faith and stuck to it. Wade didn't, so he can't count so much fame and money today as t'other can.

Julius Singer Has Proof That Friendship Is a Valuable Asset When it Comes to the Film Business.

J. J. DUNBAR, manager of the Princess Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., has a genius for showmanship. Aside from knowing how to run a theatre, he knows how to restrain himself under the trying circumstances that arise when he has a houseful of people waiting to see the show he has promised. Here is Manager Dunbar's report to Julius Singer when matters took an exaspering turn, on a recent occasion:

"Leaving all jokes aside you sent me a comedy film; a roll of tape that you seemed anxious to have called "The Test." It may be that you are right. Far be it from me to make a liar out of you, for a little bit of junk. The thing has no name to tell what it is, so I guess you are right—because "The Test" of trying to run it is some "test," believe me.

"Trying to run it was the only way we had to find out what it might be; but whatever it is the ding busted thing isn't half there and what there is of it is so badly assembled that the lense went cock-eyed showing it. A man going out said it was so rotten it was funny. You understand, Julius, "rotten"—I wonder what that means? However, my beautiful 10,000-seat house won't stand any more such tape.

"I am now going to tell you a secret. One of my machines is a little stuck on itself; but this is really and truly the first time it ever refused to run a reel of film. Just as true as I am sitting here writing to you, it kicked up a hell of a row and refused to run until we fed it some good dope. What do you think of that? Now if I were you I'd look this set of tape over and send it to your best friend—for it surely is a good binder of friendship."

Congratulations are pouring in on Mr. Hennessy, many of them referring to the "Three Star Hennessys."

Mr. Hennessy's jubiliation yesterday was not unlike that of the hero of the story being told by Henry Clive. The fact that he was the father of three lusty offisprings induced Mr. Hennessy to celebrate, and, in the course of his revel, he arrived at the Friars' grill room.

General Film to Release Red Cross Christmas Films

ONE of the most elaborate and timely films of its kind is the single-reel novelty production, "The Greatest Gift," just announced for free distribution by the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures. This film is to be used in the same manner that the Liberty Loan films provided by the motion picture industry were used in the record-breaking Fourth Liberty Loan drive—that is to say, in the theatres of the country. It is offered to all theatres in the United States free of charge for showing in behalf of the great forthcoming Red Cross campaign which will be known as the "Christmas Roll Call." Intensive co-operation by prominent motion picture interests has made this special Red Cross release available. "The Greatest Gift" was produced for the Bureau of Pictures of the American Red Cross by courtesy of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which employed the facilities of its eastern studios to carry out the ideas presented by the Red Cross people. Some to its most important players and directors aided in making the production attractive, and nothing was spared in the way of costumes and scenery. "The Greatest Gift" in fact is a spectacular achievement notwithstanding its length is confined to the footage of one reel.

A liberal number of prints of "The Greatest Gift" have been provided by courtesy of the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories, and these will be immediately available. Exhibition of the picture is expected to begin December 9 and to continue through the week of December 16-23, the period of the Christmas Roll Call. The Red Cross organization in the United States is undertaking a tremendous campaign for membership during December and it expects more than to renew its roll of over 23,000,000 adults and 8,000,000 junior members.

Distribution of "The Greatest Gift" is by courtesy of General Film Company.

The story of "The Greatest Gift" is allegorical, the scenes being related to each other in the underlying idea, that of self-sacrifice.

Fairbanks Going Abroad.

Douglas Fairbanks has started negotiations with the Government transport department which will give him the distinction of being the first screen star to take a company of film actors to Southern France for the purpose of staging a series of pictures.

The selected subjects will not deal with war conditions, but will be typical Fairbanks stories laid abroad. It is quite possible the company will be taken on a complete tour of Europe for a special scenario now being developed by Director Albert Parker.

The Artcraft actor-producer will make one more picture in this country to follow "Arizona" and will then start bag and baggage for foreign shores accompanied by ten members of his organization. He will remain abroad for three months.

World Officials Attend Theatre Opening.

The opening of Washington, D. C., newest picture theatre, The Metropolitan, under the direction of Harry M. Crandall, was celebrated in fitting style, November 23, when "Under Four Flags" was shown at the Nation's capital for the first time. One of the greatest audiences in the history of this country were present. The entire roster of World Picture stars, including Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley were present and made their personal appearance coupled with fitting remarks dedicating this theatre, which is the last word in theatre construction. A special car carried World officials and stars, who made the journey to assist in the festivities, which were rounded out by a banquet.

Bennison's "Oh, Johnny!" To Be Issued By Goldwyn

LOUIS BENNISON, who captured the fancy of America's cities when he scored his sensational success in "Johnny Get Your Gun," is the newest acquisition of the screen. He is put forth under the imprint of the new Betzwood Film Company of Philadelphia and the distribution of his productions has been won by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Announcement is made by Goldwyn of a series of six Louis Bennison productions annually to be released under Star Series, beginning in December. Already three Bennison pictures are completed, and the first of these is in the hands of all the Goldwyn offices in twenty cities for trade showings for exhibitors.

Louis Bennison
In "Oh, Johnny!"

"Oh, Johnny!" is the production selected by Mr. Bennison's debut. It is a fast-moving romantic drama of the East and West, which presents the handsome star as his most natural self. The story is by Wilson Bayley and was directed by Ira M. Lowry.

Three seasons ago Bennison took New York by storm in "Johnny Get Your Gun," being at that time absolutely unknown in the metropolitan theatre. For the greater part of a year he continued to enlarge his success in New York and during the next season duplicated his eastern hit in all the large cities of the country.

Berger to Combat Efforts of German Propagandists

HENRY DIAMANT BERGER, director of the French film trade paper Le Film, has arrived in New York with the object of establishing in Paris a central distributors' agency for all films in order to defeat efforts of the German film industry to capture the film trade in neutral countries.

"We have been working on this line for some time," said Mr. Berger. "For instance, we have been able to obtain control of all motion picture houses in the French part of Switzerland and in Zurich. We have built a bigger and more up-to-date picture house entirely for Allied films. As we shall be able to offer much better propaganda, it is obvious that we shall get the patronage of those who up to now only went to see German films. There is a great field in this district to be covered—we have to cover Switzerland, Holland, Spain, Scandavania, Rumania and Russia, where the Germans have already started their propaganda tactics."

Brings Film Taken in Paris Under Bombardment.

"The French Film Industry has been practically at a standstill during the war, but still we have taken a few very interesting pictures and I have got one with me which was taken in Paris while the town was being bombarded by German long range guns. I hope America will like this film. I shall stay here and study conditions for two or three months. I see, however, a great co-operation between the French and American film interests."

Mr. Berger has made his offices with Adolphe Osso, 1457 Broadway, where he will be pleased to discuss his plans further.

IDEAS ON EXPLOITING "AFTER THE WAR"

Problem Play Starring Grace Cunard Offers Great Chance for "Cleaning Up" with Right Publicity

By Walter K. Hill.

BECAUSE "After the War" is the first of what will probably be a long procession of features based on events incident to the downfall of the Hun, and because of its timely interest, the World sent me to the projection room of the Argosy Film Company, 729 Seventh avenue, to see the picture screened in the form that it will go to exhibitors. Showmen who traffic in state rights will market this subject independently, and as an aid to exhibitors who finally bring "After the War" before their local public, my instructions were in effect that the films should be visioned from an exploitation standpoint.

In the proper department of this issue "After the War" has been reviewed in that spirit of fairness and justice that has always marked the World's reports on films. This review, coupled with the following exploitation matter, should guide exhibitors to a logical conclusion; should help them decide upon how they will, having contracted for the feature, exploit it from the showmanship angle.

Showmen Follow Their Own Business Bent.

Generally speaking, there are two classes of exhibitors—those who play to transient audiences and those who must look upon their business as a repeated appeal to practically the same public. For the "transient" there will be ample opportunity, in the paper and publicity furnished by the distributor, to "flash" and boom patronage sensationally. To this class of showmen and audiences "After the War" may be meant to signify whatever will get the most money in certain given localities. The paper that the distributor promises to supply will be "flash" enough to form the basis of a banner and lobby "bally-hoo" that should get the idler and transient off the street in profitable numbers.

There is neither opportunity nor inclination to lead readers through an "A, B, C" lay-out of publicity. We hold that the man who is competent to run a theatre is able to apply his ingenuity to exploitation of the film once he is given, as we propose to do, the ideas the subject presents to one who has looked at the picture. What is here presented (passing up the transient showman as generally able to get his crowds from the passer-by) is written to aid the larger and more essential element among the exhibitor body of the country who depend upon practically the same people week in and week out.

Grace Cunard
Is Star of "After the War," the First of Post-Bellum Problem Photoplays.

Don't Use the Title to Mislead.

Don't promise your audience that discussions at the peace table are to be forecasted. This picture is a problem play, carrying a theme as vital to the women of France, Italy and Belgium as may be involved in the very Peace that has at last sent is welcome rays across their path. "After the War" is a money-getting title—but get the money in a way that no one may leave your theatre complaining that they have been deceived by misrepresentation. Let it be known that "After the War" is a problem play—and a pictured problem that will appeal to the thoughtful element in all creation.

Good Play, Fine Production and Cast.

Grace Cunard should be a name to draw money if properly exploited. She is the same Grace Cunard your patrons have seen in Universal serials and sensational melodramas. But she is a different actress

Scene from "After the War."
The Heart of the Hun Beast Is Stilled by the Hand of His Own Wife.

than she has appeared to be in previous works. The wild stunts and harum-scarum demands of serials and sensations have hitherto served to hide talents that now come to engaging fruition in "After the War."

Edward Cecil, her leading man; Herbert Prior, the villain; Dora Rogers, the woman who plays the vengeful wife; Gretchen Lederer, Gertrude Astor, Harry Carter and the director, Joseph De Grasse, are skillful artisans who have played prominent roles (even star parts, in some cases) in numerous photodramas. If you have not bent the credulity of your audiences through the intoxication of past superlatives, tell them that they are going to see the nearest thing to an "all-star cast" that motion pictures have shown in many moons; tell them this, and the picture will make your word good with your public.

Our Soldiers Will Know the Truth.

We have read of Hun brutalities to women and children in conquered territories. This picture is based on an act of brutality by a Hun militarist, who forces motherhood upon a girl who submits to save the life of the soldier she loves. The child afterward becomes a barrier the woman establishes between herself and the sweetheart who is home from war a hero. Amid the conflict of mother love and loathing for the child, she rises to another duty—to spare the man she loves unhappiness resulting from her helpless submission to brute force. The child lives to become the cause of retribution; to inspire the Hun's lawful wife to kill him for his perfidious conduct. And then the murderess begs that the child be given to her as her own to raise—a situation that promises to give the youngster a name in future, while it clears the way to happiness for the heroine in the love of her soldier-hero for whom she has suffered so deeply.

In the months that "After the War" is being markcted and exhibited the Yank's will be coming home and scattering themselves into "old home towns" throughout the land. They will, beyond question, be able to give first hand, upon the word of men who will gain credence, numerous instances of Hun brutality that is likely to keep the hearts of our people steeled against the wild beasts of war. Capitalize the soldiers. Watch the papers. Couple the stories that come from "over there" with the purpose of "After the War."

Bid Fearlessly for Women's Patronage.

Problems are being met face to face in our own land—where our fireside has been kept free from the heel of the Hun. Greater problems are being faced every day by women of the Allies. The fatherless child is a fact on the freed soil of Europe. Women here at home are sewing and mending, working and helping the little ones of France and Belgium whom the Hun has left in his wake. It is of these little children that "After the War" presents a pictured problem. The thought can be carried in advertising and press work straight to the sympathetic hearts of American women—what shall become of these children?

The Longer the Run the Better for You.

As the theme of the picture is its greatest asset, the discussion the first showings are bound to inspire will prove unmistakably benefical. Therefore (within reason) the longer the run the more money is likely to be gleaned from your community. Mothers will have their own opinion as to the heroine's decision to part with her child. There will be an element in every community that will maintain the girl did right; there will be some who will decry the motive of the murderess who, cleared by a court of justice, would have the fruit of her husband's perfidy in her possession.

First (that we know of) among the problem plays that are bound to follow in the wake of world-strife the exhibitor who takes on "After the War" will, by all the omens of showmanship, get a lot of money with it if he deals squarely with his public; tells the truth in advance and makes no extreme effort at sensationalism.

Producers' and Distributors' News

"Made in America" Is Unique Among War Pictures

UNIQUE among the many war pictures which have been produced is "Made in America," in that its principal motif is not the valor of the American soldier in battle, though it is not lacking in heroic incidents, but it deals more with those great constructive forces which made American valor count for victory—the selective draft and the training camp.

It is the story of three American boys; two of them, John and Jimmy Evers, are eager and willing to serve their country; the other, Joe Nelson, is a slacker who tries to dodge the draft and, when unsuccessful, yields a sulky obedience to military rules. How, under the influence of that wonderful spirit which pervades the Nation's great training camps, he gets the right perspective on things and becomes interested in his work and patriotic in his sentiments, is one of the object lessons which abound in the eight reels of "Made in America."

Joe Nelson not only develops into a splendid soldier, but, upon his return to civil life, without question will be a more useful citizen with far higher ideals of citizenship. There is a pretty love story running through the subject.

Of the two brothers, John goes to France, where he wins promotion and a war medal for valor. Mrs. Evers is a beautifully drawn character of the sacrificing American mother whose counterpart is found in thousands of American homes.

The camp scenes were all taken in one of the great army camps of the country and show every phase of the soldier's life in camp, from reveille until taps.

"Made in America" is being produced by Ashley Miller, with the co-operation of the Government, through the Division of Films, and is published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Musical Comedy Film" for Lee Kiddies.

"Smiles," described as "the first musical comedy of the screen," has been started in Los Angeles by Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox baby grands, under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom.

Ralph H. Spence, special writer of humorous subjects and suhtitle specialist for William Fox, wrote the original story of "Smiles," and in constructing his comedy introduced several novelties which are expected to mark a radical departure in film plays. Mr. Spence has managed to fit each episode in the play to some well known musical composition. The picture is punctuated with 130 of Mr. Spence's characteristically humorous subtitles, thirty of which form definite orchestra cues. Other orchestra or piano cues are provided in an unmistakable manner by the action of certain scenes.

Red Cross Film Shows McKey.

In "First Aid on the Piave," the American Red Cross foreign relief film, is pictured the first of the American Red Cross leaders in war work to have paid the supreme sacrifice—Lieutenant Edward M. McKey. He was killed on the Piave while in command of Red Cross Rolling Canteen No. 1. He was serving Italian soldiers as they came out of the trenches at San Bernardi, when a shell of large calibre exploded near him and ended his labors of mercy.

Lieutenant McKey was a young American studying in Paris. When the Italian debacle alarmed Europe, McKey went into service there for the American Red Cross. He wore the Croix de Guerre, a recognition of France for his heroic work on the Marne. The story of this gallant spirit is told to some extent in "First Aid on the Piave," the camera having taken him in his work at its height, and several weeks before he met his death.

What Italy withstood in those memorable days on the Piave and the telling help which was rendered by the American Red Cross is thrillingly unfolded in the many activities shown in the film.

Rothapfel Directs Marines in "Too Fat to Fight"

COUNTING themselves fortunate in obtaining the co-operation of the United States Marine Corps, Rex Beach, as author of "Too Fat to Fight," and S. L. Rothapfel, who directed certain of the trench scenes, took full advantage of the aid offered them. The "soldiers of the sea" responded magnificently under command of Mr. Rothapfel, managing director of New York's Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

"Too Fat to Fight," in which Frank McIntyre is the featured player, and the scenario of which was prepared by Charles A. Logue, is in no material sense a war drama. But it is a patriotic story with thrilling trench scenes in it, and the background of battle is seldom out of the picture. It was in connection with the trench episodes that the help of the Marine Corps was sought. For days the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee, where the production was made, resembled a barracks.

Under the direction of the Marines the trenches had been dug and all the details of the battle scenes rehearsed. They fired at the imaginary Huns with no thought of anything except their complete annihilation. Their yells and jubilant cries drowned the megaphoned directions of Lieutenant Rothapfel, and for a time the boys had things all their own way. Finally they were got under control, and the actual business of the scenes was carried out. Needless to say, the fighting scenes were invaluable and will be seen in their entirety when "Too Fat to Fight" is shown.

Among the Marines who took part were Sergeants M. F. Henderson, William Hickey, William Bird, Walter Burke, L. J. O'Brien and J. Dill.

Rosemary Theby a Triangle Star.

Rosemary Theby, widely known for her work in productions of the Universal and Vitagraph, and for her portrayal in the cast of Griffith's "The Great Love," will make her initial appearance as a Triangle star in "Love's Pay Day," to be released by Triangle December 1.

This romance of a Newfoundland fishing village tells of Judith, the daughter of a fisherman whose selfish desires are overcome by adversity. Finally she awakens to a realization of happiness in the love of an honest man.

In the cast with Miss Theby are Pete Morrison, Billy Dale, Lillian West and many Triangle favorites. The production, which was directed by E. Mason Hopper, with Clyde Cook as the cameraman, is said to picture a number of unusual sea views which were taken along the California coast. It offers Miss Theby every opportunity for the display of her emotional talents.

Pathe Signs Ruth Roland for Fifteen-Part Serial

THE vice-president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., Paul Brunet, announces that a contract has been signed with Ruth Roland for her appearance in a fifteen-episode serial which will be ready for the screen immediately at the conclusion of Pearl White's new serial, "The Lightning Raider." The new serial has been tentatively entitled "The Long Arm," and gives promise of being a record-breaker from every standpoint.

"The Long Arm" was written by Arthur Reeves, of "Craig Kennedy" fame, and Charles Logue. The scenario is by Gilson Willets, who wrote "Hands Up," Miss Roland's most recent Pathe serial.

The story is declared by the Pathe scenario department to be the strongest they have ever accepted and will offer thirty reels of sustained interest and intense climax. It deals with the theft of a tiger idol from a band of natives in Sumatra by three adventurers, and the many attempts of the band to recover the idol furnish the action and coflicting themes of the serial.

Miss Roland, as Belle Boyd, the heroine, will have one of the strongest roles in which she has ever faced the camera, and it will afford her exceptional opportunities to demonstrate her remarkable ability on the screen. The news that Pathe will present Miss Roland in another serial will undoubtedly be enthusiastically received by exhibitors and picture patrons alike, as she has made secure her place as one of the most popular serial stars.

"The Long Arm" will be the sixth Pathe serial in which Ruth Roland has been starred, those previous being "Who Pays?", "The Red Circle," "The Neglected Wife," "The Price of Folly" and "Hands Up." "The Long Arm" will be produced by Astra Film Corporation.

Cowboys Make Up in "The Hell Cat."

Ten cowboys assisted Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat," the entire production of which was made in Wyoming. The play, the diva's second Goldwyn picture, is released December 1.

The cowboys were all native sons of Wyoming and not one had ever left the prairies and mountains of that state. needless to say, the democratic diva, whose keen valuation of people is well known, delighted in the association.

Their magnificent riding in "The Hell Cat" proves them to be real men of the plains to whom the artifices of screen makeup means nothing once they mount their beloved horse.

Vitagraph's Releasing Plan Aims to Aid Exhibitors

THERE is much satisfaction among the executives of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization over the fact that their new Star Series releasing plan, which went into effect on September 30, has proved its elasticity so well in the wake of the receding epidemic.

When it was announced at the beginning of the season that Vitagraph would release, during the course of the year, six series of rotating star features, totaling fifty-two five-reel productions, a serial episode for each week in the year, and, likewise, a two-reel Big "V" Special Comedy each week, it was claimed that from the standpoint of elasticity and accommodation to the individual exhibitor's requirements, the Vitagraph plan had introduced a new era in film merchandising.

Vitagraph states that in the so-called reconstruction period of the industry, following the epidemic shutdown, its releasing plan and policy is proving a big aid to exhibitors in the rebuilding of their business. Despite the shifts and readjustments made necessary throughout almost every branch of the business, with the consequent uncertainty on the part of exhibitors with regard to their booking arrangements, the Vitagraph releasing plans are enabling exhibitors to know exactly what will be available on the Vitagraph program for each week during the entire year.

Vitagraph's weekly program for the year includes three separate and distinct units of service, which, nevertheless, offer in their entirety or in a variation of combinations, a service that the company claims will fit every need of every theatre.

Each week Vitagraph releases a five-part Blue Ribbon Feature. These rotating star features may be booked in their entirety or on the basis of individual Star Series.

Vitagraph's serial service provides a serial-episode for every week in the year, giving exhibitors an unbroken chain of chapter-plays.

There is, in addition, a two-reel comedy service. Each week Vitagraph releases a Big "V" Special Comedy, and it is claimed for them that they have grown into country-wide popularity with amazing rapidity.

With these three units of service, therefore, and with the entire year's program definitely laid out, and the dates of releases given so that exhibitors may know exactly what will be available for the period of the entire twelve months, the reconstruction of the exhibitor's booking arrangements far in advance becomes a simple matter, so far as the Vitagraph program is concerned.

"Retribution" Held Up to Insert Flight of Kaiser

MR. WILLIAM HOHENZOLLERN had hardly reached Holland when mimic scenes depicting these very moments of the Kaiser's downfall were in course of filming for the six-reel feature production, "Retribution." The picture is being made under the direction of George Edwardes-Hall, scenario writer and director.

"Retribution" is a story of mystery and intrigue dealing with the war, revolving around an American girl who pluckily outwits the agents of autocracy. The production had been under way for some time, and was nearing completion when the news of the Kaiser's departure came. The scenario was immediately rewritten, and "Retribution" brought right up to the minute. The photo-feature will be ready for presentation about November 30, and the releasing plans will be announced early in December.

"Retribution" has a noteworthy cast, numbering such well known plays as John Mason, Victor Sutherland, Tefft Johnson, Donald Hall, Stanley Walpole, Peggy Shaw, Helene Hart and Eugenie Lindeman.

The author, who has been connected with both the Continental and American stage, wrote the scenario of "War Brides," Alla Nazimova's first film vehicle; "The Lone Wolf," in which Bert Lytell scored his first screen hit; "Babbling Tongues," "The Iron Hand," the historical production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs"; "The Soul of Broadway," "The Kreutzer Sonata," and many other big film successes.

"Retribution" is being produced under the supervision of George A. Rush. The photography is in the hands of Max Schneider and Walter Blakely.

The picture is said to be marked by a vigorous and interesting melodramatic story of unhalting action, by magnificent sets and excellent playing. Several hundred supernumeraries appear in "Retribution."

Vitagraph's New Serial Meeting with Big Success

WITH the reopening of territory all over the country, Vitagraph's newest serial, "The Iron Test," is sweeping into what is indicated will culminate in a record career, judging from the enthusiastic reports of exhibitors all over the country.

For the past two weeks exhibitors' congratulations have been pouring into the Vitagraph offices, and it appears to be the unanimous opinion of representative exhibitors that the serial will eclipse its predecessors. Exhibitors who have run the previous Vitagraph serials agree that "The Iron Test," which features Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway will, in box-office power, surpass them all.

The serial is the product of the pens of Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, and they have given this serial a radically different turn and twist in theme and treatment than their earlier serials. This novelty of theme has found great favor with exhibitors.

"The Iron Test," is the second of the four-serial-a-year schedule of Vitagraph. Its stars, Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, will make up a permanent combination, alternating with William Duncan, who, on January 27, will be presented in another big fifteen-episode production, "The Man of Might," in which he will be supported by an all-star cast, including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan. This, like the previous Duncan serials, will be directed by the star.

Striking Poster for Martin Johnson.

"The poster plays a vital part in the success or failure of a film," declares one of the officials of the Robertson-Cole Company. "A poster is good or bad, according to its advertising value. It goes without saying that a good poster attracts and that a bad one repels. When we secured the world releasing rights to Martin Johnson's 'Cannibals of the South Seas,' we decided to place our ideas upon posters in operation. We secured the best poster artists in the country. The result is that 'Cannibals of the South Seas' has, to our way of thinking, the most colorful, artistic and atmospheric posters of the year. We didn't merely want a graceful, eye-catching poster. We wanted something in the very spirit of Johnson's adventurous cruise through the South Pacific.

"I think our posters have caught all this. The designs are of tropical greens, yellows and blues. The atmosphere of the South Seas, with its 'azure skies, topaz seas and emerald isles,' is in these posters."

Frank Rembusch Talks About Affiliated's Plans

THE Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, which recently formed a co-operative plan of booking and distributing motion pictures whereby a group of producers and a national circuit of picture theatres are associated in merchandising good pictures on a profit-sharing basis, now have extended the principles of co-operative marketing to every part of buying and selling of pictures. Recently Messrs. Brink, Clark and Cornelius, of Grand Rapids, the prime movers in the Affiliated booking plan, took over a controlling interest in the Mutual Film Corporation and its exchange branches throughout the United States and Canada in order to insure the Affiliated a permanent distributing medium.

C. C. Pettijohn,
General Counsel, Affiliated Distributor's Corporation and Exhibitors' Mutual Distributors' Corporation.

At a meeting held in the home office of Mutual in Chicago, attended by a group of prominent exhibitors from various parts of the country and the new managers of the Mutual, the exhibitors requested that the tie-in between producer and exhibitors be extended so that exhibitors could share in the holdings of Mutual to the extent that exhibitors have a controlling interest in the Mutual exchanges of the United States and a priority franchise on all pictures distributed by Mutual exchanges.

After much deliberation, the Mutual owners agreed to turn over to exhibitors of the United States the controlling interest in Mutual on the same terms and valuation that they took over Mutual, provided that exhibitors are allotted a limited amount of holding in various sections of the country. Under this plan co-operation is complete, because one works for all and all for one. It is claimed great economy in operating expenses and better and more suitable pictures will result with protection against a speculative market. An advisory board of exhibitors is being formed to be extended throughout the country, and completed as soon as possible.

Several prominent producers are arranging to market their product through the Mutual exchanges because of this policy of co-operation with exhibitors. Both producer and exhibitor realize a great saving in the overhead, and elimination of the speculative factors in the film market will result. A plan so attractive and solidly founded cannot fail to be successful.

FRANK REMBUSCH,
Temporary Chairman.

Interstate Reports Big Business.

Interstate Films, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York, which is releasing Ford Educational Weekly for its territory, is now supplying over 500 theatres with this release. The weekly has earned a place in the program of leading theatres because of its quality and the timeliness of its subject matter.

The Standard Film Service Company, 316 Sloan Building, Cleveland, which is handling the release in its territory, has among its users the following week stands: Standard Theatre, Cleveland; Crescent, Cleveland; Grand, Canton; Colonial, Akron; Park, Youngstown.

In Chicago, where the release is handled by the Bee-Hive Exchange, 207 South Wabash avenue, Mr. Weil, manager of the Castle Theatre, praises the excellence of the weekly.

Baby Marie a Climber.

Baby Marie Osborne, when it comes to climbing and second story work, is an infantile Douglas Fairbanks. She gives a remarkable exhibition of her adventurous agility in "Milady o' the Beanstalk," released as a Pathe program feature on December 10. It is to be expected in such a story that she climbs the beanstalk which reaches up into the land of the Fe-fi-fo-fum Giant, who loves broiled small boys for luncheon; but the way this talented kiddie shins up a vertical fire escape evokes admiration at her gymnastics and her courage.

Eighth "Kultur" Comes December 1.

The eighth episode of Pathe's patriotic serial, "Wolves of Kultur," featuring Leah Baird, will be released December 1, and is replete with action, sustained suspense and climatic incident from start to finish. It begins with a thrilling leap from a high cliff into the ocean by the chauffeur of Alice Grayson, the heroine. The chauffeur has been cornered by Carter, the butler of Zaremba, the master spy, and his only means of escape is by leaping into the ocean from the cliff.

A Double Exposure

Showing Harry T. Morey in a Dual Role in a Forthcoming Vitagraph Production.

Tom Moore Plays Cowboy Role.

The admirers of Tom Moore will be surprised when the Goldwyn star takes the center of the screen in his third Star Series release, "Go West, Young Man." Moore's first two Goldwyn pictures, "Just for Tonight" and "Thirty a Week," presented him in roles of a romantic young man in the surroundings of the East, but in "Go West, Young Man," Mr. Moore will greet his audiences as a westerner, fighting to win the girl of his heart, and, incidentally rescue her from the perils which usually befall beautiful girls who live among the good and bad souls of the Far West.

The subject is nearing completion in the Goldwyn studios at Los Angeles. It is a fast-moving play, and the novelty of seeing Tom Moore in cowboy attire may be relied upon to hold the "fans" spellbound with delight.

Gladys Brockwell Resumes Work.

Gladys Brockwell, her enforced influenza vacation being at an end, has begun a new picture at the William Fox studio in Hollywood. The play bears the temporary title of "The Framers," and is founded upon a story written by Charles Van Dyke. In this picture Miss Brockwell is being directed by Lynn Reynolds. The principals in the cast besides Miss Brockwell include William Scott, J. Barney Sherry and Harry Duncanson.

Famous Players-Lasky Reports December Releases

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has compiled its list of new feature releases for December, presenting a most attractive array of box-office attractions. There will be nine Paramount releases next month, five Artcrafts and one Paramount-Artcraft Special, aside from the short subjects and the reissue of the Success Series. Four of the films to be offered in December were produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, who has contributed many Paramount and Artcraft successes during the past year.

The first of the month witnesses the release of "Sporting Life," the picturization by Maurice Tourneur of the Drury Lane melodrama, which has been selected as the third Paramount-Artcraft Special. The same day, "Under the Greenwood Tree," an Artcraft picture, with Elsie Ferguson as star will be released. This is an adaptation by Adrian Gil-Spear of Henry V. Esmond's play in which Maxine Elliott achieved one of her greatest successes. It is directed by Emile Chautard, and contains many charming scenes of real gypsy life. On this date also is released "Fuss and Feathers," a Paramount picture from the Thomas H. Ince studios, starring Enid Bennett. This is an original story by Julien Josephson, and the production was directed by Fred Niblo under Mr. Ince's supervision.

Two noteworthy productions will be released under the Artcraft trademark on December 8. They are the D. W. Griffith production, "The Greatest Thing in Life," Douglas Fairbanks' screen version of "Arizona." The Griffith production, his second for distribution through Artcraft, is especially timely, being a distinctly after-the-war-picture, magnifying the great lesson for American manhood to be drawn from the world conflict. It was personally directed by Mr. Griffith, and the usual sterling cast of Griffith players is featured. The Paramount release for that date is "Too Many Millions," an adaptation by Gardner Hunting of Porter Emerson Browne's story, "Someone and Somebody," in which Wallace Reid is cast in the stellar role. This is the first work of James Cruze as a Paramount director.

In the trio of productions scheduled for December 15, William S. Hart will be presented in his new Artcraft picture, "Branding Broadway," a unique story by C. Gardner Sullivan, in which the Western star, after a reel or more of the typical Hart action of the frontier, transfers his activities to New York City. Mr. Hart himself directed, Thomas H. Ince supervising the production. On the same day will be released Cecil B. DeMille's new version of Edwin Milton Royle's play, "The Squaw Man," which Mr. DeMille made for Artcraft with an all-star cast. Beulah Marie Dix wrote the scenario. The third picture for December 15 release is the John Emerson-Anita Loos Production for Paramount, "Good-bye, Bill," starring Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex.

Charles Ray, the popular Thomas H. Ince star, returns to the Paramount schedule December 22, after an absence of two months, in "String Beans," by Julien Josephson. Victor L. Schertzinger directed under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Another Ince-supervised production is released the same day on the Paramount schedule, namely "Quicksand," starring Dorothy Dalton. The scenario is by R. Cecil Smith, from a story by John Lynch, and was also directed by Mr. Schertzinger. On this day also comes "The Mystery Girl," with Ethel Clayton starring. This is an adaptation by Marion Fairfax of George Barr McCutcheon's story, "Green Fancy," William C. DeMille directing.

Marguerite Clark is starred in "Little Miss Hoover," released on the Paramount schedule December 29. This is a story by Maria Thompson Davies, originally "The Golden Bird," which was scenarioized by Adrian Gil-Spear. John Stuart Robertson directed. Dorothy Gish appears in her second Paramount picture, "The Hope Chest," released on the same date. Elmer Clifton, who produced "Battling Jane," also directed this picture, which is an adaptation of Mark Lee Luther's book by M. M. Stearns. The third release, "The Way of a Man with a Maid," is Bryant Washburn's second Paramount starring vehicle. This comedy is the creation of Ida M. Evans, and was adapted by Edith Kennedy. Donald Crisp was the director.

Bessie Love a Vitagraph Star.

Bessie Love makes her bow as a Vitagraph star in the Blue Ribbon feature, "The Dawn of Understanding," scheduled for release the week of December 2. "The Dawn of Understanding" was produced on the stage by Frohman some years ago under the name of "Sue," and starred Annie Russell. It was adapted from Bret Harte's "The Judgment of Bolinas Plains." In this love story from the pen of the famous delineator of western life and character it is said that Bessie Love has the fullest opportunity to show her talent as a clever comedienne and a dramatic actress. The picture was made in Southern California and out on the Mohave desert. David Smith directed the feature and obtained many striking scenes. He crossed the California-Arizona line and invaded Death Valley in search of true Bret Harte atmosphere, and in this he is said to have been remarkably successful. Miss Love is fortunate also in her first feature in having a cast of unusual balance and strength, including J. Frank Glendon, G. A. Williams, Jack Gilbert, George Kunkle and Jack Abrams.

The story is a quaint romance, colorful of the West in the gold days, of pathos and near tragedy, and relieved by touches of comedy typical of Bret Harte stories. There is action at all times that commands and holds the interest.

Tom Santschi to Support Lewis in Select Picture

ONE of the larger announcements issued by Select Pictures Corporation recently is that this firm has acquired Mitchell Lewis as a series star, and that his first attraction would be "Code of the Yukon." Mitchell Lewis as a Select star needs no second introduction.

The cast for "Code of the Yukon" contains several names that stand out, particularly that of Tom Santschi, while the name of Vivian Rich runs a close second. The comedy end of "Code of the Yukon" is handled by Jack McDonald, familiarly known as Slapjack for his performance of that role in "The Spoilers."

In addition to acting Mr. Santschi is also a director. He commenced his career in stock on the speaking stage and then became a citizen of the film world. Since his debut on the screen he has appeared in such successes as "The Crisis," "Beware of Strangers," "The Garden of Allah," "Who Shall Take My Life?", "The Smoldering Flame," "The Still Alarm" "Little Orphan Annie." He is one of the few actors whose "bigness" on the screen is measured in two counts. Mr. Santschi is big in stature and big in importance. In "Code of the Yukon" Mr. Santschi is seen as Dan Cregan, a worthless being who maintains a dance hall and saloon in one of the mining communities of the North. Cregan is the man for whom Mitchell Lewis, as Jean, has been searching half his life. At last they come together, and the fight is one that should go down in motion picture history.

Vivian Rich's work in the Fox picture, "The Awakening," first brought her attention, and then followed strong performances in "A Branded Soul," "The Bumble Bee" and "The Bull's Eye." Vivian Rich, as Lola Crawford, becomes the wife of Jean in Mr. Lewis' first attraction. It is the sort of human role for which Miss Rich is best adapted, and her accomplished acting furnishes another cog in the wheel that is bound to spell success in this big northwoods production.

Others who have not already been mentioned are Goldie Caldwell, Margaret Landis, Franklyn Hall, William Effee and Arthur Morrison.

"Code of the Yukon," as already announced, is a story of the gold fields, in which there is a strong underlying current of love, pathos and humor. It was written by Anthony Paul Kelly, author of "Safe for Democracy," another picture in which Mitchell Lewis is now appearing, and also "The Cavell Case," the Plunkett and Carroll story of Edith Cavell, in which Julia Arthur is starred. This production was recently acquired by Select as a special and is already being presented at leading theatres throughout the country.

Much Publicity for "Infatuation."

When Pathe's big feature, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, is released on December 1, exhibitors who book this picture will have at their disposal, through Pathe branch offices, every practicable method for exploiting both star and feature.

One of the most comprehensive campaign books ever issued by Pathe has been prepared by the exploitation department. It covers a wide and varied field of publicity and advertising hints. The pictorial possibilities with this star are exceptionally fine, as there are many photographs and cuts of Miss Deslys wearing the gowns and millinery creations for which she is world-famous. In addition, Pathe has prepared a series of hand-colored show frames which may be secured from the branches at a nominal rate.

Norma Talmadge Finishes "The Heart of Wetona"

NORMA TALMADGE'S forthcoming Select picture, "The Heart of Wetona," a screen version of the famous David Belasco success, is finished, and Miss Talmadge has returned to New York with her company, including Director Sidney A. Franklin, Thomas Meighan, her leading man; Gladden James and others.

But there were times during the star's work at Idyllwild when it looked as though the snow would come and go before the picture was finished. Miss Talmadge is glad to get back home, while Director Franklin and the members of her company are entertaining their friends with blood-chilling stories of their experience in the West.

According to all reports—and there are vital statistics from the coroner's office to prove it—there were wild times at Idyllwild, an Indian reservation 6,000 feet above sea level. Chief Darkcloud, who was scheduled to play Quannah in this delightful Indian story, succumbed to the ravages of Spanish influenza. Darkcloud was the ideal type for the character, and it took several days to locate another redskin who could play the part. But at last they found one, a stalwart buck with a spine as straight as Hiawatha's arrow, and, after a deal of coaxing and prompting, he managed to get through the difficult part in a manner that called forth praise.

Another calamity occurred when the big corn dance scene was staged. The weather was so hot when the scene was put on that Miss Talmadge almost fainted, but she rallied her nerve and kept on the job. Later in the day, during a sensational ox chase, one of the Indian's horses stumbled, piling ten horses and as many redskins in a heap. Five of the Indians were seriously injured, and one was so severely cut that only Miss Talmadge's presence of mind and knowledge of bandaging kept him from bleeding to death.

Miss Talmadge went west with the avowed purpose of making "The Heart of Wetona" the best thing she has ever done, and although it will be several days before a print can be seen the stills on hand provide evidence that the screen story of David Belasco's famous stage play is all that Miss Talmadge desired it to be.

"The Far Flung Battle Line."

A deeply impressive conception of the scope and immensity of the great war, with its herculean tasks, is given by No. 23 of the Official War Review released by Pathe December 2 and called "The Far Flung Battle Line of the Allies." It shows how, from the Persian gulf to the English Channel, on desert sands and amid Alpine snows, the armies of democracy waged the fight for humanity. And, strangest of all, it seems the fight has taken the din and tragedy of the war not only into the most sacred shrines of humanity, but up to the very portals of the Garden of Eden, the birthplace of all the nations of men; for the camera shows the British gunboats on the Tigris, near the Biblical spot, bombarding the dogged Turk.

Independent Company to Direct Film Salesmen

CONFINING all of its activities to the actual booking of productions and operating as a separate and distinct unit from all producing companies and exchange organizations, a company which promises to attract attention in film circles has been formed under the name of Independent Sales Corporation.

As the name indicates, the problem of sales will occupy the whole attention of the new concern. From its headquarters in New York City it will direct the activities of film salesmen in every territory in the United States and Canada, and any producing company or group of producers may arrange with the Independent to book its pictures.

It is the idea of the incorporators that by specializing on sales they can overcome many of the handicaps now met by salesmen affiliated with regulation exchanges. Their system has been worked out with the idea in mind of making each picture, each series of star productions or each studio they represent stand upon its own bottom. They appreciate the advantage to producers of being in a position to check up their sales force reports with their exchange reports, each being a separate unit, and to make changes in their selling arrangements without disturbing the bookings already listed or without being forced to withdraw prints from one set of exchanges to place them in another with the attendant loss which accompanies such readjustments.

The principal advantage, however, the incorporators see in the fact that separate groups of salesmen will be detailed to give all of their attention to each set of productions placed with Independent Sales Corporation for booking.

Harry F. Mollenhauer, a director and officer of a number of sugar refineries, appears as one of the directors; G. Trowbridge Hollister, of Hollister & Barnes, bankers and brokers, is another, while Frank G. Hall and William M. Seabury are officers of the company.

Arrangements have already been completed by Independent Sales Corporation whereby it will maintain headquarters for its salesmen in every section of the country, with its main offices at 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City. It has taken advantage of the establishment of the new system of exchanges called Film Clearing Houses, concerned only in the physical distribution of productions, to begin operations immediately.

When Miller Lost 7,000 Extras.

The declaration of peace and the consequent halting of the draft deprived one director of some seven thousand members of his cast. Ashley Miller, who is producer and director of "Made in America," is staging this patriotic series of eight one-reel pictures at one of the large cantonments in the East. Advised of the expected arrival of seven thousand draftees, Mr. Miller and his entire staff were at the depot, camera set up and all ready for the arrival of the raw material that a few months' military education would transform into trained soldiers.

But the train never arrived. Before reaching the station it was side-tracked and sent back, and every man returned to his local board. However, Miller succeeded in getting together all the new arrivals of the few preceding days and the scenes were staged.

"Made in America" is being produced with the co-operation of the Government through the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is publishing and distributing the picture, which will be released one reel each week for eight weeks. Each reel is complete in itself.

December a Busy Month for William Fox Offices

DECEMBER promises to be one of the busiest months of the season in the William Fox offices, so far as releasing of new pictures is concerned—ten pictures being scheduled. Divided according to their brands, there will be one William Fox Big Timely Picture, three Standard Pictures, two Victory Pictures, three Excel Pictures and one of the Great Nine, past successes which are being reissued by Mr. Fox.

The Big Timely Picture on the December schedule is "18 to 45," R. A. Walsh's masterpiece. This play, starring Charlotte Walker, is said to tell a powerful story of an American mother's sacrifice in the Great War. The play has a large and capable cast, and has been staged in a lavish manner.

In the Standard Pictures group the first picture to be released is "The She-Devil," written by Neje Hopkins and staged by J. Gordon Edwards. It tells the story of a Spanish coquette who plays hob with the hearts of a Spanish brigand and a Parisian artist.

"I Want to Forget," second in the series of pictures which Evelyn Nesbit is producing for William Fox, is another Standard release set for December. This picture was directed by James Kirkwood.

Another of William Farnum's de luxe productions is set for December. This is "The Man Hunter." Several powerful scenes on shipboard during a storm at sea mark this film, which also contain no fewer than three big fights.

"The Strange Woman," starring Gladys Brockwell, has been heralded as one of Miss Brockwell's best. It is a picturization of the Broadway stage success of the same name.

"I'll Say So!" is George Walsh's release for December. This also is a Victory Picture, and in it the agile George performs some of his most amazing athletic stunts.

One of the best known novels written by the late Justus Miles Forman furnishes the story of "Buchanan's Wife," the Excel Picture in which Virginia Pearson will be featured. Charles J. Brabin directed the play.

Peggy Hyland will be seen in "Caught in the Act," a rapid-fire farce-comedy adapted from a magazine story, written by Fred Jackson.

The first Excel Picture starring Madlaine Traverse will be "The Danger Zone," the story of which was written by Marshall Bruce Beanington and the scenario by Dennison Clift. The picture was directed by Frank Beal.

The first of the Great Nine will be "Fighting Blood," the de luxe production in which William Farnum achieved one of his triumphs.

Viola Dana Has Big Cast in "Oh, Annice!"

A cast of favorites will surround Viola Dana in her forthcoming Metro production, "Oh, Annice!", picturized from Alexine Heyland's two-part novel, which appeared originally in the Woman's Home Companion. There are practically two leading men in "Oh, Annice!", the interest being about equally divided between young Vance Dunton, played by John McGowan, and the "uncle," who is only a few months older than himself, Michael Darcy, played by William B. Davidson.

Howard Hall plays Annice's father, Dr. Paish, Elsie MacLeod has the part of Annice's girl chum; the part of Robert Cord, the detective, is played by Fred Jones.

Franklyn Hanna plays "the other Michiel"—Michael Connors—who finally succeeds in clearing up the mystery, after having badly complicated matters without the slightest intention of doing so. Ed. Mack, Julia Hurley and George Dowling have parts of interest. This photodrama was directed and adapted by John H. Collins, being the last completed work by him before his death.

Dodge Talks to Chicagoans.

Henry Irving Dodge, author of the story, the "Yellow Dog," appeared recently in Chicago and delivered addresses to big crowds in three theatres which were showing the film version of his story. The Jewel production proved a big drawing card on its own merits, and the added attraction of Mr. Dodge's appearance provided altogether a fine entertainment. The theatres in question were the Twentieth Century, Boulevard and the Marshal Square.

"Made in America" Shows How Soldiers Are Trained

THE story of an American mother's two boys—all she had to give—who were drafted, trained and taught to fight to safeguard their civilization and all they held dear, tied together with a golden thread of a romantic love story, is a brief resume of "Made in America," an eight-reel series that will be released shortly by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc. This photoplay was produced with the co-operation of the Government, through the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

"Made in America" is what may be truthfully termed an unusual picture. It starts from the bottom of military training, taking those who view it, step by step, from the period of isolation to the day when the Medal of Honor is pinned upon the hero's breast in a base hospital "somewhere in France." It tells adequately the story that every American wants to know—how "your boy and my boy" were treated at camp and how they were developed into most resourceful warriors.

How the physical, mental and psychological tests were made; how the man was literally taken into the bosom of his officers and put at the task for which he was best fitted; how he was taught the manual of arms is depicted. The picture contains a powerful object lesson and shows clearly that the will to win promotion is satisfied if the individual will only work.

Ashley Miller, the producer and director of "Made in America," lived the life of a soldier to get the real military atmosphere that he was after to bring camp life home to American fathers and mothers.

"Made in America" will be preserved by the Government because of its historical value.

"Her Great Chance" Is a Different Brady Picture

SOMETHING different must have been Charles Maigne's watchword when he directed Alice Brady in "Her Great Chance." The picture is based on Fannie Hurst's novel, "Golden Fleece," from which Mr. Maigne adapted the scenario. Alice Brady is undeniably seen at her best.

"Her Great Chance" is a story based on the life of a clever young saleswoman in one of New York's big department stores. Miss Brady assumes the role of Lola, the shop girl. The leading man is David Powell, who will be remembered for his excellent work as Michael Thwaite in Miss Brady's "The Better Half."

In writing this role Mr. Maigne made good use of his experience as a motion picture expert, having carefully eliminated any suggestion of the "villain." Likewise, melodrama and death scenes are conspicuous by their absence. Mr. Maigne makes his debut as a director, and has, as well, written all of the titles and supervised the assembling.

Shows "Britain's Battling Bulldogs."

News describing the surrender of the great German battle fleet, which has been hiding at Wilhelmshaven, to the Allies, is declared by the Universal to throw particular interest upon the current episode of the serial, "Fighting for Freedom." The episode is the seventh of the series, and is entitled "Britain's Battling Bulldogs."

The chapter gives a complete review of the British navy, with particular attention to the huge dreadnoughts that conquered the German fleet on the famous occasion of their sally off the Skagerrak. The film shows the British fleet operating in battle order.

Locey to Have Goldwyn Week.

Another "Goldwyn Week"—and this time it will be held in Howell, Mich. Vernon Locey, proprietor of the Temple Theatre, Howell, has arranged to play seven Goldwyn first-year releases and seven Capitol comedies, starring "Smiling Bill" Parsons, beginning December 25 and ending January 1. Mr. Locey is determined to make his holiday business an event to be remembered.

Mr. Locey has announced his intention of using extra big space in two Howell newspapers to announce the list of Goldwyn attractions. Despite the fact that Howell has a population of only 2,000, Mr. Locey employs big-city advertising methods and is known among the trade as one of the most careful and intelligent users of space.

Call for "Mothers of France."

Quite some time ago World Pictures released on its program a feature entitled "Mothers of France," in which Sarah Bernhardt was the star. It not alone made a lot of money for World Pictures, but also for the exhibitors throughout the country. During the past week, that is, since the beginning of the armistice, renewed interest has been shown by the exhibitors for this picture. The reports that are coming into the World Film offices disclose that it has taken on a new lease of life; so much so that it promises as many bookings as it had when originally released.

Mexican Fiesta Shown in Metro Picture.

An irresistible combination of attractive features adds to the interest of Bert Lytell's coming Metro production, "Hitting the High Spots," written by himself and directed by Charles Swickard. A gay Mexican fiesta is shown in full progress, and this colorful scene furnishes the opportunity for a display of the star's remarkable athletic skill.

Fox Film for War Service.

"The Rainbow Trail," William Farnum's picturization of Zane Grey's novel of the same name, is listed on the War Service Bulletin of the War and Navy Departments' Commission on Training Camp Activities as having been selected for exhibition before Uncle Sam's soldiers and sailors. Another Fox picture on the schedule is "Bulling the Bolsheviki," a Mutt and Jeff Animated cartoon.

Every great man has his double. You will agree that the above likeness of Captain Joseph Morrison could easily be mistaken for Marshal Foch, commander of the Allied armies in Europe. This picture was taken from a scene in Goldwyn's all-star Liberty Loan contribution in which Captain Morrison impersonated the famous French commander.

General Pershing Sees "The Land of the Free"

IT has been given to only one man in the world to see his life portrayed before him on a motion picture screen. That man is General John J. Pershing, who, advices from Paris state, saw "The Land of the Free," the William Fox photoplay, based on Pershing's life a few days after the signing of the armistice. General Pershing, it is said, was greatly pleased with the film.

The American commander saw the film in a Y. M. C. A. hut near his headquarters. The entertainment was made a gala occasion, several French generals and their staffs also being in attendance. The glee club, formed among the members of the headquarters detachment, sang several selections and a brief speech explaining the nature of the film and the great care taken in its production by the Fox Film Corporation was made by a Y. M. C. A. official.

Several prints of "The Land of the Free," which has been described as "an epic of American opportunity and American pluck," are being used by the Y. M. C. A. for exhibition to the soldiers under General Pershing. In addition the picture is being shown in practically every camp and cantonment in this country.

Exhibitors Quick to Seek Film of Chaplin's Bride

EIGHTEEN out of twenty-five big film playhouses on Broadway, New York, made quick contracts last week for bookings of "Borrowed Clothes," the Jewel production featuring Mrs. Charlie Chaplin. This is the announcent issued by Jewel in connection with a general statement of the enormous demand wrought all over the country for films featuring Mrs. Chaplin since the announcement a short time ago of her wedding.

When she was just Miss Mildred Harris the young woman possessed great appeal on her own account, but her marriage to the greatest film comedian in the world made the bride a drawing card of the first magnitude.

In New York particularly the exhibitors were quick to see the advantage in booking a picture of the bride. Jewel Productions meantime conformed to the popular demand by changing the young star's name for all advertising purposes to that of Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

The notice was none too quick for the exhibitors. Many in New York and elsewhere had already prepared special signs and posters proclaiming the star under her new name.

Lloyd Finishes "For Freedom."

Before leaving for Los Angeles last week Director Frank Lloyd put the final touches on William Farnum's "For Freedom," which contains numerous examples of his skill in weaving little incidents of humor or pathos into the fabric of a drama.

"Most scripts," said Mr. Lloyd, in talking of his methods, "devote themselves wholly to the main plot of the story, so that it devolves entirely upon the director to introduce 'business' into a production. Unless a director is extremely careful and watchful he is likely to make his production without putting this incidental stuff into the film. This is especially true if the director adheres religiously to the script. I have found that by planning by 'business' before beginning the film I can arrange it is that it works into the story much better than if I made up my business as the occasion arose."

Universal Brings East Great Romantic Drama

DOROTHY PHILLIPS, star of Universal Special Attractions, with Allen Holubar, her director, and Frank J. Lawrence, were expected to arrive in New York this week bringing a complete print of Miss Phillips' latest picture. The film has been the subject of discussion on the coast for some time. The filming required seven months.

The Universal arranged to have the picture exhibited at a special showing before officials of the company and others concerned. Later it is planned to put the subject on for a premiere at the Broadway Theatre.

The title has not yet been selected, but in the general discussion concerning it the picture is described as a great romantic production, with an interweaving of war as a background. The love theme is said to predominate throughout. The print brought from the coast measures twelve reels. This will be cut down to ten reels or slightly less.

Jewel officials have begun to arrange for the distribution. They expect to make the production their chief offering for several months, and to conduct a great campaign of exploitation.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, witnessed fifteen reels of the picture before it was cut and edited to its present form on the coast recently. He declared that it was without exception the greatest production he had ever witnessed.

In connection with the announcement of the Phillips picture, Universal has issued notice that it will confine its production operations hereafter to the making of Special Attractions. Several stars previously featured in Bluebird pictures have been transferred from that list to Special Attractions.

The complete list of stars in this group is now Priscilla Dean, Mary MacLaren, Monroe Salisbury, Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Dorothy Phillips and Carmel Myers.

Some of the pending specials are "Vanity Pool," featuring Mary MacLaren; "The Wildcat of Paris," featuring Priscilla Dean; "Danger, Go Slow," featuring Mae Murray, and "Roped," featuring Harry Carey.

The release dates of "The Wildcat of Paris" and "Danger, Go Slow," have been changed to put the latter out on December 16 and the first named on December 30.

Karger Evolves New Plan to Introduce Characters

A NOVELTY in screen introductions has been evolved for Emmy Wehlen's forthcoming Metro feature photodrama, "Sylvia on a Spree," by Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., productions. Mr. Karger has long been dissatisfied with the slowness with which many stories of the screen get under way. He believes that the introduction of the characters by lengthy descriptive subtitles tends to weary the spectator and lessen his interest in the picture from the start.

In this next Wehlen feature, Mr. Karger will present his characters not by talk but by action. A "flash" may tell the name of the person, but the explanation will be supplied more by deeds than by words. People will be shown in characteristic actions. One member of the dramatis personae mentions another in a brief speech; for instance, the young heroine, Sylvia. Without further parley, she is there, her own charming self, ready for a drive, and by the kind intervention of Fate, just about to meet "the" man, Jack Bradley. The principal persons of the play are made known to the audience without further ado, and "They're off!" The story is begun without interruptions, "flash-backs," or "visions," and there is nothing to clog the wheels of the action after the picture has got to "going strong."

Written by E. Forst and scenarioized by June Mathis, "Sylvia on a Spree" has been directed by Harry L. Franklin and produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Karger. Sylvia is played by Miss Wehlen. W. I. Percival plays Jack Bradley, and the cast of players includes Frank Currier, Eugene Acker, Rose Wood, Bliss Milford, Beatrice Morgan, Peggy Parr and Isabel O'Madigan.

Fanny Cogan Portrays Mother of Ex-Kaiser.

Fanny Cogan will play the important part of the Empress Victoria, mother of the ex-Kaiser, in the coming Screen Classics, Inc., superfeature, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns." Miss Cogan is a well known player of "mother" parts of a stately bearing, especially appropriate to the part for which she has been chosen by Director Charles Miller in the new productions. She has played in several Metro productions.

"The Great Victory" is a seven-act superfeature written by Maxwell Karger, scenarioized by June Mathis and A. S. Le Vino and produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Karger. Against a background of world events of historical importance, it presents an absorbing romance and is a worthy successor to the former Screen Classics, Inc., offering, "To Hell with the Kaiser."

"18 to 45" Changes to "Every Mother's Son"

THE secret is out. The big production upon which R. A. Walsh has been working for the last five months is "Every Mother's Son." It is a powerful story of human hearts and reconstruction and will be released by William Fox, December 8.

It is understood that it was William Fox's intention to show "Every Mother's Son" as a special road attraction. The influenza epidemic, however, interfered with this plan, so that now Mr. Fox has decided to release the production as one of his series of Big Timely Pictures, putting the subject on an independent booking basis and making it available to all exhibitors immediately.

The title of "18 to 45," by which the picture heretofore has been known, was only temporary, and was adopted and advertised merely as a protection to the producer, it is stated. This was done because the opening scenes of the picture deal with the great draft, its justice and its effect on every American home. "Every Mother's Son," however, is not a war play, it is announced, but deals chiefly with the tremendous sacrifice of American mothers and with the great economic and social problems which will arise during the period of reconstruction.

Director Walsh has been working on the picture for five months. The opening days of the big draft found the picture completed and arrangements were all made for its showing as a special attraction. During the non-release period, however, developments in the war situation were such that it was deemed advisable to make certain changes in details. Mr. Walsh had several conferences with Government officials in Washington, and it is reported that some of the reconstruction scenes are based on data which he obtained from Government sources.

Some of the most powerful scenes in the picture have to do with the war's after-effects on American life—the problems of business and industrial changes, social readjustment, employment questions and the realignment being handled in a way that is expected to make the picture one of extraordinary timeliness.

The cast is headed by Charlotte Walker. Exceptional publicity and advertising campaigns have been prepared.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Latest Tourneur Production on State Right Basis

DEFINITE decision to release his latest production, "Woman," on the open market has been made by Maurice Tourneur. Tom Moore has purchased Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and District of Columbia rights and arranged to open his million dollar theatre, the Rialto, in Washington, early in the new year, with this production.

Tourneur has just completed his visualization of the late Jacques Futrelle's mystery romance, "My Lady's Garter," and departed for the Coast, accompanied by his executive and studio staff, numbering sixteen, to take over a portion of the big Triangle studios at Culver City, Cal., where he will film his next three productions, which will be made during the coming winter.

The decision to release "Woman," as well as his third production, "My Lady's Garter," in the open market is said to have been reached because Mr. Tourneur believes these productions require special and individual handling "Woman" is one of the unique productions of the cinema field. The production scored a hit at the New York Rivoli Theatre.

Following upon this decision, Hiller & Wilk, Inc., the selling agents of Maurice Tourneur Productions, announce they have also disposed of the New England territory to George A. Dodge, who is organizing the Paragon Pictures of Massachusetts. The sale of the territory is another link in an open releasing system for Tourneur productions.

Mr. Tourneur took the negative of "My Lady's Garter" with him when he left for the Coast this week. He will personally supervise the cutting and assembling of this production, which will shortly be ready for release.

Arrow Closes Another Big Deal.

The Arrow Film Corporation announces closing of contracts under its consolidated plan of distribution with the International Film Corporation of Denver, which call for the delivery of two productions a month for Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

The attractions consist of "Her Aviator," "The Perfect Model," a reissue of "Inspiration," "My Husband's Friend," a reissue of "The House of Mirrors," "The Woman's Law," "The Sunset Princess," "The Web of Intrigue," "The Fire of Hope," "Human Shuttles" and "The Shadow of Fear." The last four are reissues starring May Allison and Harold Lockwood.

The International Film Corporation is under the management of C. John Predari, formerly general manager of the La France Feature Film Company, of Denver. Mr. Predari will shortly open an office at Salt Lake City, and will specialize in feature attractions.

"Birth" Sold for Several States.

Samuel Cummins, of Washington, has purchased another block of territory on the motion picture "Birth," from the Eugenic Film Company. The new territory is as follows: South Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Arkansas, Mississippi. Mr. Cummins already controls the rights on this subject for Delaware, Maryland, Washington, D. C., Virginia and North Carolina. This picture will be sent through the territory as a road show.

Madame Alice Blache to Make "Peace" Film

MADAME ALICE BLACHE, the well-known French picture directress who at the present time is engaged in filming an as yet unnamed productions under the supervision of Leonce Perret, featuring Dolores Cassinelli and Albert Roscoe, is also, when not at work in the studio, preparing the scenario for a symbolic production on the theme of "Peace."

Says Madame Blache: "For weeks, I have jotted down every beautiful thought, and hope to be able to create a picture visualizing my conception of peace, of happiness and beauty as expressed in the one word "Peace." The moment peace is finally signed, I want to cross the ocean and take pictures in France, to visualize the rebuilding of France with the aid of America, to picture the transformation of the ruins of Rheims and Ypres and other war-ridden districts into prosperous cities, to show how the barren ground filled with shell holes where not a tree or a blade of grass has grown for the last three years will be transformed by the peasants into a rich beautiful agricultural district.

It is announced that the preliminary work for this production will be made in this country, and that several American film players, who have as yet not been selected, will appear in prominent roles.

H. L. Dollman Visits New York.

Among the out-of-town film men who visited New York during the past week was H. L. Dollman, of the Doll-Van Feature Company, Indianapolis. Mr. Dollman witnessed the screening of a number of independent productions and announces the purchase of Illinois rights on "Wives of Men" and Indiana and Illinois rights on "The Still Alarm." Both of these feature pictures are distributed by the Pioneer Film Corporation. Mr. Dollman is also negotiating for the purchase of rights to other productions for his territory.

Paragon Pictures, Inc., Formed in New England

PARAGON PICTURES, Incorporated, is the title of the newest concern to enter the independent field in the New England States, and it is announced that they will distribute only big pictures of real box-office value. The executives of the company consist of George A. Dodge, president; Stanley W. Hand, vice-president and general manager, and Hovey Dodge, secretary and treasurer.

All of these gentlemen are well known throughout New England. George A. Dodge conceived and built Paragon Park, at Nantasket Beach, also the Georgian, at Boston, and Pemberton Inn and Hotel Pemberton, at Hull, Mass, while Stanley W. Hand was formerly affiliated with World and Pathe exchanges, which he served in important executive capacities in Cincinnati, New York and Boston. Hovey Dodge, for the past two years has been sales representative for Pathe in New England.

The office manager of the new concern, whose exchange and general offices are located at 16 Piedmont street, Boston, is E. E. Weakley, of Pathe's Boston office, while his chief assistant is Miss Dorothy Pearlman, also formerly of Pathe.

Messrs. Dodge and Hand announce that they intend to cover New England in the interests of the company, maintaining close relationship between the company and exhibitors carrying out the policies of Mr. Hand, who is known as "Billy Sunday Hand."

The first pictures announced by this company are "Stolen Orders," William A. Brady's big spectacle, which they will release December 1, and Carmen of the Klondike, the Selexart picture distributed by S. A. Lynch Enterprises, which they will offer to New England exhibitors on November 20. Negotiations are also under way for the purchase of additional feature productions for this territory.

More Sales Announced for "Mickey."

The rights to "Mickey" for the New England territory have been bought by the Boston Photoplay Company, and this feature has been sold for Wisconsin to Wisconsin Film Company, of Milwaukee, also to First National Exhibitors' Circuit of New Jersey, for New Jersey.

On November 18, "Mickey" was shown for the first time at the Regent Theatre, Paterson, N. J. In spite of unfavorable, rainy weather, the Regent is said to have done the biggest business in its history. The theatre was filled to capacity all day, and "Mickey" was shown to over eight thousand people. According to the W. H. Productions announcement this is a record that not even Chaplin productions have equaled.

Parsons Shows How He Wins 'Em.

Can live, snappy, up-to-date salesmanship methods be applied to winning the girl you want? "Smiling Bill" Parsons thinks they can, and he shows how any man can do it in his newest Capitol comedy, "Proposing Bill."

The scheme he employs with the girl who turned him down flat is just the sort of scheme that a really hustling and ingenious salesman might use to win over an unwilling prospect in business. "Smiling Bill" can speak with authority on that subject, because he knows something about salesmanship.

In "Proposing Bill," he enacts the part of an ultra-susceptible but exceedingly amiable chap who kisses every pretty girl he meets within one minute and 59 seconds from the time of the introduction.

Selig Polyscope Sells All Tom Mix Negatives

EXCLUSIVE Features, Incorporated, located at 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, announced that they have purchased outright from the Selig Polyscope Company all negatives for the comedy-dramas in which Tom Mix appeared for this company. The first release will be "Twisted Trails," which will be followed throughout the series by two-reel productions issued at regular intervals.

An official of Exclusive states in connection with this deal: "Tom Mix is the last of those picturesque riders of the range who formerly were so necessary a part of the atmosphere of the great West. The cowboy of tradition has gradually disappeared, or so changed that he is hardly recognized in the modern product. No longer is it considered necessary to outride the daring Arab to handle a herd of cattle. Instead, the workaday overalls and omnipresent flivver have usurped their place. Tom Mix is one of the few of the band who swears by his horse and leather chaps. No one is better able to portray the real Western character familiar to romance. He is not merely an actor, but has worked for years on a range. When quite young he roamed the Canadian northwest as one of the mounted police, and later in the United States Army served in the Philippines. The result of his experiences is fully realized in his screen work. He brings the breath of the prairie and the virility of the soldier and puts his own unique screen personality into it all.

Aviator in Rapf Film Later Killed by Fall

A FEW days after he had completed a series of daring stunts for the Harry Rapf photoplay "Wanted for Murder," Allen Adams, a U. S. Army air pilot, was killed at Central Park, L. I., when his plane, became unmanagable. Some of the feats which he performed are said to be of the hair-raising order, and he was warmly complimented by Mr. Rapf and Director Frank Crane.

Elaine Hammerstein is featured in this production, which is described as dealing with an international theme, semi-military in character, but by no means propaganda. One of its chief aims is to depict the close friendship existing between the soldiers of the United States and France.

About five hundred American soldiers appear in the picture. They were filmed at the time when Irene Franklin and Burton Green were duplicating the entertainment they gave for the boys in the trenches. It is announced that the names of these boys with their home address have been procured and will be supplied to exhibitors for local publicity purposes. Aside from this feature the story is said to be a timely one, and Mr. Rapf is satisfied he has a sure fire success that will be a money-getter wherever shown.

Argosy Feature at Broadway Week of December 1

THE first public showing of the Argosy Film Corporation's timely production, "After the War," which was scheduled for the week of November 25 at Broadway Theatre, New York, has been postponed for a week. This was brought about by a conference between M. H. Hoffman, sales manager of Argosy, and M. A. Kashim, manager of the Broadway, so as to allow more time in which to conduct an advance advertising and billposting campaign in connection with this picture, and also to enable the Broadway to prepare for special effects in connection with the presentation.

As its name implies, this feature deals with events of the future, that is, some years ahead, and only refers back to occurrences during the great war. Grace Cunard is the star, while Joseph DeGrasse directed the production. Miss Cunard is well known for her work in many screen productions, especially in serials. The remainder of the characters in the picture are all portrayed by players of note, including Gertrude Aster, L. M. Wells, Harry Carter, Herbert Pryor, Edward Cecil, Dora Rogers and Gretchen Lederer. The story is the work of Kingsley Benedict.

This production is being released on state rights basis, and the Argosy Film Corporation announces that practically every conceivable form of paper can be secured for effectively advertising the feature, including regular sizes, one, three, six and twenty-four sheets, special lobby displays, heralds, window cards, cuts and mats; the twenty-four sheet being especially striking.

While dealing with the brutality of the Huns, this is not a picture of battlefields; in fact, only a small group of soldiers are shown at any one time, and the only shot fired is when the German ambassador is killed.

Dalton Issues Statement on "Beyond the Law"

FOLLOWING the announcement in our last issue that the first production of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, "Beyond the Law," is ready for release, the public premiere for the trade and press was held on Tuesday, November 26, at Wurlitzer Hall, New York. Some days preceding this showing, however, a private presentation was arranged for the officials of the company, at which there was considerable favorable comment, the officials expressing themselves as well satisfied with the work of Emmett Dalton, who not only appeared in the leading role, but also supervised the production under the direction of Theodore Marsten.

Emmett Dalton.

This picture, originally made in eight reels, has been cut to six, which has the effect of quickening the action and suspense. In connection with this production, Mr. Dalton states: "The motion picture industry has been flooded with pictures advertised as typical western features, and the public has come to regard the West in a light entirely foreign to its actual self. I have lived in the great West all of my life, and have roamed its prairies for years, so that it has become a part of my life. "Beyond the Law," which I wrote, is an accurate account of western life, and depicts something real and typical of western life. Exhibitors and state rights buyers can expect a western production which is perfect in every detail."

New State Right Company Operating in the South

THE Southeastern Pictures Corporation, lately organized, has engaged extensive quarters at 61 Walton street, Atlanta, operating an independent exchange for the Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina and Mississippi.

A. C. Bromberg, vice president and general manager, is known throughout the southern territory as one of the first exchange managers in the South. Mr. Bromberg's connection with the industry dates back eleven years, and his acquaintance with exhibitors is also built upon his active connection with the industry as an exhibitor, having built and operated the Strand Theatre, Birmingham. Later he became an exchange manager for Triangle, then Mutual, General Film and Consolidated Film Supply Company, Atlanta.

However, before his connection with General Film, Mr. Bromberg was engaged in the independent field.

Mr. Bromberg has also made a study of the technical end of production, in addition to which he took a course in publicity and advertising, and he has often been called upon by exhibitors to adjust obstacles in the management of their houses, and in several instances has taken over the management of theatres for a brief period.

Mr. A. Samuels, president of the Southwestern Pictures Corporation, is the owner of a chain of theatres in Georgia, controlling three houses in Atlanta, five in Macon, one in Valdosta, one in Griffin and one in Newnan, with a total seating capacity of over nine thousand.

The Southwestern Pictures Corporation have constituted the Arrow Film Corporation, their exclusive buying representative, and through the Arrow Film Corporation have made their initial purchases of a number of attractions listed in our last issue, and, in addition, Messrs. Romberg and Samuels, who have been in New York for the past week, have secured "The Woman's Law" and also procured from the W. H. Productions thirty (30) two-reel reissues of the Kay Bee productions and the single-reel "Keystone," "Arbuckle" and "Chaplin" reissues from W. H. Productions.

Mr. Bromberg stated: "Mr. Samuels and myself do not intend to do anything else but serve exhibitors with the best that can be secured, and to conduct an independent exchange that will do more than book a picture. We hope to be of real help and assistance to exhibitors in the six southern states."

Messrs. Bromberg and Samuels will continue to be in the market for attractions, and request that all subjects be presented to their New York buying representatives.

Unique Trade Showing for "The Spreading Evil"

THE recent pre-release showing of James Keane's production, "The Spreading Evil," which is described as a social uplift picture, created considerable attention. A novelty in connection with this presentation, which was for the press and trade generally, was that the audience was not left in doubt regarding the nature and class of the picture they were to see, for upon entering the lobby an elaborate display of posters and other advertising matter were arranged on the walls, dealing comprehensively with the subject.

An attractive twenty-four-sheet was hung on the left wall of the foyer, while two styles of six-sheets decorated another wall, and in between were one and three-sheets, all being excellent examples of high-class work. In addition there was an oil painting of Honorable Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, and James Keane, producer of "The Spreading Evil." Mr. Daniels is seen congratulating Mr. Keane upon his picture, upon which occasion he presented Mr. Keane with a strong letter of indorsement. This letter, togteher with some twenty odd other equally warm letters of indorsement from representatives and senators, were in a large frame and created a great deal of attention.

In addition there were about a dozen oil-painted enlargements of well chosen scenes from the picture, which in themselves outlined the plot. Mr. Keane announces that already he is in receipt of numerous inquiries regarding the production.

"Stolen Orders" Selling Fast.

William A. Brady announces the signing of contract with Paragon Pictures, Inc., for New England rights to "Stolen Orders." The Southwestern Film Company has also secured rights to this production for Louisiana and Mississippi, in addition to the states of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, which they already control. Louisiana and Mississippi will be served from the Dallas office of the Southwestern, located at 1911½ Commerce street. Paragon Pictures are said to be planning an extensive campaign on this production throughout the New England states.

It is said that this production, interpreted by the four stars, Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love and June Elvidge, together with many others, has shown a remarkable box office value wherever presented.

"The Kaiser's Finish" A Timely Production

ATTENTION is called by A. Warner, sales agent of the eight-reel feature production, "The Kaiser's Finish," to the excellent business enjoyed by this picture since the signing of the armistice with Germany. Says Mr. Warner: "It is an apt illustration of the value of a timely production and the support which can be expected from the public when an exhibitor visualizes for his patrons the subjects holding the uppermost place in their minds. The comments of the exhibitors who have played the picture during the last week are complimentary beyond our most sanguine expectations. It has played to capacity wherever shown, and theatres in which it was booked for two or three days have extended their contracts to a week."

Manager Lytle, of the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, ran this production for a week, commencing on "peace celebration" day, without preliminary advertising or publicity, and notwithstanding the fact that he did not receive his posters and lobby display until Wednesday, wired E. H. Hulsey, of the Dallas exchange: "It is a clean-up." According to Mr. Hulsey this is the first time that a special production has opened in Texas to a week's run without any advance preparation.

In this connection Mr. Hulsey claims to have established a new record for bookings, as he has already closed contracts by telegraph and telephone aggregating $6,000. Among the houses in Texas which will play this production are the Hippodrome, Dallas; Zoe, Houston; Hippodrome, Waco; Queen, Galveston; Majestic, Wichita Falls; Crystal, Greenville; Lyric, Longwood; Liberty, Beaumont; Pearce, Port Arthur; Liberty, Orange; also the Hauber, at Pine Bluff, Ark., and the Jewel, at Helena, Ark.

W. H. Productions to Defend Suit.

The W. H. Productions Company, in a statement issued concerning the proceedings instituted against it by the Federal Trade Commission, announces that it will make a formal defense of this suit through their attorneys, Seligsberg, Lewis & Strouse.

Art-O-Graf Company Formed in Colorado

FOR the purpose of producing and marketing state rights features the Art-O-Graf Film Company, a Colorado corporation, has been formed by Tom Gibson, Otis B. Thayer and David W. Townsend. The first production will be a six-reel feature, "Wolves in Wall Street," adapted by Tom Gibson from his story, "German Gold." A lease has been secured by the Art-O-Graf Film Company upon the Englewood Colorado studios of the National Film Corporation.

Otis B. Thayer, president and producing manager for the Art-O-Graf Film Company, is a man of many years' experience in the motion picture industry. He was formerly a director for Wm. N. Selig Chicago studios and is said to be the first man to take a company into Colorado to film "Western" stories. Since that time Mr. Thayer has been identified with pictures made in Colorado. As an independent producer he filmed "The Unborn," "The Awakening of Bess Morton," and several shorter subjects.

For the past five years Tom Gibson has been actively identified with several large companies as scenario writer and editor, including Lubin, Christie, Balboa and Universal and National Film Company. At Universal City Mr. Gibson produced sixty-seven reels in eleven months.

The production plans of the Art-O-Graf Company calls for six state rights "Western" subjects a year. They have already arranged for the first four and are negotiating for rights to popular novels. "The Last of the Open Range" is another of Tom Gibson's stories slated for early productions, and it will be a story of the early-day struggles of the sheep and cattle men. Mr. Gibson was co-author of the serial, "The Bull's Eye," made by Universal.

Special Engagements For "Romance of the Air"

CARL E. CARLTON, under whose personal supervision "A Romance of the Air," the acrial motion picture featuring Lieutenant Bert Hall and Edith Day, announces that this production, which had its premiere at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, played to the biggest receipts of any picture shown at this house for the past twelve weeks. Pending his decision as to just how this picture will be released, Mr. Carlton is arranging for special engagements in Boston, Chicago, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Louisville, Cincinnati, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other cities. Lieutenant Hall will appear in person as he did at the Rivoli and relate some of his exciting adventures.

Lieutenant Hall, who, with Major William Thaw, are said to be the only surviving members of the original Lafayette Escadrille, was decorated seven times and brought down eight German machines. His book, "En L'Air," has enjoyed one of the largest sales of any aviation story in connection with the war, and the production is founded largely on the book.

The next special showing of "A Romance of the Air" will be held in Boston, this City having been selected, as Edith Day, who is featured with Lieutenant Hall, is now appearing there in the prima donna role of the musical comedy "Going Up."

Herbert Standing, well known for his work in a number of screen productions, appears in the role of Major Thaw in "A Romance of the Air," and he is said to have been selected for this part not only on account of his dramatic ability, but because he also bears a marked resemblance to this well known American "Ace."

General Film Handling "Hearts of Love."

Thomas Bedding, of the American Feature Film Company, advises that he has received numerous inquiries from various buyers throughout the country who appear to have gained the impression that "Hearts of Love," the feature production being handled by this company is being distributed on a state rights basis. Mr. Bedding states that this is not the case; that this picture is not a state rights proposition, but is on the General Film program. The foreign rights, however, are being disposed of by the American Feature Film Corporation, 220 West Forty-second street, New York.

PROHIBITS SALE OF STANDING ROOM

Michigan's Fire Marshal Orders That Tickets Cannot Be Sold After Seating Capacity Is Occupied

By Jacob Smith, 117 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

SOMEBODY said the other day, "Who is the fellow putting the jinx on the motion picture theatres?", and it looks as if there was really a "nigger in the woodpile" somewhere. On Saturday, November 16, an order went forth from the state fire marshal's office in Lansing that standing room could not be sold in theatres, regular or movie, after the seating capacity was occupied, and charging the Detroit police department, as well as authorities in all other towns, with the duty of notification and enforcement. State Fire Marshal Frank H. Ellsworth says his action followed a number of complaints, especially in the smaller theatres, that undue crowding was permitted. With all due respect to the state official, theatre owners question that there have been complaints made and look upon the order as one of politics—pure and simple. First of all, there is very little crowding in theatres—as only a certain number of people are permitted to stand in accordance with the Detroit city ordinance. Then again, some standing must be permitted because people after buying their seats step into the foyer and insist upon a seat either so many rows from the stage or from the back, and if there is none vacant, they wait for one. In the regular theatres, the owners sell coupon seats, and there is probably not as much excuse for standing, but in the picture theatres there will always be the question and problem of standing. It is a part of the business. To drive away the standees is approximately the same as closing them up.

Corporation Counsel Allen H. Frazer questions very much whether the state fire marshal's order can remain in force in Detroit. City Fire Marshal Abe Goldwater, of Detroit, said, as soon as he heard the order relative to standees, that the action of the state officials was a a surprise to his office, no complaints against overcrowding in Detroit theatres or violations of the Detroit ordinance had been reported to him. He said he could see no good reason for the sweeping order.

Chief Building Inspector Henry A. Dupont said the Detroit city ordinance was strict in limiting standing room space to two square feet per person in the rear of the auditorium, and that every Detroit theatre is conscientiously living up to the regulations.

Goldstein Sells His State Right Films.

Harry Goldstein, one of the original promoters of the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, and the Oakland in Pontiac, has disposed of his two state-right features, "The Struggle Everlasting" and "The Accidential Honeymoon," to Joe Horwitz, proprietor of the Joe Horwitz Productions, Film Building, Detroit. It is Mr. Goldstein's intention to devote his entire time to the building of theatres just as soon as the Government lifts the ban.

ALLENS AGAIN EXTEND THEATRE CHAIN

Acquire the Windsor at Windsor, Ontario— Now Operate Thirty Picture Houses in Canada

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto.

MESSRS. Jule and J. J. Allen, of Toronto, have made further advances in connection with the extension of their business interests in the Dominion.

Announcement is made that the Allens have acquired the Windsor Theatre, one of the largest theatres in Windsor, Ontario. This house has had a mixed policy, but it will be the plan of the Allens to make it an exclusive moving picture theatre. The Windsor was secured from the former owner, a Windsor alderman.

George Rotsky, manager of the New Grand Theatre, St. Catherine and Stanley streets, Montreal, has been appointed general supervisor for Allen Theatres in the Province of Quebec. With this announcement comes the news that the New Grand has also been acquired by the Allens, making at least two theatres in Montreal for them, in addition to the Francais Theatre, which was leased temporarily for the showing of "Hearts of the World." It has also been reported that the Allens were negotiating for the lease of the Francais on a permanent basis.

Mr. Rotsky will be the overseer of the New Grand, Allen Theatre, of Westmount; Auditorium, of Quebec City; Royal Alexandra, of Lachine, and other houses. The New Grand is not a new theatre, the structure having been converted from a church. It is centrally located, however, and is a good proposition.

Allen's Bloor Street Theatre, Toronto, is nearing completion and will shortly be opened. Allen's Theatre, on Danforth avenue, which was held up for several weeks on account of objections from rival exhibitors and clergy of the community, has hardly been started, and it will be some time before it will be opened.

The new Allen theatres in Edmonton and Regina are progressing nicely despite labor shortage and the epidemic.

The Allens now have approximately thirty moving pictures in Canada either in operation or in course of erection.

McArdle Resigns from Shea's Hippodrome.

Cloakey to Manage the Allen at Brandon.

Oral D. Cloakey, manager of the Allen Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, has been transferred to the management of the Allen Theatre at Brandon, Manitoba, in succession to A. J. McKelvie. Mr. Cloakey was in Calgary for four years and has been in charge of the Allen Theatre there for more than a year. He was formerly assistant to Ben Cronk, who is now general supervisor of Allen theatres, with headquarters at Toronto.

Ottawa May Have a Screen Club.

A movement is on foot to organize a Screen Club in Ottawa, Ontario. The matter is receiving the consideration of Will McLaughlin, moving picture editor of the Ottawa Journal.

Major Graham Buys the Strand.

An interesting change in the Canadian West has been the sale of the Strand Theatre, Saskatoon, by P. L. Sommerfeldt to Major J. Graham, of Regina, for a consideration said to have been $20,000. The Strand Theatre was formerly leased by the Groves-Walker Theatre Company, but in future it will be under the management of Harry Mee.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union of Toronto is scheduled to hold its annual nomination meeting on Sunday, December 1, and the annual elections will be held on Sunday, January 5, 1919. Dominion Theatre Holds "Siberian Day."

The Dominion Theatre, Ottawa, observed Monday, November 18, as "Siberian Day," the members of the Canadian Siberian Expeditionary Force stationed in Ottawa for training purposes being the guests of Manager Hanitch at the evening performance on that date. Several members of the Force contributed special vaudeville numbers for the entertainment of their comrades. The "Siberians" turned out 250 strong.

Coliseum Theatre Beautified.

The Coliseum Theatre, Kew Beach, Toronto, looks like a new house since its renovation. The curtain windshield at the entrance has been replaced by a handsome partition of the lattice-work style. The theatre also has a big orchestra pit and a miniature stage of pleasing appearance. There is also a rather ornate frame around the screen. Added to these features are a number of mural decorations to kill the bare-wall effect. The front has also been redecorated and remodeled.

The windows in both of the stores in the Coliseum are now used for display advertising purposes, the advertisements consisting of transparent signs covering the plate glass. The spaces are used to draw attention to coming attractions.

Shows Part of Coming Attractions.

Manager Will M. Elliott, of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, has added another idea, new to Toronto, to the list of many innovations which he has adopted for the big Toronto house since he took over its management a few weeks ago. The latest stunt is to present a portion of the coming week's attraction on the screen, along with the title of the picture and a trailer, that the feature will be shown at the Regent during the coming week. Mr. Elliott is also using a special Regent title and tail-piece for the news weeklies which are being presented.

Boy Scout Picture at the Allen.

The English serial, "Boy Scouts to the Rescue," opened at the Allen Theatre, Toronto, on Monday, November 18. Local Boy Scout organizations paraded to the theatre with a bond on the first evening, and various troops were guests of the management at performances throughout the week. The serial, which comes in five chapters, is controlled in Canada by Clair Hague, of the Canadian Universal.

Motion Pictures to Advertise Canada.

B. E. Norrish, of Ottawa, Ontario, has been given charge of the official moving picture activities of the Dominion Government, and is associated with the Department of Trade and Commerce. Mr. Norrish is a graduate in applied science at Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. By means of moving pictures it is proposed to advertise Canada abroad quite extensively. Arrangements have already been made for the presentation of official Canadian views in the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

Front of Moss Park Theatre Beautified.

The Moss Park Theatre, Queen Street East, Toronto, Ontario, now has a front that is a real study in art. Incidentally, the Moss Park Theatre, under another name, formerly had an appearance that was so uninviting that the house was closed for a number of months. Mural paintings now cover the curved ceiling and panels of the entrance, the scenes typifying drama and comedy as presented on the screen. The arrangement is a credit to the management.

Schreiber Still Under Ban.

On November 16, practically the only centre in the Province of Ontario which still was keeping the lid on public gatherings was Schreiber, a small town in Northern Ontario. The authorities of all other cities and towns had seen fit to life the embargo on theatre performances by that date. The result was that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario sent a sharp letter by special delivery to the medical officer of Schreiber to ascertain the reason for the delay in removing the ban there.

Says News Films Will Be More Valuable.

L. Ernest Ouimet, of Montreal, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Canadian distributors of Pathe releases and official British pictures, declares that news weeklies will now become more valuable than ever. This rather contradicts an impression that the "war views" will become less popular now that the war is over.

"The next six months will see many changes throughout the world," says Mr. Ouimet. "The public is hungry for news and eager for detail. The motion picture is the greatest recorder of details. The strict Government and military censorship will now be removed, as secrecy is no longer necessary. Cameramen will have more latitude. Think of the fund of information that will be released and how theatre patrons will want to see and know the inside workings of the wonderful military machine that crushed Prussianism."

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"America's Answer" at the Strand.

A PATRIOTIC war film has quite as strong interest now as while fighting was going on, if not stronger, judging by the way the public has flocked to see "America's Answer," one of the official Government films showing the kind of army Uncle Sam raised. The picture was the first shown at the Strand after the lifting of the ban, and more than a little interest was added by reason of the fact that Ohio troops were among those shown in the picture. It was seen previously at the Grand, before the opening of the regular season, at high prices. John Needham and Raymond Harris, representing the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, were in Cincinnati to arrange for the engagement as well as for the showing of "Under Four Flags" later on.

"Smile" Film for Cincinnati Soldiers.

A unique film, the taking of which was postponed for a month by the influenza epidemic, was finally made at the Cincinnati Zoo, under the auspices of the Cincinnati Rotary Club, and will be sent overseas as a Christmas present for Cincinnati soldiers, especially the old First Regiment. It shows views of the more than 2,000 fathers, mothers and children of the soldiers, taken in appropriate divisions, one being especially devoted to six "war babies," born since the departure of their daddies for the front. The pictures were shown downtown, and have since been forwarded so as to reach France by Christmas.

Seattle News Letter

Yamada and Kaita Open the Atlas.

WITH the lifting of the influenza ban a new competitor entercd the ranks for some of Seattle's flourishing motion picture business. This was the Atlas Theatre, opened by Messrs. Yamada and Kaita, former owners of the Bison Theatre, both theatres being in the lower downtown section of the city. The new house, which the managers themselves own, is on Maynard avenue, in the Japanese section of the downtown district. It is a fine, well-equipped house, seating about 500. Service has been signed for from Paramount, Fox, Select, Vitagraph, Pathe and Universal. The opening feature was Theda Bara's "Cleopatra." The admission charges are 15 cents and 10 cents, the latter being the price for children. On the day of the opening, November 12, no less than fifteen large floral pieces were received by the management from their various business friends and well-wishers.

Hamrick Buys Back the Gem.

John Hamrick, manager of the Rex Theatre, has bought back the Gem Theatre, which he opened several months ago on Second avenue, just south of Yesler Way, and sold a week or two afterward.

Mr. Hamrick reports a wonderful opening business on Tuesday and Wednesday with the Douglas Fairbanks and Fatty Arbuckle reissues, "The Half Breed" and "Bright Lights," respectively. With the reopening of the Rex Mr. Hamrick has changed back to his former policy of a change only once a week, instead of twice a week, which he was trying out when the theatres closed.

Sandell Opens the Pictureland.

E. W. Sandell, manager of the Dream Theatre of Snoqualmie, and former manager of the Movies Theatre at North Bend, Washington, opened the new Pictureland on November 13. Mr. Sandell just closed the Movies when the influenza order went into effect, and he took the opportunity offered by the closing of all houses to get ready the new house, which he had contemplated opening for some time. The Pictureland is a 270-seat house, equipped with a Minusa gold fibre screen and a Power's 6A and a Simplex machine. The service to be used is Artcraft-Paramount and Fox. Mr. Sandell reports excellent business at North Bend, owing to the prosperity of the extensive lumber interests of the community.

BUSINESS AGAIN BOOMING IN DAYTON

On Sunday, November 17, the Dayton Played to 10,004, Memorial Hall to 3,000 and the Strand to 7,000

By Paul Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

SUNDAY, November 17, brought back the business that had been lost by the recent epidemic in great shape and one of the best days for many moons was registered on the different daily reports of local theatres. There were three openings on Sunday worthy of mention that did very good, chief among these being "The Romance of Tarzan," at the Dayton Theatre. This house played to 10,004 people on that day, making a new mark for attendance records. This beats the record set at the Dayton by "Tarzan of the Apes," which played to 9,996 patrons, making it four less than ten thousand.

"Hearts of the World" opened at Memorial Hall to about 3,000 admissions, which was very good considering the fact that only one show was given at its premier.

The Strand opened with Douglas Fairbanks in "He Comes Up Smiling," and played to capacity all day. It is thought that about 7,000 patrons passed through the turnstile at the Strand. All of the downtown houses were hurt the first few hours of the afternoon by the big peace celebration parade which was held between the hours of one and three, but were benefited at its close. Business is coming back strong in Dayton.

Thomas Back at the Dayton.

Hewit H. Thomas, who had been sick for the last three weeks, is again at his post, directing the orchestra at the Dayton Theatre here. Mr. Thomas' wife passed away several weeks ago, suffering from an attack of pneumonia contracted after having had the influenza.

Dallas Trade Letter

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

Fairbanks Addresses Big Texas Crowds.

TEXANS turned out by hundreds of thousands to greet Douglas Fairbanks, who made a tour of the state in the interest of the United War Work campaign fund during the second week in November.

Fairbanks was at San Antonio when the news broke that Germany was whipped and that fighting was over. There was an immediate celebration. The star was called upon to address a great crowd which had gathered around his car at the railroad station.

Marshal Eskridge, of San Antonio, presented Fairbanks with a bottle of Burgundy wine, which he declared was the only one in the exceedingly dry city of San Antonio.

The work done by Douglas Fairbanks in Texas proved of real value, his patriotic appeal having a marked effect in every community visited. Constant speaking caused Fairbanks to become so husky that it was hard to hear him toward the end of his tour. His work was mostly done in Southwest Texas. He did not visit Dallas or any of the large North Texas cities, although they had hoped to see him.

Must Put On Good Shows to Keep Patrons.

"If the small-town motion picture exhibitor does not want his business taken away from him, via the automobile route, by the larger cities, he must wake up and hit the ball right now," declared John C. Fanning, of the Crazy Theatre, Mineral Wells, one of the most popular of North Texas exhibitors.

"During the influenza quarantine most of the small-town theatres were closed at once, while in the larger cities the quarantine was of brief duration. Patrons of the theatres in the smaller towns got the habit of going to the city in their automobiles to take in picture shows. The motion picture exhibitor in the smaller city must not go to sleep. He must combat any such change in patronage by securing the very best features procurable. High-class stuff pays in the end and I would rather see a crowded house on a film which costs perhaps more than I feel justified in paying than a half empty theatre on a film which I got cheap. My rule is that there's nothing too good for my patrons."

Express Service Improving.

Dallas film exchange managers report that there has been a great improvement in the service rendered by the railway express company during the past few weeks. Up to the time of the influenza quarantine local managers had nothing but trouble in shipping their films.

Along came the influenza and the film exchange business with the express company suddenly stopped. The magnitude of this business possibly was in this way forcibly brought home to express officials. Anyhow, the express company is doing finely now and everyone is satisfied.

Fire Destroys the Blue Mouse Theatre.

The Blue Mouse Theatre, 1010 Main street, Forth Worth, was destroyed by fire during the second week in November with a loss of $5,000. Joe Smith, an operator, was slightly burned. The house was crowded when a film caught fire, but there was no panic or confusion.

Texas Brevities.

Miss E. Johnson of the Liberty Theatre, Houston, has remodeled her establishment and has installed a new pipe organ.

John C. Fanning has remodeled the Crazy Theatre at Mineral Wells and installed some new loges.

J. C. Cobb has joined the auditing department of Metro, Dallas.

F. K. Davis is now with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Dallas.

Louisville News Letter

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

Griffith Film Stopped by Mayor.

DURING a recent showing of "The Birth of a Nation," a Griffith production at the Walnut Theatre, Louisville, Mayor Smith requested the management to take the picture off, stating that while he didn't order it he felt that it was a strong reflecion on the colored race, and that the colored boys had done such excellent work in France that he felt that the old Civil War axe should be buried. The management instantly withdrew the picture.

No Shortage of Operators in Louisville.

It is interesting to note that after being down for a period of five weeks or more the Louisville theatres had plenty of operators on hand when they were ready to start again, although not a single house is known to have carried any of its operators on the payroll during the close-down period.

ALL NIGHT THEATRES PAY DIVIDENDS

The Idle Hour and the Gayoso of Kansas City, Mo., Are Operated on a Profitable Basis

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

DO ALL-NIGHT theatres pay dividends on the additional hours? They do, apparently, under conditions such as the two which keep open most of the night in Kansas City are operated. The Idle Hour was the first in Kansas City to announce its all-night program, about two years ago. It was more of an advertising stunt then than a definite move to get direct business. But experience has proved that it pays. The Idle Hour runs, with full equipment, program and music, until 4 o'clock in the morning, then suspends until 9. Between 10:30 and 2 the business is brisk—a thousand or so persons every night finding that they want to go to a theatre after it is too late to pay admission anywhere else. Between 2 and 4 the patronage is lighter—but averages quite heavy enough to be profitable. While the pictures cease at 4 o'clock, the patrons who are in the theatre at that hour are allowed to remain until 6, when the janitor routs them out so he can clean the place. These "sleepers" are not by any means riff-raff—they are usually men who have made part of a night of it, knocking around town, and take this means of passing the rest of the night and being on hand downtown for work in the morning. Care is taken that intoxicated persons are not admitted, and a much higher class of patrons spend the early morning hours in the theatre than one might offhand suppose.

The Gayoso Theatre continues its show until 5 a. m., and then resumes its day's program at 10 o'clock.

Booking Goldwyn Pictures for Holidays.

Richard Robertson, manager of Goldwyn, Kansas City, reports a big demand for Goldwyn productions by the exhibitors of the four states around Kansas City for Thanskgiving and Christmas programs.

Some exchange managers had rather expected a desire on the part of exhibitors to recoup influenza losses by economy in film bills—but this expectation has not been generally realized. The exhibitors seem willing to spend money to make money—and are not risking their business for the next few months by lowering the standard of their programs, but are rather stimulating business by taking this occasion to raise their standards.

"Mothers of Liberty" at the Gayoso.

The Gayoso Theatre is running "Mothers of Liberty" for a week, and is playing to good business. The Gayoso is one of Kansas City's two "all-night theatres," the house being closed only between 5 and 10 a. m.

Waited In Rain to See Chaplin Film.

The Twelfth Street Theatre, in Kansas City, had them standing in line in the rain Sunday, November 17, waiting to get in to see Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms." It is worth commenting upon that while Chaplin is a sure drawing card advertising was not stinted. Fair-sized newspaper space was used, and billboards also, to inform the public that Chaplin was at this theatre.

Idle Hour Builds Another Entrance.

The Idle Hour has found its second entrance on Grand avenue a distinct advantage since the removal of the ban on picture shows and resumption of business. Twelfth street is a narrow street, and there is always a crowd at Twelfth and Grand, near where the former single entrance was located. The entrance therefore used to have constantly the appearance of being crowded—and doubtless many persons abandoned their purpose of going to the show when they saw this crowd. Whatever the reason, the fact remains that the second entrance is permitting a business that keeps the enlarged capacity as full as the former capacity was. The Idle Hour has 300 more seats since remodeling and providing the Grand avenue entrance.

Van Praag Is an Energetic Manager.

The Central Garden Theatre, Fifteenth and Central streets, Kansas City, Kansas, gives ground to no theatre in energetic and successful methods to get business. The location is in the retail center of a suburban district, one of the several business districts of Kansas City, Kan. M. Van Praag, manager of the theatre, pays good prices for pictures—and gets the stuff that the people are most eager to see. And then he spends money advertising the show. He got Arthur Guy Empey for the "Over the Top" program last week for three days, used a seven-piece orchestra, got the tank corps to parade the streets, got the city officials to the theatre—and charged twenty-five cents admission. Naturally, he is "cleaning up."

How Sparks Advertised Fox "Kultur" Film.

Ted Sparks, business manager of the Empress Theatre, is an old-time theatrical manager—and here is one of his business practices that has served well many times. He always has in the back of his head ideas on advertising and business-getting, which are preserved for possible use; and in his record are the names and the data, so that he can use the ideas to best advantage when the occasion arises. Recently the Empress booked "Wolves of Kultur," a Fox production, and "click" went the machinery in Mr. Sparks' mental filing cabinet. He remembered a man who had devised a novel stunt, using a camouflage airplane which he drove backward on city streets. Sparks got into touch with this man and brought him to Kansas City to advertise the film. The stunt did prove effective. It is to be noted that while the device could have attracted attention for almost any offering, it was saved for the particular picture that its special appeal would most eloquently hook up with.

Jones Buys Carrollton Opera House.

Percy O. Jones has sold his Royal Theatre at Unionville, Mo., and has bought the opera house at Carrollton, Mo. Mr. Jones has remodeled the house, renamed it the Royal, and opened it as a picture show November 16. He was in Kansas City November 15, and attended the luncheon given by the exhibitors and exchange men on that day.

All Bans Lifted; Curtis Opens the Doric.

George W. Curtis made good on his advertisement of Sunday, November 10—he refused to reopen his theatre until the officials of the city had themselves declared that all danger of influenza from gatherings, was past. The ban on theatres had been raised November 10, but restrictions still required that patrons occupy only alternate seats. On November 17, this restriction was removed—and the Doric was opened. The "Doric News" had an accumulation of events to present, including the fire prevention parade and the celebration of the signing of the armistice. An additional feature was provided for this reopening, in "Victory Singing" by the audience—everybody joining in the singing of patriotic songs. The spirit of the times, and the habit of singing when large crowds are gathered, made this an interesting and popular feature.

Babineau, of Palace Theatre, Dies.

R. Babineau, for the last ten years owner and proprietor of the Palace Theatre, Chatham, N. B., died last week. He was a pioneer exhibitor, one of the first in the Province, having opened his Chatham house during the period of 1908-1909, and conducted it most successfully ever since.

His open-hearted manner made him the friend of everyone with whom he came in contact, and his integrity was unswerving.

Although his town was never considered large enough to support more than one show house, yet he was called upon at different times to fight opposition from at least four different competitors, some of whom considered themselves invincible until they had measured swords with him. To his credit be it said he always fough fair, and his ultimate success in winning out was a justification of his policy.

The Opera House, Campbellton, N. B., now owned by F. G. Spencer, of St. John, and managed by S. C. Hurley, opened recently. The picture attraction was "Patriotism," a timely subject for the peace celebration. The Opera House at Dalhousie, under the same management, has also opened.

Theatre Men Feature Carnival.

IN order to fittingly celebrate the close of the great war and the reopening of theatres, a monster outdoor celebration was staged in the downtown retail district on the evening of November 15. The Ferry Building was illuminated in honor of the occasion, as was the City Hall and the Path of Gold, whose lights have been dimmed for months. Ten huge trucks were fitted up with platforms, each provided with an orchestra, and these moved from place to place during the evening with their loads of performers from the various theatres, together with stars of the screen. Among the latter who added to the hilarity of the occasion were "Fatty" Arbuckle, Kolb and Dill, and Eva Tanguay. The committee which arranged the carnival included Irving Ackerman, of Ackerman & Harris; Morris Meyerfeld and H. Hertz, of the Orpheum; Edward Meyer and A. M. Jackson, of Pantages; Jack Partington, of the Imperial Theatre; E. H. Roth, of the California Theatre; Howard Sheehan, of the Rialto Theatre, and Norman Eisner, of the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California.

Rejuvenates Hamblen Theatre.

Several changes have been made in the management of the Hamblen Theatre at Alameda, Cal., since this house was opened about a year ago, and for a time its fortunes were at rather low ebb. Bert P. Donnellan, a pioneer exhibitor of this field, took charge last June, when Sheehan & Lurie purchased the house and when the latter disposed of their interests remained with the new owners as director-general. The house has been renovated during the period of enforced closing and has reopened with a flying start.

BLUEJACKETS HONOR "DADDY" STRONG

Operator at Universal's Minneapolis Exchange Given Gold Watch by Dunwoody Sailors—Is Civil War Veteran

By U. E. Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

GEORGE D. ("DADDY") STRONG, sailor on a Mississippi gunboat in the Civil War and friend of the present-day bluejackets, is the possessor of a gold watch and chain, presented to him by the sailors of Dunwoody Institute in Minneapolis last week. The presentation was made after the regular Dunwoody battalion band's concert at the Elgin Hotel.

"Daddy" Strong, who is 76 years old, has saluted the boys every morning, rain or shine, sleet or snow, as they passed by on Hennepin avenue at 6 a. m., from their quarters in the Radisson and Elgin hotels to Dunwoody Institute.

As a veteran motion picture operator now serving at the Minneapolis Universal Exchange, he has provided many entertainments for them during their stay here. He has not missed a single concert given for the sailors, and he was in attendance as usual when he was surprised by the gift.

With the armistice signed and peace seemingly assured, "Daddy" states that he will continue to exchange "military courtesies" with the bluejackets in Minneapolis as long as they stay here.

The 1,500 sailors stationed in Minneapolis all know "Daddy" and are prompt to smile and salute when they see him.

Business Good in Philadelphia.

BUSINESS among the theatres and exchanges has been restored to a normal degree. The familiar nightly crowds have returned to see their favorites of the screen, and the hustling managers once again can be seen eagerly booking up the big screen hits at the numerous exchanges. All the exhibitors are wearing that happy "box office expression of delight," while the silver lining of these beclouded days appears more brighter than ever. While the busy machines hum in the booths, the operators more than ever realize their importance, as being a cog in the wheel of the successful turn of events, and keep a vigilant eye towards the screen, not even a "ghost" can get by now. At the exchanges time-tables have been piled high in anticipation of the many trips to be made by the salesmen.

Uses Victrola with Caruso Film.

Alexander R. Boyd, of the Arcadia Theatre, at Sixteenth and Chestnut, created additional interest last week during the presentation of Enrico Caruso in "My Cousin," which was shown here for the first time in this city. The novel scheme, which was successfully carried out, consisted of having a Victrola installed near the screen so that when the part in which Caruso appears as Pagliacci is shown, the voice comes from the record in well-timed accord with the facial movements while rendering this beautiful solo. This production has made a big hit from the start and will be continued during the week of November 18.

BUILDS THEATRE FOR ITS EMPLOYES

Atlas Powder Company Opens 600 Seat Picture House at Perrys Point, Md.—Proceeds to go to Red Cross

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

THE new up-to-date theatre with a seating capacity of 600 which has been constructed at Perrys Point, Md., by the Atlas Powder Company, in which the employes of the plant may find amusement, was opened on Victory Day, November 11, and was patronized by large crowds. This playhouse has been christened the New Theatre and is under the management of J. S. Maffitt, who has formerly been in the theatrical business. The Atlas Powder Company does not wish to realize anything on the investment and built it solely for the amusement of the workers engaged at this plant. The profits will go to the benefit of the Red Cross.

The theatre is thoroughly modern. The front is of stucco and the doors are brass trimmed. There is a cement sidewalk in front. The projection room is fireproof and built of concrete and the doors are metal covered. It is equipped with two of the latest make Power's machines. There is a rewinder. The throw to the screen is estimated at 110 feet. The color scheme throughout is gray and old ivory. The wainscoting is mahogany color. It has the inverted lighting system. The chairs are mahogany. There is an orchestra pit and the stage is built so that vaudeville attractions can be given. The curtain is of black velvet and the floor covering is of linoleum. Dressing rooms are located under the stage. The music is now furnished by a player piano.

At the present time only night shows are being given, and they have the services of a soldier operator. The lobby has inset panels for three 3-sheet holders and one 1-sheet holder. These will probably be used for photos of the stars. On the exterior there are located two 3-sheet holders, one on each side of the doors, and photo frames.

The program booked at the present time is: Two days Goldwyn, two days Paramount, one day Fox, one day World and the Mutual-Strand. Arbuckle-Sennett, Goldwyn-Capitol and Sunshine comedies.

The Auditorium Theatre, the new motion picture house which has been erected at Calumet avenue and Hoffman street, in Hammond, Ind., was opened this week with William S. Hart in "The Lone Stranger," and Catharine Calvert in "A Romance of the Underworld." The theatre, which is under the management of Max Helfer, is said to be one of the coziest and most up-to-date in that section of the state.

Parade Boosts Showing of "America's Answer."

A big street parade, headed by the Regimental Band and followed by the Terre Haute Liberty Guards, was held in Terre Haute Monday night, November 18, in connection with the presentation at the American Theatre of the official Government war film, "America's Answer." On Tuesday night a large part of the theatre was reserved for employees of the Root department store, and on Wednesday night—the last night of the exhibition—employees of the Columbia Enameling Company occupied the theatre.

A Busy Man Is Exhibitor O'Donnell.

Hugh O'Donnell, proprietor of the Grand Theatre, at Washington, Ind., is one busy man. In addition to operating the motion picture theatre, running his big hardware store and serving as a director at a couple of banks, this Hoosier exhibitor has entered the newspaper field by writing a column of news notes concerning motion picture stars for the Washington Herald, one of the daily newspapers there. The column, which contains breezy and up-to-date news items, appears about twice a week and is eagerly devoured by Washington film fans.

CELEBRATES SIXTH ANNIVERSARY

Lyndhurst Theatre, Rochester, Commemorates November 26 With a Special Program—I. M. Salyerds, Manager

By L. E. Skeffington, 61 Main Street, East, Rochester, New York.

ON TUESDAY, November 26 the Lyndhurst celebrated its sixth anniversary. Manager Irving M. Salyerds arranged a special bill for that day and issued a general invitation to the public to attend the birthday party. Mr. Salyerds has been manager of the house since it opened and was in charge of the affairs of the theatre three months before it was completed, so the success which has come to the Lyndhurst is entirely due to him.

The Lyndhurst is situated on the corner of North avenue and Lyndhurst street, and today is considered one of the most successful theatre ventures in Rochester. It has built up a large clientele of regular patrons which is constantly on the increase. Not only does it draw patronage from its own immediate neighborhood, but the excellence of its program attracts lovers of the silent art from all over the city.

The Lyndhurst as a purely business institution is a valuable one to the section in which it is located. In a part of the town that might be called the border between the business and residential sections, it has in many ways added to the prosperity of the section. The first of several handsome, modern buildings to be erected in the neighborhood, it has become a sort of an institution. Around its brightly lighted front many stores and other business places have sprung up. The business men of the section attribute a large part of their prosperity to Mr. Salyerd's theatre and his active interest in the community affairs, and heartily joined in with him in observing the anniversary event.

Strand Has a Kiddies' Day.

Saturday, November 16, was kiddies' day at the Strand Theatre. It was all originated and planned out by Miss Florence Fennyvessey, the manager of that house. In connection with a special showing of the Fox kiddies she promised a present to every kid who attended the show. The kids came early, and they continued to come until it was soon seen that the supply of toys which she had on hand for presents was altogether too small. In order that none of the kids would be disappointed she got a big automobile and, with a couple of ushers, made a "raid" on the toy department of a five and ten-cent store.

Miss Fennyvessey is the daughter of Albert A. Fennyvessey, general manager of the Theatres Operating Company. She has several brothers who are successful theatre managers. She succeeded her brother, Paul, at the Strand, when he accepted an appointment to the management of a Liberty theatre, which job he later resigned to go across as a private in the combatant forces.

Taylor Visits Rochester.

Charles A. Taylor, perhaps better known as "Buck," was in town last week visiting his customers. Buck is the manager of the Pathe exchange at Buffalo, which serves western and central New York, as well as the Southern Tier counties. He reports that he has no kick to make and that business is booming.

"FAN FAN."

Pretty Screen Fantasy, Typically Japanese, Produced by William Fox.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

WANT something new, Mr. Exhibitor? Do you seek that novelty which every season of entertainment needs to make the public sit up and take notice? If you do; if you would spice your offerings with an unusually delightful photoplay—"Fan Fan" and "Ali Baba" (two screen extravaganzas Fox has just prepared for release) deserve a place in your plans and will reward you in a box-office way, as well as bringing your house into high esteem. "Ali Baba" is referred to elsewhere in this issue; these lines apply to "Fan Fan."

Mr. Fox, in the first place, has accomplished something little short of wonderful in bringing the "atmosphere" of Japan to the screen. Our visions from books, pictures and screen-educationals is fulfilled in the scenes and people, customs and costumes, involved in the presentation of "Fan Fan." There is not a moment when the illusion is missed—it's all we have been led to believe Japan may be in tropical beauty, architecture and quaintness.

Next mention should be given to the selection of the cast and the skill in direction. There are six principals and the queen of them all is Virginia Lee Corbin, in the present opinion the daintiest, sweetest, cleverest and altogether most lovable little girl the screen has brought to view. As Fan Fan she is always a delight. Francis Carpenter, as Hanki Pan, the hero, is a brave and manly lad who commands admiration for everything he does. Of course, we must despise the villain (played by Violet Radcliffe), and in recording our detestation of her villainous conduct toward sweet little Fan Fan and the courtly Hanki Pan we pay her highest compliment—for what's the use of playing a villain if no one hisses?

How Hanki Pan, Prince of Japan, beheld with delight the lovely face of Fan Fan, and how he resolved to possess her despite parental opposition or the laws of caste, starts the pretty entertainment delightfully. In these opening scenes we are lulled into admiration that never for an instant leave us as we follow the tribulation of the gracious little couple unto the very moment of their triumphant happiness. The Emperor has decreed that Hanki Pan shall marry Honorable Lady Shoo—and when we see Carmen De Rue in her unsightly make-up we cannot help admiring Hanki Pan's determination to fly to the arms of Fan Fan; to the sweet little girl Virginia Lee Corbin has created as a screen classic in juvenile expression and histronic artistry.

The Chief Executioner, after doing his worst and meanest to prevent the happiness of the hero and heroine, is ultimately saved from his own snickery-snee by the unsightly Lady Shoo, who makes him her husband. The plot matters little while the beauties of photography and scenic environment pass in review; while these clever little women and little men entertain us by their own personalities, and delight us with their efforts.

The exhibitor who plays "Fan Fan" (and "Ali Baba" as well) will have nine-tenths of his audience compliment him on his good judgment. The other tenth will be just as well pleased—but they may, perchance, forget to say so. There is the best of joyful entertainment for the kiddies—and for grown ups "Fan Fan" (and "Ali Baba") will be a genuine treat in every foot of its display.

"ALI BABA."

Dashing Melodrama Acted by Clever Children Reflects "The Forty Thieves" in Fox Extravaganza.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THIS delightful serio-comic melodrama should be coupled in the booking with "Fan Fan," mentioned in detail elsewhere in this issue. The story of Ala Baba, the wood-gatherer, who found his way, by stealth, into the cave of the Forty Thieves, and all that subsequently transpired as an attendant result, is told by a company of youthful players that do individual credit to themselves and to their director.

William Fox has brought the "Open Sesame" of fiction to swing wide the faculties of photo-play enjoyment; to gladden the observer of this pretty fantasy with every detail of its production and artistic presentation. Followers of the screen will thank their lucky stars that they have had opportunity for such rare enjoyment as "Ali Baba" (and "Fan Fan") afford—and the exhibitor who does not capitalize his opportunity to book both extravaganzas is overlooking, in foolish laxness of good showmanship, a chance to make an immense hit with his public and fatten his bank roll.

Gertrude Messinger and George Stone play the leads—the boy impersonating Ali Baba and the bright, intelligent and gifted little girl doing Morgainna, the greatly suffering slave-girl who won Ali Baba's sympathy and love. Buddie Messinger is a deep-dyed and grasping piece of selfishness who does himself credit in one of the leading roles—and there are a lot of boys and girls who enter into the scenes with pleasing result. Only a few of the roles are played by grown-ups; the children carry off the honors.

Because of the juvenile cast, get no idea that this is a play especially for children. It's a treat for both the little ones and their elders; a bit of screen blending of tragedy, serio-comic and dramatic revelations that will make a session before the screen a period of pure delight.

"ALL NIGHT"

Five-Reel Bluebird Offering Presents Mixture of Comedy and Farce.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS subject in five reels, entitled "All Night," was adapted from a short story by Edgar Franklin and directed by Paul Powell. It never quite loses its short-story character, as much of the plot is told in subtitles. The action at the beginning is slow and leisurely, and the situations are like those found in polite comedy, but in the last two reels things take a farcical turn. The production as a whole fails to live up to its possibilities for some reason that is difficult to understand. It contains good material for a breezy farce, but there is a certain vagueness in the opening reels and a lack of reality that is never quite overcome as the piece develops.

Carmel Myers is cast in the role of Elizabeth Lane, the heroine. She is supported by a cast which includes M. Rodolpho De Valentina, Charles Dorian, Mary Warren, William Dyer, Wadsworth Harris and Jack Hull.

The plot concerns a young financier named Harcourt, who is in bad straits, although he has constant prospects of making a fortune. He loses his temper one night and discharges all of his servants, just as his wife has invited Elizabeth Lane and Richard Thayer to dinner. The guests arrive and also an eccentric millionaire from Montana, named Bradford, with whom Harcourt hopes to close an important deal. Before Bradford comes the Harcourts plan to act as maid and butler and pass off their guests as themselves. This brings up a number of complications which promise greater humor than is developed. William Dyer, as Bradford, struggles hard to put the character over, but it never quite reaches the point of conviction.

"BORROWED CLOTHES"

Jewel Presents Six-Reel Lois Weber Production Featuring Mildred Harris.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A STRONG example of the strictly emotional type of subject is this six-reel production, adapted and produced by Lois Weber from the original by Marion Orth. It gives Mildred Harris, now the wife of Charlie Chaplin, the best opportunity she has yet had to demonstrate her abilities at emotional acting. In the subjects in which the reviewer has seen her heretofore, she has revealed more than passing personal charm, but in this number she does some very creditable bits of difficult work as well. She makes a very real and suffering individual out of Mary Kirts, the heroine, but the character is too weak to command admiration, and the story hardly worth six reels.

The central character of the story,

Mary, is a girl living happily with her sister and parents. The sister, Louise, is a manicure, and Mary is employed by some young florists, one of whom desires to marry her. Mary is happy with the love of George Weston until Stuart Furth crosses her path. Furth induces her to go home with him, attired in her bathing suit, during a fire in the bath houses at the beach. The girl, bewildered by her situation, goes with him, and Furth loans her some finery recently left in his apartments by his discarded friend, Rita. The mere wearing of these borrowed garments wrecks Mary's contentment with her former lot, and she gives up Weston to her sister and pines for more of Furth's society. In the end it almost costs her her honor, but Furth's rooms are raided by the police at the behest of Rita just in time to save Mary. Later Furth reforms and declares his desire to wed Mary just as she is about to return to Weston.

This theme, which can hardly be called one of first importance, since it leaves the observer in a state of uncertainty, has been given a skillful delineation. The deft hands of Lois Weber, and her husband, Phillips Smalley, are everyhere in evidence, and even while the plot does not confer the greatest degree of enjoyment, it is a pleasure to watch the technical unfolding of this story. The delicate values are brought out carefully, there is never an awkward moment in the continuity and every situation is made real and life-like. The disturbed condition of the Kirk family is excellently pictured. The speedy reform of Furth seems overdrawn, but that and the weakness of the heroine is about the only lapse in characterization.

Others in the cast are Lewis J. Cody, Edward J. Peel, Helen Rosson, Fantine LaRue, George Nichols and Edythe Chapman.

"BRANDING BROADWAY"

Arteraft Presents William S. Hart in an Interesting and Strikingly Original Comedy by Gardner Sullivan.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHAT a pleasure to see Hart in an entirely new role, though it be on the lines of his preference, and what a pleasure to watch the delightful comedy, with its brilliant subtitles by a man who knows how to write them! What a difference in an original play by an author of abundant resources who knows how to compose for the screen and the stale old stuff adapted from products which rarely provide entertainment for moving picture audiences! It is the difference between imperishable gold and easily-tarnished gilt, of genuine quality and its feeble imitation. Hart plays his old role of border tough until thrown out of a newly civilized community, hog-tied and placed in the express car of an eastbound train. He had been celebrating a recent inheritance, and has a wad with him when released from bondage on the train. He is out for adventure, and a newspaper account of a wild spirit in New York, a young blood who has to have an athletic guardian to keep him out of scraps, serves to arouse a new impulse. Hart goes to New York, visits the Riverside home of the young blood, and secures an appointment as his physical guardian or "nurse."

The New Yorker is an athlete and a game fighter, as is proven by some wild escapades immediately following, and he has become involved in an entanglement obnoxious to his family by writing letters to a young lady who runs a restaurant famous for its wheat cakes. Hart is delegated to recover the letters, but falls in love with the expert in wheat cakes, and weakens about asking for her private letters. He decides that the young New Yorker has won the girl's heart, and it shall not be broken. From this moment the fun is fast and furious. Extravagant almost to the verge of farce, the story is so logically developed that it seems entirely possible, a fine art growing out of unity of purpose on the part of author, director and actor. The comedy is largely "physical" in its development, full of the athletic spirit of the times, but it sparkles with bright humor, and will prove a big winner with any audience.

"THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS"

New Universal Serial Features Eddie Polo in a Story of the Tented Ring.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS new Universal serial, of which the reviewer has seen ten installments out of the eighteen promised, is well named. It has from the very first the atmosphere of the circus in good measure, and by using his imagination the observer can almost smell the animals.

The story features as its hero Eddie Polo, who will be remembered for his work in "Liberty" and "The Bull's Eye." He is provided with plenty of opportunities in this present offering to delight his admirers, and performs a great many acrobatic feats of more than ordinary interest. Eddie Polo is perhaps as skillful in his daring stunts as any screen performer essaying this dangerous class of work, and he rarely, if ever, resorts to subterfuge of any sort. His fans have a perfect right to their admiration for his efforts, and will, no doubt, follow this serial with great enthusiasm.

What we particularly like about this serial is the fact that it begins with the circus, of which Eddie is part owner with the villain of the piece, Richard Van Norman, and remains with it. In other words, while the action occasionally leads the characters far afield, they always return to the picturesque canvas tops, where most of the events take place. Molly Malone and Eileen Sedgwick take the roles of two girls employed by the circus, and each has important work to do. Others in the cast are Charles Hill Mailes, Frederick Starr, Fred Montague, Duke R. Lee, Harry Carter and James Gorden.

The story, which was written by William Wing, adapted by Hope Loring, and produced by J. P. McGowan, has no very strong imaginative qualities, but there is plenty of well-ordered action, and ample provision has been made for the special stunts that appeal so strongly to followers of serials.

"THE LIBERATOR"

Twenty-Four Reel Serial Starring "Maciste" Contains Many Stunts for the Big Fellow.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

NO ONE who saw Maciste, the giant slave of "Cabiria" and the amazing hero of "The Warrior," is ever going to forget him. He is being featured in a new picture called "The Liberator," a twenty-four reel serial that is to be released in twelve two-reel episodes by Harry Raver, on the state rights plan. The story is credited to Agnes Fletcher Bain. Giovani Pastrone, producer of "Cabiria," directed the picture, which was made in Italy.

"The Liberator" is difficult to classify. It is called a continued story by its promotors, and no effort has been made to give each episode the regulation serial ending. The biggest drawing card connected with it is the presence of "Maciste" at the head of the cast. He is such a magnificent, not to say, overwhelming, specimen of manhood and goes through his stunts with so much ingenuous zeal and self-satisfaction that it is impossible not to enjoy and applaud everything he does.

His support is also of excellent quality, and the production is one of unusual thoroughness and strict conformity to the actual scene. Imposing exteriors of palaces, quaint village streets, massive architectural effects, lofty and impressive interiors, old stone bridges, inside views of an Italian circus—glimpses of life in the land of Garibaldi are reproduced by the man who created "Cabiria" with a fidelity that makes this feature of the picture a constant delight.

Neither is there any lack of incident in the story. It abounds with characters that are always acted with skill, Mark Albro, Anatole Froyez, Dorian Gerain, Julian Bernard, Italia Manzini and Eduarde Davesnes being among the more prominent. The variety of its theatrical fare is quite astonishing. Melodroma, emotional drama, comedy, farce, comic and bewildering stunts are all introduced. In fact, it gives the impression of three stories rolled into one in order that "Maciste" may have as many opportunities as possible to escape from traps, toss strong men about like tenpins, lift heavy weights as if they were a baby's toys, punish the rogues and succor the weak and innocent and amuse the spectator with his prodigious strength and his ingratiating smile.

One of the things to be said against the picture is that it does not contain enough of the big fellow. The other is that the plot is too much involved to obtain the best results for a story told in twelve numbers. On the other hand, its novelty, foreign atmosphere, fine acting and "Maciste" may more than counterbalance any want of constructive perfection. Ernest Pagano is "Maciste's" right name.

"THE MYSTERY GIRL"

Ethel Clayton in Paramount Screen Version of a George Barr McCutcheon Romance.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ADMIRERS of the George Barr McCutcheon school of romance, in which a manly young American woos and weds a titled beauty of some mythical kingdom in Europe, will find "The Mystery Girl" to their liking. This five-part Paramount production of McCutcheon's "Green Fancy" was adapted to the screen by Marion Fairfax and directed by William C. DeMille, with Ethel Clayton as the heroine.

Matters get under way rapidly. The mystery girl is the Countess Therese, who is engaged in driving an ambulance on the French front and is known as "Driver 477," Prince Sebastian, her uncle, ruler of Lurania, has defied the Kaiser and is now in hiding. Therese has the crown jewels, and the prince sends her word by pigeon post that he has completed his plans to escape to America, and for her to join him there with the gems. Prince Ugo, a pretender to Sebastian's throne, also wants to get hold of the jewels and Therese. He strikes a bargain with Chester Naismith, known as the cleverest thief in Europe. Naismith agrees to help him get the girl, but is to keep the jewels for himself.

Captain Barnes, an American officer who has a "tobacco heart," falls in love with "Driver 477," and when she arrives in America he turns up at the right time to help her out of serious trouble. Sebastian goes to "Green Fancy," Spanish Falls, Me., and occupies an old mansion on the outskirts of the village. The adventures that take place here after Ugo and his followers arrive include the murder of Sebastian's equerry, the stealing of the jewels by Naismith and the introduction of a troupe of stranded actors to assist Captain Barnes defeat the rogues. Ugo is killed while trying to kidnap the Countess, the gems are recovered and Therese and her American husband go back to France and take up their old work for the cause of the Allies.

"The Mystery Girl" is not a perfect example of a moving picture story. There are too many threads to the plot and the continuity skips a few stitches. It is well produced and acted, however, and Ethel Clayton is entirely satisfactory as the Countess. Henry Woodward as Captain Barnes, Clarence Burton as Prince Ugo, Charles Wets as Chester Naismith, Maym Kelso as Mercedes and Parks Jones as Ferdussi are the other members of the cast.

"THE GOOSE GIRL"

Paramount Reissues Old Release with Marguerite Clark in the Title Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE story of a king in this day of no kings who marries a "goose girl," really a princess who has been abducted during infancy by stage gypsies, has a decidedly theatrical and artificial aspect in this day of splendid realities, the subject matter out of tune with the spirit of our people, who are looking forward rather than backward, and no challenge to present-day intelligence at that. It may please a few children and those of childish minds, but unless the supply is far below the demand for pictures, these reissues should be confined to stories whose subject matter is still vital, in which there is at least a trace of logic and common sense. They will certainly not add to the reputation of the star, nor to that of a house whose standard has advanced far beyond these products of other days.

"MISS AMBITION"

Corinne Griffith's Acting Is Great Help to Vitagraph Five-Part Picture.

Revlewed by Edward Weitzel.

REX TAYLOR, the author of "Miss Ambition," a five-part Vitagraph picture starring Corinne Griffith, has not made a very profound study of life. His heroine displays little depth of character, but learns before the end of the story that riches alone can not bring happiness. The incidents are fairly well put together, but several of them are not at all convincing. The picture is a safe one for a family theatre. Corinne Griffith as the heroine is a great help to the story. Her sympathetic personality and the sincerity of her acting win the spectator from the start. A brief flash of her in scanty drapery, as she recalls the time she posed for a statue of Ambition, is out of place in this picture.

"Miss Ambition" is the romance of a poor young girl. Marta earns her living with a sewing machine and is content to love Larry Boyle, who is just starting to make his way in the world, until she is offered a situation as maid in a wealthy family. Here she meets a sculptor and is prevailed upon to pose for him. This leads to an introduction to a wealthy old man, who offers her marriage. Marta accepts. She and her husband soon find out the mistake they have made. The husband is killed by being crushed under the statute for which his wife posed, and Marta commences to think again of the man she once loved. Larry is a contractor now, and Marta secretly turns over to him all the money she has left from her husband's fortune, so that her old lover can complete an important piece of work. When Larry discovers this he repays her by making her Mrs. Boyle.

Henry Houry has directed the picture with good judgment. Walter McGrail as Larry, Betty Blythe as Edith Webster and Templer Saxe as Dudley Kelland are the leading members of a capable cast.

"LOVE'S PAY DAY"

Rosemary Theby Is Miscast in Triangle Picture of New England Fisher-Folk Life.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is considerable new material in "Love's Pay Day," a Triangle picture written by L. V. Jefferson and directed by Mason Hopper, but the selection of Rosemary Theby for the part of the heroine was a mistake. She is a clever actress, and her work in several releases of recent date prove the truth of the statement. As the female spy in "The Great Love" and the revengeful East Indian Princess in "The Silent Mystery," she shows her mastery of this line of parts. Judith, the simple village girl of "Love's Pay Day," is not suited to her personality. Quiet intensity is Rosemary Theby's forte. The portrayal of so unsophisticated a heroine as Judith Bretans requires a different class of acting. Understanding and earnestness are not sufficient to score a success.

The story of "Love's Pay Day" is melodramatic. Its characters are mostly primitive types, and there is no lack of physical action as the plot is unfolded. The scenes along the coast are often strikingly picturesque, and Mason Hopper has kept the tempo of the acting from lagging behind. Judith is engaged to Jean Laroque, the owner of the only packing plant in the village. She is not contented with her prospects in life, however, and on the night of the wedding runs away from the feast with papers intrusted to her by her husband and goes to George Wilton, the representative of a New York fish concern that wants to buy out Jean. The newly-made wife turns her husband's business over to Wilton, and he is trying to embrace Judith when Jean enters the room. He almost kills Wilton, casts off his wife and leaves the village to start life over again. The rest of the story is devoted to the punishment of Wilton and the final reconciliation of Judith and Jean.

Pete Morrison has the build and the strength of mind for the character of Jean. He is the rough, but honest-hearted, fisherman at all times. Other parts are well played by Billy Dale, Lillian West, Alberta Lee, John Lince and Hervey Clarke.

"THE PRODIGAL WIFE"

Screencraft Picture Featuring Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton Has Strong Emotional Appeal.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

NO MOVING PICTURE has ever been produced that so well deserves to be called the "East Lynne" of the screen as does "The Prodigal Wife." This Screencraft Pictures production, adapted from Edith Barnard Delano's story, "Flaming Ramparts," by Eve Unsell, and directed by Frank Richter, has the strong emotional appeal which gave long life to the celebrated stage drama and made so many actresses anxious to attempt the role of the unhappy heroine. Marion Farnham is another Lady Isabel, and the fatal error made by both women leads to the same harvest of tears and vain regrets.

Thanks to the intelligent and always adequate efforts of Mary Boland, Lucy Cotton, Director Richter, and their associates, the story of "The Prodigal Wife" is told on the screen with perfect clearness and compelling emotional power. It has the upward sweep of genuine drama, and no footage is wasted in wandering off into picturesque but diverting side tracks. Its story has often been repeated in fiction and in real life, but its theme will never lose its interest or its moral influence.

The woman who deserts her husband and child through fancied neglect, and learns, too late, the terrible consequences of her mistake, is shown in "The Prodigal Wife" with as much originality as the many versions of the theme will permit. Marion Fairfax, the wife of a struggling young physician, leaves her husband and her four-year-old daughter and runs away with Thomas Byrne, because he promises her the love and attention she fancies is denied her. For the next fourteen years she lives the life of a social outcast, sinking lower and lower as she is forced to accept the companionship of the different men who are attracted to her.

In the meantime her husband has become famous and wealthy, and has brought up his daughter to believe her mother died and to revere her memory. When the girl, Mona, is married and about to make the same mistake which wrecked her mother's happiness, the prodigal wife, who has put her past behind her and, unknown, is employed as a nurse in her daughter's home, saves the young mother from deserting her husband and child. The doctors learns of this and his heart softens toward the repentant woman. He offers to give her back her old place in his home. Marion will not accept. Mona must never know the truth; she must retain her ideal of her mother. Husband and wife part forever.

"THE ONE WOMAN"

Photoplay by Thomas Dixon and Harry Chandlee Is a Deftly Constructed Sex Drama.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SEX and not Socialism is the foundation of "The One Woman," a five-part story by Thomas Dixon and Harry Chandlee, scenario by E. Richard Schayer. Reginald Barker directed the production. It has more than average commercial merit. The material is developed cleverly and there are many worthy people who care only for emotional appeal of moving picture fiction with whom the overdrawn sentiment and weak-kneed logic will pass for the real thing. Excellent acting by the entire cast, artistic direction by Reginald Barker and the employment of several sure-fire situations of the dramatist will insure the picture an interested following.

Its appearance in any theatre is bound to excite discussion. The admirers of the Thomas Dixon novels will be among its strongest supporters. Friends of Socialism will condemn it for its one-sided arguments; the man who cares to look beneath its surface will find only a sex drama in which the chief character, fortunately for the good of humanity, is of an extremely rare type.

A little religion is a dangerous thing for a minister of the gospel. The Rev. Frank Gordon mistakes animalism for inspiration and proves by his acts that a badly balanced brain which panders to sensationalism and theatric display can work a power of harm in the pulpit. Blessed by being the possessor of a devoted wife and two beautiful children, he permits a belief in Socialism to bring him the disfavor of the trustees of his church. When publicly rebuked for preaching his newly acquired doctrine from the pulpit he strips off his vestments, casts them at the foot of the alter and completes his denouncement of the present social order in his shirtsleeves.

Forced to resign his charge, he persuades his wife to divorce him, enters into a common law marriage with a woman who gives him a million dollars with which to build a Temple of Man, finds out that his socialistic followers are as difficult to manage as a cage of howling hyenas and that it is as easy for his soul mate to tire of him and throw him over for a new lover as it was for him to abandon his wife and children.

The minister comes upon a passionate embracing scene just after he has been thrown out of his Temple by his flock. He sails into the dispoiler of his honor and ends by choking him to death. He is tried and convicted of murder and is pardoned by the governor at the earnest entreaty of his former wife, who has lived with the conviction that the man she has never ceased to love will one day come back to her. The last scene shows him kneeling at his wife's feet and embracing the children. In a moment of righteous indignation the forgiving woman called him a common cur. It would be interesting to know the son's opinion of his father if the boy grows up and learns the truth.

The story is lightened by the presence of the minister's two children, who are delightfully played by Ben Alexander and Mary Jane Irving. Lawson Butt as the Rev. Frank Gordon, Clara Williams as Kate Ransom, Herschel Mayall as Mark Overman, Adda Gleason as Ruth Gordon, and Thurston Hall as Governor Morrison are the adult members of the exceptionally able cast. The photographic work of Clyde De Vinna is finely executed.

"THE NARROW PATH"

Five-Reel Astra-Pathe Extra Selected Photoplay Features Fannie Ward.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, adapted for the screen by Ouida Bergere and Jack Cunningham from A. H. Woods' play of the same name, is a well-made offering with strong dramatic moments. The subtitles have a slightly melodramatic flavor, but the action and presentation are in line with straight drama and very effective throughout. The story has a strong sex interest, but is one of the best of its kind and will no doubt appeal to almost any audience.

Fannie Ward is cast in the role of Marion Clark, a pretty manicurist in a large barber's shop with modern appointments. She is in love with a newspaper man, Dick Strong, impersonated by W. E. Lawrence. She and Dick live at the same boarding house, where the latter's invalid mother and sister, Gladys, also live. The latter plays an important part in the story and the role has been cleverly handled by Irene Aldwyn.

There is considerable novelty in the situations in this number, which gets entirely away from the conventional treatment usually found in this type of story. The young manicurist finds her name heavily involved in a public scandal, not through her own actions, but in trying to save the reputation of Gladys, the sister of her lover. Gladys has fallen in with a fast girl at the boarding house, who leads her into bad company. Gladys is victimized by a married man, and it is while trying to get justice for the girl that the heroine herself becomes entangled in the scandal. There are numerous moments of high interest and the number on the whole reflects careful attention to details.

Others in the cast are Sam De Grasse, Mary Alden and Antrim Short.

"AFTER THE WAR"

Grace Cunard Star of a Problem Drama That Reflects Woman's Greatest War Burden.

Review by Walter K. Hill.

HERE will very likely be scores of pictures approaching, from many angles, the theme advanced by "After the War," but the feature in which Grace Cunard is starred is the first of the procession and has that much of an advantage for exhibitors. Make no mistake as a result of the title. "After the War" solves no diplomatic problems, disposes of no class or faction in the aftermath of war. It is simply a problem found in the back-wash of war.

Grace Cunard plays the role of a woman who has gained fame in foreign opera. The war is over. The singer moves in aristocratic Parisian circles where meet the diplomats and men and women of artistic tastes. There is a whisper of her past, and this "suspicion" moves from vagueness to reality when the cry of a babe is heard in the singer's home where nobility and society has assembled at a reception.

The German ambassador has awakened his wife's jealousy because of his open attentions addressed to the singer. The wife carries her jealousies into the singer's home, accusing the girl of unwomanly conduct. The singer lets the wife listen while the German husband pleads to be accepted, and when the parentage of the singer's child is disclosed during the conversation the wife shoots her spouse dead in his tracks.

There has come into the singer's life the love of her youth, back from war and famed for his valor. The singer tells him their lives may never be blended into happy reunion—because of the Hun child she must support and cherish. When the father of the child is shot the wife who killed him comes to the singer and begs that she may be permitted to adopt the nameless child. Thus is removed the principal excuse for the singer's reluctance to wed her first love. The man contemplates the wreck of war, considers how the singer surrendered to save his own life—and the fade-out visions a happy future for the pair.

Shorn of the many interesting details and scenes that supply the completed action of the plot, there is the story of "After the War." The child born of brute force lives to torture its mother; its presence on earth causes the death of its father. No matter how the picture would end there will be a certain element that will not be satisfied with the outcome. The problem is there, skillfully handled, and presented as the issue that is torturing the lives of thousands of French and Belgian women to-day. The problem will live while present generations last; it will be met in real life by those who have suffered and who will bear their burden.

Grace Cunard gives a remarkably fine performance in the leading role. Exhibitors and picture patrons who know her best as a dare-devil queen of Universal serials, or as the prime mover in melodramas from the same source, will be surprised at the transition in the art of acting that totals such a fine portrayal. Edward Cecil makes a manly and sincere hero; Herbert Prior plays the villain in the case with credit to himself, and the acting of Dora Rogers in the heavy role results in splendid conclusions. Gertrude Aster, Harry Carter, L. M. Wells and Gretchen Lederer are players of prominence in their profession who fill in the details of an excellent cast. The production is made in good taste and with completeness of detail.

"THE HELL CAT"

Geraldine Farrar Shows Artistic Advancement as Western Heroine of Goldwyn Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN many respects Geraldine Farrar's impersonation of Panchita O'Brien in "The Hell Cat" is the finest achievement of her screen career. Willard Mack has taken her measure accurately and furnished the versatile opera-screen star with a story that gives her a new character for her list of moving picture creations and permits her to add a fresh face to the types of Western heroines. The doings of the men and women that people "The Hell Cat" depart but little from a familiar and well-tested trail, but they are guided by a keen dramatic sense and a resourcefulness that knows how to avoid every pitfall along the way.

No Goldwyn production has been more completely satisfying. Taken in Wyoming, the locations are impressively authentic, most of the exteriors having great pictorial beauty. There are stretches of fertile valley and vistas of towering mountain and distant sky that stamp themselves on the memory by reason of their broad sweep of line and grandeur of composition.

Primitive passion is the keynote of the plot. An untamed savage of a man, swayed by animal instincts, powerful of build and proud of his strength, conceives an intense desire for a young woman, the daughter of a neighboring ranchman. When she spurns his bold advances he murders her father, takes her to his own home and subjects her to the deepest indignity against womanhood. She leads him to believe she is ready to accept her fate. At the first opportunity she buries a dagger in his heart.

Told briefly, the story seems repellent. Willard Macks' skill as a dramatist and the deft efforts of the director, Reginald Barker, supplemented by the fine acting of Geraldine Farrar and Tom Santschi, lift the scenes of the girl's abasement and revenge beyond any possibility of offense. The art of suggestion, and also the art of omission, are employed with the utmost effectiveness. The killing of Jim Dyke is a lesson in efficient surprise and the value of utilizing the spectator's sense of imagination. A tender and steadfast love motive leaves the sorely tried girl in the arms of the man whose devotion will help her to forget the past.

In order to bestow upon Panchita O'Brien the fierce desire to avenge her own wrongs, the author has given her a Spanish mother and an Irish father. Geraldine Farrar has taken advantage of this condition of birth to dress the part in an unconventional but picturesque fashion. All through her performance she presents a figure that is pleasing to the eye and out of the ordinary.

Reference must once more be made to the Jim Dyke of Tom Santschi. Its artistic truth cannot be discredited in any particular. Milton Sills as Sheriff Jack Webb demonstrates his right to be in such goodly company. William W. Black as the father of Panchita, and Evelyn Axzell as Wan-e-mee, complete a cast in which there is no jarring note. Percy Hilburn was the cameraman.

"The Hell Cat" is melodrama raised to the Belasco standard.

"THE MAN OF BRONZE"

Five-Reel World-Pleture Presents Lewis S. Stone in Story of East and West.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel story, "The Man of Bronze," might almost be classed as a Western production, since most of the action occurs on the plains of Arizona. There are some scenes in the East, whence the girl heroine comes to study art, but the main events occur on the plains. The story itself, which was written by Karl K. Coolidge and directed by David M. Hartford, contains more and better plot material than the average of its type, but the development of the number is not what it might have been to bring out the full interest.

Lewis S. Stone gives an adequate and convincing portrayal of the cattleman-hero, John Adams. He makes the most of the two best dramatic opportunities afforded, one where he goes East to bring back Mary and finds her preoccupied and uncertain in her love, the other where he succumbs to bitter disappointement and burns up the new home he had built for her. It is seldom that stories of the Western type develop situations with so much real feeling in them, and it is too bad the production as a whole was permitted to drag so much in its general action. On the whole it is a simple picture narrative, without the suspense it might have had.

Briefly, the plot concerns a young cattleman very much in love with the daughter of his partner. She goes East to pursue her art studies, and when the hero goes for her she fails to return with him. Later, when she finds out the truth about the sculptor, who made a bronze statue of the hero and then stole the girl's affections, Mary does return West, just in time to help save the hero's land from others. In the meantime she had another offer of marriage from a widower who also figures in the general plot. The ending is of a semi-humorous nature and quite pleasing.

Others in the cast are Marguerite Clayton, Richard Cummings, Harry Von Meter and May Gaston.

"FIVE THOUSAND AN HOUR"

Hale Hamilton Makes Initial Appearance as Metro Star in Pleasing Comedy.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

AS Johnny Gamble, a chap who lives up to his name, Hale Hamilton makes his initial appearance as a Metro star in "Five Thousand an Hour," released November 25. He has a pleasing screen personality and is an excellent comedian. The production, which is based on George Randolph Chester's novel of the same title, is an enjoyable one and provides excellent entertainment, particularly for those who are familiar with the Chester stories. This is not Mr. Hamilton's first appearance in this author's works, as he has previously appeared in the stage version of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford."

The production, which is a rapid fire one, has been skillfully directed by Ralph Ince, and deals with a young man who is almost down to his last dollar through the crooked work of a former associate. He wins $5,000 on a long shot at a race track, meets a girl with whom he falls in love, and on learning that she will lose a fortune of one million dollars unless she marries a business rival of his within six weeks, determines to make a million in that time, at the rate of $5,000 for each working hour. The manner in which he accomplishes this feat and wins the girl has been well handled, and although the story lacks in plausibility a rapid pace is kept up throughout.

The leading role fits Mr. Hamilton well, and not only in the lighter moments, but throughout the production his work is fine. Lucille Lec Stewart is attractive as Constance Joy, and the remainder of the large cast, including Florence Short, Isabel O'Madigan, Gilbert Douglas, Robert Whittier and others are satisfactory in their respective roles.

"ONCE TO EVERY MAN"

Jack Sherrill and Mabel Withee Are Co-Stars in Stirring Drama of Good Purpose.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE Frohman Amusement Company, of which William L. Sherrill is the alpha and omega, has constructed a fine piece of moving picture property in "Once to Every Man," a feature in which Jack Sherrill is co-starred with Mabel Withee. Of Mr. Sherrill much in his favor is known in film circles; but a word of introduction for Miss Withee is necessary in bringing her to screen prominence. She has been for a long time prominently concerned in Al Jolson's Winter Garden productions, and has won favor on the road as Mr. Jolson's leading woman.

Miss Withee is seen for the first time upon the screen in "Once to Every Man" and may be credited with an artistic and thoroughly adequate performance in a role that serves as the inspiration for Jack Sherrill's character of a youth who fought a moral and physical fight and won hands down. The opportunity that is credited with knocking once at every man's door is the basis of a plain and straightforward plot that builds into an interesting and rugged entertainment.

The young hero has been left the heritage of an appetite for drink. The lumber camp where most of the action takes place is the scene of the young man's fight against the craving for rum, and the girl who helps the youth to fight his battles is directly responsible for his ultimate triumph, not alone over his inherent weakness, but over the fistic champion, whom he downs in a stirring ring battle.

It is this prize fight that climaxes a series of red-blooded episodes and stand-up fights the young hero engages in while hewing his way through adversity in the rugged surroundings of the lumber camp. Despite his efforts to fight off the cravings for drink, the young man's sweetheart is not utterly convinced of his success. When news c mes to the camp that a local "scrapper" has won fame as a prize fighter, our hero decides to go to New York, chaperoned by an interested sporting writer, and wrest the championship from the new title-holder. This he does, and at the instant of his wavering in the ring comes a message of cheer from his sweetheart back in the lumber camp. This settles it; our hero takes new courage and strength, goes into the final round and wallops his way to victory. Little remains to be done after the final punch—the reunion of loving hearts makes the happy ending so much desired.

There is an interesting story, told in interesting detail without any questionable angle or ultra-sensational effects. It's a stand-up-and-fight picture; a type of entertainment that will interest every class of screen follower. For all the world loves a lover who fights and wins the girl of his choice. Walkovers in love affairs don't amount to much in anybody's estimation.

T. Hayes Hunter has directed the picture with fine vision. He tells his story without delaying details or needless trips across the side-lines. The plot is unfolded in a speedy and direct forcefulness that leads to the best possible measure of entertainment. The titles have been done by Joe Farnham, and splendidly done. They are among the delights of the occasion.

"MY COUSIN"

Paramount Presents Enrico Caruso in Dual Roles, Himself and His Cousin, Both Interpreted with the Skill of a Remarkable Actor.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHEN Caruso appears on the screen he must be judged according to its art, not that of grand opera, and he scores an unqualified success within the narrow limitations of a mere vehicle. The story is that of a poor cousin of a great opera singer who brags of the relation and is ridiculed on that account in "Little Italy" until the great tenor comes there during a festa and proves it is true. There is a slender thread of love story, but practically no dramatic opportunity except that created by the artist in a revelation of his many-sided temperament. Magnificence of treatment helps materially in the matter of convincing atmosphere, some of the scenes of a grand opera audience being presented on a superb scale. Then an admirable choice of types rounds out and completes a satisfactory presentation. When to this is added the skill of a Rothapfel in enhancing effects, there is small wonder that the Rivoli audience warmly approved.

The most interesting feature of Caruso's two impersonations is the view he gives of what is known as "temperamental" in human nature, himself one of the most illustrious examples on earth. His strenuosity, its emotionalized support, his weakness of purpose under slight discouragement, his lapses into gloom and indifference, then the reactions with their tremendous appeal of ardour, native feeling and strength, these constitute a revelation well worth watching, for they are plainly true of the great artist himself. As the poor cousin, he is his weaker and more charming self, sensitive, impressionable, impetuous, a man easily moved by sympathy, jealousy and anger, amiable and magnanimous one moment, suspicious, hostile and despairing another, and all this is most carefully maintained in contrast to the great artist at the zenith of success, cynically humorous, bored by those who come to him for help in their hopeless attempts at a "career," weary of empty plaudits, yet of unspoiled dignity and sweetness, the whole constituting one of the most remarkable revelations of character ever shown on the screen.

COMMENTS

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

ALL NIGHT (Bluebird).—A five-reel subject, based on a story by Edgar Franklin, and directed by Paul Powell. Carmel Myers, William Dyer and others are in the cast. This number contains a mixture of straight comedy and farce, but though the plot ingredients are promising, it fails to develop much humor. The production is below the Bluebird standard. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

THE MYSTERY GIRL (Paramount).—Ethel Clayton is the heroine of this screen version of a George Barr McCutcheon novel. As the Countess Therese the star is first discovered driving an ambulance on the French front. An American officer falls in love with her and helps defeat her enemies, when the action is transferred to this country. The picture is well acted. A longer review is printed in this issue.

CAPRICE (Paramount).—A Success Series reissue, this five-part picture was one of Mary Pickford's early hits. It was made four years ago, and Owen Moore is a member of the cast. As Mercy Baxter the star portrays an awkward little country girl who marries a city chap and finds his love grows cold when he realizes how uneducated and shy his wife is before strangers. Mercy leaves her husband, goes off to boarding school, acquires a polish and comes back and dazzles her own lord and master. The trouble is patched up and Mercy goes back home with her husband. "Caprice" is a simple little story and an interesting example of a 1915 best seller, and of how the moving picture has improved since it was made.

Fox Film Corporation.

FAN FAN (Fox).—Promoted as an extravaganza, "Fan Fan" is really a delightful dramatic entertainment, largely acted by children, with Virginia Lee Corbin, a dainty and artistic leading lady, and Francis Carpenter, a manly and admirable leading male. There is the best of entertainment here for both children and grown-ups. The atmosphere of Japan is pleasingly conveyed to the screen, and in every scene and incident there is delightful entertainmnt. Book it and rejoice—for your patron will hail you as a benefactor and your house will advance in their esteem.

ALI BABA (Fox).—Save for mentioning George Stone and Gertrude Messinger as the leading players, this play by children for both children and grown-ups may be equally coupled with the comment above, as applying to "Fan Fan." William Fox has done the screen a great service in picturing these two delightful little romances. In production and presentation both "Ali Baba" and "Fan Fan" are flawless. They are each a rare treat in a screen way.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE TIDE OF DEATH (Vitagraph).—The finish of this number of the Vitagraph serial, "The Iron Test," is a real thriller. Bert and Edith are bound together and lowered over a high cliff into the water. The tide is racing in, and the water climbs up slowly but surely around them as they hang there helpless. The events leading up to this situation keep the interest tense.

MISS AMBITION (Vitagraph).—Corinne Griffith is a tower of strength to this five-part picture, written by Rex Tayler. The plot is faulty in places, but the acting helps to bridge this over. Henry Houry was the director. A longer review is printed in this issue.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

BORROWED CLOTHES (Jewel-Lois Weber).—A six-reel emotional story, featuring Mildred Harris, now the wife of Charlie Chaplin. The production, which was made by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley from a story by Marion Orth, is a strong one of its kind. The theme is not altogether pleasant, but the presentation is delicate and forceful and the cast shows much acting ability. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Mutual Film Corporation.

PEAKS, PARKS AND PINES (Rothacker).—This is the best thus far of the Outdoors series being released by the Mutual Film Corporation. It takes the spectator through Ranier National Park, the camera following at times the automobile road through the forest past waterfalls and other beauties of the park. A nice view of the Tatoosh range is included and also views of a glacier well up toward the peak of old Mount Ranier.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 75 (Mutual).—This issue contains interesting material, including a brief illustration of the binder twine industry. The usual series of current events is presented, including scenes of patriotic interest with Uncle Sam's soldiers.

JUST HOME MAID (Strand).—This little comedy, featuring Elinor Field, is not a fair sample. It is perfectly harmless in type, but fails to present situations either comic or consistent. The story is of a young couple who lived in a small California flat. The wife, wishing to earn some money to help get a larger home, goes to an employment bureau and is immediately engaged as cook. The house she is sent to happens to be one in which her husband is entertaining some western friends.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

ALL THE WORLD TO NOTHING (American-Pathe).—A six-part comedy number, written by Wyndham Martyn and directed by Henry King. William Russell plays the role of a profligate young man who loses his fortune in a poker game and later makes good. This contains considerable humor and is on the whole an entertaining subject. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, NO. 22 (Pathe).—This number opens with views of Britain's batteries speeding forward over French roads. It pictures also transportation by canals in Flanders. Quizzing captives for information is an interesting subject; also the big tank feature at the close.

THE ORACLE'S DECREE (Pathe).—Episode No. 14 of "Hands Up." A strong feature of this installment is Echo being rescued from the den of lions, she having been separated from the beats only by the burning oil. As the day of the prophecy approaches, she is again captured by the Incas and taken to the temple. In the latter there is a general fight between the various conflicting forces, during which Two-Gun Carter shoots Killman and puts an end to his career.

IN THE HANDS OF THE HUN (Pathe).—Episode No. 8 of "Wolves of Kultur." This number is full of action, but contains no big scenes, until toward the close when Alice is suspended over the edge of a cliff by Zaremba. The opening part shows the rescue of Barclay by his assitant, Helen, and pictures the manner in which Alice once more fell into the power of the chief spy.

HEAR 'EM RAVE (Rolin-Pathe).—A comic number, featuring Harold Lloyd, assisted by Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. The action in this number occurs in a beauty shop, where Harold performs some amazing stunts at rejuvenating customers. This is characteristic and has some laughs in it.

Harry Raver.

THE LIBERATOR (Raver).—A twelve-episode, two-reel continued story with the Italian giant "Maciste" as the star, this picture is splendidly acted and produced and contains a long list of the big fellow's stunts. An extended review is printed on another page of this issue.

Screencraft Pictures Corporation.

THE PRODIGAL WIFE (Screencraft).—Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton are the stars of this five-part picture founded on Edith Barnard Delano's story, "Flaming Ramparts." It is full of emotional power and should have a marked success. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

LOVE'S PAY DAY (Triangle).—New England fisher folk are the principal characters in this five-part picture. It is melodramatic and full of action. Rosemary Theby plays the leading part. A longer review appears in this issue.

Universal Film Company.

THE FICKLE BLACKSMITH (Nester).—A character comedy, by W. Warren Schoene, enacted in burlesque style. Ralph McComas, Eileen Sedgwick and Doley Ohnet appear. The story centers about the love affairs of a young blacksmith, who deserts his own sweetheart for an artist's model. The latter turns out to be married. The subject runs along in a fairly entertaining manner, though none of it rises above the average.

THE HUSBAND HUNTED (Western).—A splendid three-reel ranch comedy, by W. A. Lathrop, featuring Neal Hart, Ann Kronan, Joe Rickson, Countess Du Cello and Caroline Vaughn. This contains a wealth of clear photography and an abundance of picturesque scenes. The plot itself is slow in movement, but well above the average and the presentation is unusually good. This sets a new record for this type of comedy and is certain to please.

EVIL WATERS (Universal), Oct. 19.—Episode No. 11 of "The Brass Bullet." This is one of the strongest installments yet made. It contains many exciting incidents, all directed in fine style. This serial has not the imaginative interest of certain others, but is strong in melodramatic action. This winds up with Rosalind in danger of death from drowning.

ON TRIAL FOR HIS LIFE (Universal), Nov. 9.—Episode No. 14 of "Brass Bullet." This installment is a gripping one. Rosalind makes her escape from the blackmailers' headquarters, but Jack is taken prisoner and held for the murder of Homer Joy. There is good suspense over the effort to bring "Pop" Bates to the trial as a witness, and the burning of the bridge over the gap by the gang.

THE SHADOW OF THE SCAFFOLD (Universal), Nov. 16.—Episode No. 15 of "The Brass Bullet." After the leap over the gap in an automobile, "Pop" Bates is brought to the court to testify. Some good melodramatic scenes follow, in which Pop's testimony is rendered worthless by his exhibition of animus against Gilbert. The trial scenes in this and the preceding installment are very well done.

THE BRASS BULLET, No. 16 (Universal Serial), Nov. 23.—This opens with a struggle between "Pop" Bates and the aviator, and Mrs. Strang's remorse over her testimony, which resulted in sending Jack to the chair. The principal scenes picture the chase to catch the train on which the governor is speeding, in order to hold up the execution. Jack is shown on the scaffold at the close.

THE MYSTERIOUS AVENGER (Universal), Nov. 30.—Episode No. 17 of "The Brass Bullet." This is a very strong installment, in fact one of the best seen in serials for a long time. It shows the rescue of Jack from the gallows by the mysterious aviator and his subsequent drop in a parachute. The aeroplane is brought to earth by a long-range gun. All this is splendidly handled and very effective.

World Pictures Corporation.

HITTING THE TRAIL (World Picture).—A five-reel subject, written by Roy Summerville and directed by Dell Henderson. The cast includes Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, Muriel Ostriche and Joseph Smiley. The story is a melodrama of the East Side and deals with real slum life. The melodramatic incidents are well-handled, but there is not much suspense on the whole. It makes an offering of about average strength. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

"THE STRANGE WOMAN"

William Fox Presents Gladys Brockwell in a Screen Version of William J. Hurlburt's Striking Stage Play of Free Love and What It Meant in a Small Town.

Cast.

Inez de Pierrefond.....Gladys Brockwell
The Baron.....Charles Clary

Ruby LaFayette

Henry McMasters....William Hutchinson
The Princess .....Miss Gerard Grassby

Directed by Edward J. LeSaint.

The Story: The town of Delphi, Ia., is provincial and contains diversified types. The son of the house of Hemingway, a manly and ambitious young fellow, has been abroad studying architecture. There he meets Inez de Pierrefond, a girl who, though born in America, has spent most of her life in Europe. The young couple find they have much in common and their engagement follows. Inez is a woman of intellect, charm and brilliance. She is the apostle of the newest views of life, particularly where marriage is concerned. She is not a "new woman," but is opposed to taking a life-long marriage vow. To Delphi John Hemingway brings Inez and introduces her as his intended bride. The play results from this woman and her ideas being landed in the narrow community, and the outcome is entirely unexpected.

Feature Gladys Brockwell as Inez de Pierrefond, and William Scott as John Hemingway.

Program and Advertising Aids: How a Touch of Parisian High Society Raised Hob with the Old Folks at Home.
Paris Fashions Strangely Contrast with the Ginghams of Iowa.
Rural Community Greatly Upset by Imported Theories on Morals.
Gladys Bockwell Star of Sensational Morality Photodrama.
Bringing a Touch of Parisian High Life Into a Country Town.

Advertising Angles: Play up the star and give plenty of space to the fact that the play ran for nearly a season in New York. To open the campaign use liners hitting the high lights in the story. These can also be used for snipes or throwaways. Make it plain that the story is sensational but clean.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six-sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

Senator.....J. Barney Sherry
Frank Wheeler.....Tom Buckingham
Lola Schram.....Lenore Fair
Mrs. Schram.....Louise Lester
Jimmy Ware.....Lee Phelps
Tilly Ware.....Lucile Desmond

The Story: Jane Whiting, "the Underworld Portia," is persuaded to defer her marriage to Senator Wheeler to clear up a spurious charity scheme. She connects the Ambulance Sanitaire with Kube, a suspected German agent. Lola Schram and her mother are workers for the ambulance. Frank, Senator Wheeler's son, is in love with Lola. The coils tighten, and Kube forbids the girl to marry Frank, shooting her when she starts to confess her share in the affair. Frank is arrested for the crime, and circumstantial evidence is strong against him, but in the end Jane brings the real offender to book and clears up the entire matter.

Feature Belle Bennett as Jane and Tom Buckingham as Frank Wheeler.

Program and Advertising Phrases: How Nation Wide Hun Intrigue Was Unmasked When Its Gulse of Charity Crumbled.

Advertising Angles: This story is based upon a recent scandal in New York in which many wealthy girls were induced to enter an ambulance service, a heavy fee being demanded of them. It was shown that the money went into the pockets of the organizer. Your editor can probably locate the story in his files, and you can use this as the basis of press work. For another angle warn against indiscriminate war charity, and refer them to the play as a reason why. You can make a small sensation by first running an advertisement against war charities (carefully worded), and in a following advertisement tell why.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle magazines. Press sheets.

her so. He prevails upon the Harcourts to invite them to dinner, that he may get his chance. Harcourt gets word that a millionaire is coming to see him about supplying capital for a new scheme. He has just fired the servants in a fit of temper and the guest, Bradford, has declared that he never loans money until he sees how a man manages his own household. Dick and Bess do not know the house, so Harcourt prevails upon them to pose as the hosts while he and his wife impersonate the butler and the maid. Bradford likes the pseudo Harcourts so well he decides to stay all night. Worse that that he insists upon escorting his hosts to their room, and when he catches Dick trying to slip out again makes him go back. Bess' fire-eating father comes after her and to save the situation Dick tells Bradford that the newcomer is crazy and then tells Col. Lane that the visitor must be humored. One Night of Remarkable Adventure Leads to Lifetime of Happiness.

Advertising Angles: Here is a farce that is spicy in story without being vulgar. Play up the points and work them for all they are worth. Do not tell the full story. Just pick out the incidents and advertise them singly, both in your newspaper work and on your lobby boards. If you do not use the latter regularly, use them for this, anyway. Be careful not to get the lines too loud, but make them startling and appealing.

He dares Harold Blake, his rival, to go as his assistant. Blake takes the dare, but things grow too hot for him and he escapes to America. Bob sticks it out, gets the concession and returns to America just in time to beat up Blake, who has traduced him and who is about to marry Alice, who believes Bob dead and who is willing to marry Blake to save her father's failing fortunes.

Simplex

Consider the Evidence

Since the Projector is (or should be) a fine piece of mechanism, to perform work upon which depends the success of your undertaking, you owe it to yourself to consider all the evidence that can help you in the selection. Let us present it:

(1) The Simplex never dominated the field just because it was alone and no one had yet undertaken to build a better Machine. But it entered a closely fenced-in market with an argument of quality so convincing that it quickly grew into favor, until to-day it dominates the field of high-quality projection, proved by the fact that three out of four go to replace other makes and that it is practically the only Machine considered by the masters in the industry.

(2) When you buy a Simplex you not only buy the best make of Projector, but the best Simplex ever made as well. Our Distributor will not offer you a new Machine of an old model for the sake of getting your order on a price basis. There is but one model and one quality of Simplex—the highest.

(3) When you buy a Simplex you buy it of a man with whom doing business contains the utmost of satisfaction. He doesn't sell the Simplex because he makes most money on it; and he knows that the after-profits for repairs are almost nil. He sells the Simplex because he thinks more of his reputation than of immediate profits. He never needs to go around another street when he sees you coming. He knows he's sold you the best there is and that you appreciate it because it makes you more money than even next-to-the-best could.

Verdict: In Favor of the Simplex

How could the jury bring a different verdict, with such evidence before it?

THE PRECISION MACHINE CO. INC.
317 East 34th St. New York

Hold a dollar too close to your eye and you lose sight of the sun.

And, so you can hide the brilliancy and screen value of your negative by employing ordinary "prints."

The man who buys "prints" on mere price usually shows inferior "pictures," faulty business judgment and practices rank extravagance.

We offer quality prints and personal service at prices which represent true economy.

There are reasons—
Come and see them.

Projectionist Ray says

"Few people ever get rich entirely by their own efforts. They get others to work for 'em.

"Does your audience work for you? Mine does, 'cause I always run a Power's. After the show every one in the audience becomes a press agent for the house.

"Use a Powers and you'll have your house freely advertised also. Give the folks what they want—good pictures PROPERLY PROJECTED—and they'll give you what YOU want—a snug bank account.

"Satisfy your public and you'll have a line in front of the box office that'll make a merry jingle of the coins in your little old till.

GOLDWYN POWER

proves itself each week in the greatest theatres of the nation where are presented. The audience-attraction of these productions is due to their quality and strength, to their convincing dramatic stories and to the most popular group of stars available to exhibitors through any one company in the industry.

When President Wilson

signed the Selective Service Draft bill, he started two million young Americans overseas to victory. Now they are coming back. The story of how America's armies of Victory were made is strikingly told by in a series of eight episodes, to be released one each week—the first Pictorial Review of the making of the American soldier. It is 100 per cent. Patriotic; 100 per cent. American.

In "Made in America" Ashley Miller, the well known director, makes his debut as a producer. By special permission of the Secretary of War, Mr. Miller spent several busy weeks at one of the largest training camps in the country and as a result "Made in America" presents the only authoritative picturization of the training of the American soldier.

It will be absorbingly interesting to the soldiers. It will touch the hearts of the women folk because ts dramatic story is typical of the sacrifices and devotion of the thousands of American families and because of the original and realistic presentation in sequence and in its entirety, of the experiences of millions of young Americans.

Victory has only whetted the appetite of the American people for "Made in America." It tells how the war was won in America.

Especially when they hear about the new Paramount-Drew Comedies.

For a long, long time Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have hoped for just one thing—they wanted to take their time.

One one-reel comedy a week, they were making. Fifty-two reels a year. They were rushed to death. No wonder they took a rest.

Now, under their new arrangement with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, they are to make one two-reel comedy a month.

Twenty-four reels a year instead of fifty-two.

And they'll be, of course, vastly funnier, vastly better than the ones they made in a hurry.

Another Tremendous Goldwyn-Farrar Success is "THE HELL CAT"

THE growth of an organization in power and exhibitor-confidence is based directly upon the proved power and popularity of a producer's released productions. Prestige is built on what you have delivered; not on your promises to deliver.

Following up her nationally-popular first Goldwyn production, "The Turn of the Wheel," Geraldine Farrar now is filling the theatres of America with capacity patronage in what the critics boldly declare to be "the greatest motion picture she has ever made—THE HELL CAT."

These dynamic reviews point the way to those exhibitors who want to know what to do to help their box-offices:

N. Y. MAIL: The best motion picture Geraldine Farrar has ever had is "The Hell Cat." It is also the best Goldwyn; packed with elemental drama and passions.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: "The Hell Cat" is melodrama as David Belasco does it; a big picture of the year and the best and most powerful story Geraldine Farrar has ever had.

N. Y. HERALD: Geraldine Farrar thrilled the Strand audiences in "The Hell Cat," the strongest dramatic role this remarkable actress has ever had.

N. Y. AMERICAN: It was a clever idea to put Geraldine Farrar in a big outdoor picture of the west. A strong Willard Mack melodrama is "The Hell Cat" filled with thrilling incidents and elemental romance.

N. Y. EVE. SUN: Miss Farrar has never had a stronger picture than "The Hell Cat." Her most wonderful emotional role since she entered motion pictures.

N. Y. POST: A magnificent picture and Miss Farrar makes the most of the most suitable role of her career.

THAT'S the story of GERALDINE FARRAR in her great Goldwyn success, "THE HELL CAT," at the New York Strand—with its 3,500 seats. It takes a whale of a picture to fill this tremendous institution from pit to ceiling for a week; it takes a great production that sets the people of New York talking, and a personality of unparalleled drawing power.

All week outside the Strand a giant uniformed sentinel has been crying while keeping the block-long crowds in line: "All tickets purchased are subject to delay." This is the personal report of the Managing Director of the Strand.

Here, in additional reviews, are more reasons for the great success of "THE HELL CAT":

NEW YORK WORLD: A lively, dramatic story in which Miss Farrar delights the fans with her energetic impersonation of Pancha O'Brien.

EVENING TELEGRAM: Intensely thrilling and brimful of action is "The Hell Cat." The most powerful play in which Miss Farrar has ever appeared.

MORNING TELEGRAPH: A daring, absorbing story. Farrar is superb in this superfine production. In photography it surpasses any production in months.

EX. TRADE REVIEW: "The Hell Cat" is the strongest screen vehicle in which Geraldine Farrar has yet appeared. It is well directed, beautifully photographed and of intense melodramatic interest.

JOURNAL OF COMMERCE: The Hell Cat" affords plenty of thrills. A picture as big as Farrar's reputation.

TOLEDO BLADE: Do not miss seeing "The Hell Cat." It is the most unusual production of the season. Equal honors for Miss Farrar and Goldwyn.

EARLE WILLIAMS in "THE MAN WHO WOULDN'T TELL"

SECOND RELEASE OF THE EARLE WILLIAMS STAR SERIES

Written by Bess Meredyth

Directed by James Young

A SILENT hero in this day of silent heroism---that is the enviable role portrayed by Earle Williams in this romantic drama of secret service.

There seemed no reason why Hawtrey Burke should not have been in khaki when his country called. And yet he chose the polo field instead of the battle field, the cozy country clubhouse instead of the damp dugout.

But was there a reason why he risked even the greatest prize of all---the girl he loved, and who loved him but could not respect him? Was he taking greater chances fighting the enemy at home than the enemy abroad?

TENSION throughout---action---love interest ---mystery---suspense---these essential elements, all well blended, make "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell" one of the most powerful features in which this premier box-office star has ever appeared.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW

The Division of Films is advised that official cameramen of the British Government secured a full reel of scenes of this surrender, which in importance and in the size of the fleet given over by the Germans exceeds anything in history.

This one reel picture would bring very large prices as a "special". It will be issued in a regular number of the Official War Review.

This picture, together with many other exclusive and intensely interesting pictures, assure to exhibitors showing the Review that it will continue to be an unexcelled box office attraction. The French, British, Italian and American Governments are still taking pictures which will be found only in the Official War Review.

Francis "The

Read these Success Reviews

From The MOTION PICTURE WORLD:

"Packed with Thrills and Creepy Doings."

"The new Francis Ford Serial lives up to its title. * * * The Silent Mystery is packed with melodramatic thrills and creepy doings. * * * Francis Ford directed the story and he also plays the hero detective. * * * Everyone in the cast follows the pace set by the director. * * * The regular following of the serial will get a run for its money."

The EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW:

"Starts With a Francis Ford Wallop."

"Mystery has come to be the keynote of serial pictures, and if The Silent Mystery doesn't make your hair stand on end, and cold shivers take possession of your spinal cord, then probably you have died of fright. Sets are lavish and picturesque. The cast keeps the plot humming. It is impossible not to keep one's eyes glued to the screen. It is doubtful if an audience which is following The Silent Mystery would leave the theatre if it started to burn down around them. Such is the power of The Silent Mystery."

WID'S DAILY SAYS:

"A Full Limit of Stuff to Advertise."

"Has enough novelty, action, creepiness and kick to register as a very good serial. They certainly hand you a full limit of stuff to advertise. * * * Certainly has wild action that will cause gasps, giggles and gulps."

From THE MORNING TELEGRAPH:

"Cannot Fail to Find Favor."

'There is an atmosphere of mystery and suspense about The Silent Mystery which cannot fail to find favor with the eager and enthusiastic followers of serial productions. * * * This latest Francis Ford effort is replete with excitement and action. It would be unwise to attempt to steal forty winks during the course of the production because during that few minutes so much would have taken place that it would be difficult to take up the thread of the story again. The Silent Mystery is indeed cramfull of happenings."

From the BILLBOARD:

"The First Episode Presages Success."

"Packed with punch, a thrill to every minute, Francis Ford's latest serial, The Silent Mystery, has gone its predecessors one better of originality, continuity and gripping interest. * * * The synopsis does not convey an idea of the marvelous stunts indulged in by a company of superlative merit. The very first episode presages success, for it has a tense grip upon the emotions, and is withal logical and convincing."

From the MOVING PICTURE NEWS:

"Should Please Mightily."

"This should please mightily in every theatre that makes a practice of running serials—and especially in those localities where Francis Ford has a good following. Every episode is full of fist fights to bring the average fan to his feet many times, and the continuity is easy to follow. * * * Francis Ford is not alone in passing out the wallops. * * * It has the sustained mystery so necessary to serials."

SILENT MYSTERY"

Handle Through the Open Market the Same as All Other Unusual Productions

Productions that are too large to be handled on programs or through releasing organizations—especially huge productions like "The Silent Mystery" with its great Box-Office value—are properly sold on the open market—therefore Francis Ford's greatest serial will be handled the same way.

My first announcement of a new and greater Ford Serial brought a flood of inquiries from Program and Releasing organizations. They didn't even wait for the splendid reviews shown on the opposite page.

They Knew the Box-Office Value of a Francis Ford Serial.

Some had novel propositions to offer. There were so many that distribution was held up till they could be analyzed. But, as my associates pointed out none of them considered the Exhibitor.

After mature deliberation my associates and myself determined the most advantageous way for all was to handle this notable serial.

In the Open Market—

In this we found the Exhibitors' and State Rights buyers' views identical.

I have insisted from the first that since the fans demanded this big picture that ALL EXHIBITORS should have an equal chance to book it. And I knew then and know now that the best way to insure this was to handle it in the big way it deserves—through State Rights Buyers.

Hiller & Wilk, selling agents for the serial wish to thank the Exhibitors and State Rights men for their kindly interest. As the various territories are sold announcement of the buyers will be made through the trade papers. Watch for them.

THE BILLBOARD:
For screen entertainment it has an abundance of thrilling episodes and will delight many who like to see rapidfire action and Western atmosphere. Emmett Dalton played the trio of desperados with naturalness and a certain surety of manner that promises well for future releases.

TRADE REVIEW:
To the exhibitor who is on the lookout for a big production which will bring results in dollars and cents, and also add prestige to his theatre, Emmett Dalton's powerful screen version of his famous story is especially recommended.

Not alone is the picture well directed and well edited, but it possesses something more than this: it contains a world of human interest. Human interest is the dominating keynote of the entire production, and it is carried through in a manner which will appeal to everybody.

Why Fox Exhibitors Succeed

Fox exhibitors have a material advantage over their competitors

—they are sure of uniformly good pictures

—they are saved the embarrassment of apologizing for production shortcomings.

Fox pictures are made to a standard; then tested to see if they fit. Nothing is left to chance.

It is the Fox Idea that yesterday's experience should be made the basis of better pictures today —that it is cheaper to stand the loss of discarding productions than to market them at the cost of good-will.

This is the policy that has made VICTORY PICTURES and EXCEL PICTURES the sensation of the 1918 season.

Every production offered in either of these two series has been a little better than its predecessor, and every one that will be offered hereafter will be better than any that have gone before.

You may have thought, when you saw the first VICTORY PICTURE: Oh, well, Fox has to make the first ones right." And you may have argued with yourself that quality of this sort could not long be maintained.

But now you know better—VICTORY PICTURES are the talk of the trade—the biggest series of profit-winners, without exception, that ever have been offered the American exhibitor.

They owe their success to the Fox Idea —to the Idea that it is story, plus direction, plus star that makes a picture, and that a standard of excellence, once attained, merely represents wasted effort unless it is maintained.

VICTORY PICTURES

Tom Mix in FAME AND FORTUNE

Gladys Brockwell in THE STRANGE WOMAN

George Walsh in I'LL SAY SO

Tom Mix in TREAT 'EM ROUGH

George Walsh in LUCK AND PLUCK

Tom Mix in THE COMING OF THE LAW

GLADYS BROCKWELL, TOM MIX and GEORGE WALSH in smashing, up-to-the-second dramas, sumptuously staged, masterfully directed and packed with action, punch and popular appeal

—that's the story of VICTORY PICTURES.

And you'll find a similar appeal—similar quality—in EXCEL PICTURES.

No series of productions ever has attained the volume of bookings in a year that have been scored up for EXCEL PICTURES in the three months they have been on the market.

VIRGINIA PEARSON, PEGGY HYLAND and JANE and KATHERINE LEE have established new records for drawing power, and now these recognized and favorite stars have added to their ranks MADLAINE TRAVERSE the young woman whose marvelous character interpretation in "The Caillaux Case" brought her into national prominence almost overnight.

VICTORY and EXCEL PICTURES are the biggest "buy" in the market today.

Shows New York Visitors Never Miss

From now until after New Year's day New York's Great White Way will be black with visitors.

Their missions in the metropolis will be many and diverse, but these visitors will have at least one objective in common.

It doesn't make any difference from what station in life they come—it matters not whether they are too devout at home to countenance amusements — no, and not even is the length of their purse a consideration at this season.

every one of them—doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief, rich man, poor man, beggar, thief—each and all, from top to bottom, will see the big extravaganzas—and pay a premium for the privilege.

Why?

Because that's the one sort of entertainment they are sure they will like—

because it's a distinctively New York entertainment—or was, until William Fox conceived the Idea of making extravaganza the universal show—of transporting it throughout the country and giving to exhibitors of America the privilege of offering their patrons an exclusively New York attraction without the trouble or cost of a long railroad journey.

And the extravaganza of motion pictures, as it has been developed through the Fox Idea, is more colorful, more bewitching, more gorgeous, more fanciful and dazzling than any mere stage production, with its apparent artificiality of painted canvas, ever possibly could be.

It is the newest and most startling triumph of the camera—a triumph appropriately developed just preceding the year-end period when people's thoughts everywhere are turning naturally to amusements.

The William Fox extravaganzas are pictures made for December crowds—productions to draw business into your theatre now.

FAN FAN

A tale of old Japan—thousands of persons, lavishly costumed, in thrilling seenes of Oriental splendor—gay revels, swift action, glorious romance—all the color and charm of the East blended with a beautiful story that fills the heart with the spirit of Christmas—clean, wholesome, joyous—a happy picture for a happy time.

ALI BABA AND THE FORTY THIEVES

The greatest story of the wonderful Arabian Nights translated to the screen with all its entrancing beauty—the magnificence of ancient Persia impressively presented—the famous slave market of Teheran—gorgeous palaces, rich bazaars, quaint caravans—robber chieftains in strange rites and stirring deeds—harems, dancing girls and rippling comedy—a picture to please the holiday crowds and pull the profits.

KING TELLS HOW LONDON DOES IT

General Manager of Oswald Stoll's Film Interest Points Out Some Differences In English and American Showmanship In Distributing and Promoting Moving Pictures

By Walter K. Hill

GEORGE KING, of London, England, in an interview with a representative of the World, recently gave some interesting information on the subject of motion picture exhibition in London and the provinces. He pointed out some difference in the system of exhibiting and distributing films as compared with the practices here at home without expressing any individual opinions on the merits of either plan.

George King.

Mr. King is in America in the interest of Oswald Stoll, the English amusement provider, who has large music hall interests as well as more recent undertakings in the moving picture field. Mr. King is general manager of Mr. Stoll's film holdings, of which Jeffrey Bernard is managing director, with Mr. Stoll president. Headquarters of the Stoll screen interests are at 155 Oxford street, London, in the heart of the West End theatrical district and handy to the center of film distribution for London and the Provinces.

"The London Opera House is Mr. Stoll's largest moving picture theatre," said Mr. King. "As you know this theatre was built by Oscar Hammerstein, your own impressario, and had been unsuccessful in several lines of amusement presentations until Mr. Stoll took over the lease and began exhibiting motion pictures. The Opera House has one of the largest seating capacities of any picture theatre in England, roomy and comfortable accommodations for seating about 2,200 people being provided.

Opera House Attracts From All Over.

"The success Mr. Stoll has attained at the Opera House has been really remarkable. The theatre is situated on King's Highway, just off the Strand, on a street that has relatively little passing traffic. Your Broadway theatres have the great advantage of crowds passing their doors," said Mr. King," but the Opera House attracts its patronage from all over London, being almost continuously crowded with patrons who have left their homes for the specific purpose of seeing the pictures at the Opera House."

Mr. King stated that shows are changed twice weekly at the Opera House, the bills starting at 1:30 p. m. and running continuously until 11.30 in the evening. Approximately 14,000 feet of film are displayed in each program, the subdivisions being two super-features (where only one is customary in American shows); a news weekly, a comedy and what Mr. King calls "an Item of Interest." This latter reel would mean our "educationals." Then, too, there is a singer and a forty-piece orchestra.

Prices range from six pence (12 cents) to a guinea and a half for boxes holding three persons—a sum closely approximating $7.50 in our money. One, two and three shillings (at 24 cents a shilling) is the price of the seats from which most of the money comes. With a capacity of 2,200 these prices, paid by generally crowded houses, amounts to an exceedingly comfortable total on a week's takings.

"I have visited some of New York's dramatic theatres and the larger picture houses," said Mr. King, "and I find considerable difference in the manner in which the shows are presented, as compared to the system in London. These differences, of course, arise from the habits and customs of Englishmen when compared with Americans. We have several large and beautiful cinemas in the West End, four of them comparing in importance with your Strand, Rivoli and Rialto.

Sunday Shows Are Restricted.

"They are Marble Arch Pavilion, seating about 1,000; the New Gallery (900), West End Cinema (800) and Super Cinema (1,100), all within a relatively small radius of territory. The shows are continuous afternoon and evening, with the exception of Sunday. On that day our picture theatres are allowed to open at 6 p. m. and run continuously until 10.30. In that time we try to run through two full shows. Charity gets a large proportion of the Sunday receipts, and our employes must be paid extra—in addition to a full day off for all of them with pay, once a week. These Sunday shows are allowed in the greater part of London—but there are some of the counties within the London district that prohibit Sunday entertainments."

Asked about some of the details of showmanship Mr. King said that the full-week runs are being discouraged in all English cinemas. The tendency is to change the shows twice a week. "There is no such thing as 'pre-releasing' as practised here in America," said Mr. King. "The protection given to theatres is concerned solely in the territory where a picture is shown. There is a time protection, generally limited to three days, and never more than a week, on second runs only. Our protection system applies to territory—only one exhibitor in any given district is allowed to show films on first run. But there is no prereleasing or holding a film back or shoving its release date forward under any circumstances. The release date is the same all over London and the provinces. Sixteen theatres in London will show the same picture on first run, the same day, but only one theatre in a certain, prescribed section of the city will be given the picture on first run.

Comes to Buy American Films.

"My visit to America," continued Mr. King, "is for the purpose of securing a supply of films to exhibit in Mr. Stoll's London cinemas and also to distribute throughout the provinces—for Mr. Stoll has built up an extensive system of what you call 'exchanges' throughout England. We have already contracted for the complete output of the Goldwyn product, and I am arranging for other brands and independent release that seem available for exhibition to English audiences. Our people do not like all the films that America produces, but the stars that are popular here may be said to be the popular stars with the English 'fans.'

"Mr. Stoll's film interests include branches in Birmingham, Cardiff, Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, New Castle, Glasgow and Dublin; centres of population and points of distribution which, if you will look at the map, will appear as the central town in every district of Great Britain. These branches are all supplied from London headquarters and they, in turn, as in America, redistribute the films to showmen in their localities. We have made no attempt to keep up with the release dates of the American films we handle. The greater part of the film exhibited in England comes from the States; the war having cut off whatever sources we had from production on the Continent."

Stoll to Produce Pictures.

Here Mr. King made known that Mr. Stoll was entering upon a third branch of moving picture business—that of production. "We have engaged your American celebrity, Irene Castle, to be leading woman of Mr. Stoll's first production, now under way with Maurice Elvey directing," said Mr. King. "Mrs. Castle's leading man will be Gerald Ames, one of the 'matinee idols' of London. Other firms are producing picture, and it is likely that with the consummation of peace treaties there will be a revival of production in England. Mr. Stoll is anticipating this movement by going into his own production business at once."

Mr. King brought with him photographs of the Stoll film headquarters. The World man borrowed from him the photograph of Managing Director Jeffrey Bernard which we reproduce herewith. It was through the encouragement of Dwight Perrin, of Goldwyn's publicity forces, that we were able to have Mr. King sit still in front of an American camera long enough to have taken the photograph of the Stoll general manager, which is also presented as an adornment to this interview.

The things we have made Mr. King say in this article are not to be considered as his actual expression; Englishmen, of their own volition, do not use some of the expressions we have attributed to this friendly, keen and active Londoner, who has come far to see American films and those who traffic in them.

Industries Board Lifts Restrictions on Machines

THE conservation division of the War Industries Board has rescinded the conservation schedule that had been issued to motion picture machine manufacturers, and manufacturers are advised that they need no longer abide by the restrictions contained in the schedule.

This information was received by W. C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company and chairman of the war service committee of the motion picture machine manufacturers of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The War Industries Board, however, believes that as a result of its inquiries substantial savings of labor, material, equipment and capital have been effected as a result of the schedule and expressed the hope that the industry of its own accord will find it possible to continue to observe those provisions of the schedule which eliminate needless waste and can be carried out without real hardship.

Virginia Pearson Forms an Independent Company

THE latest star to form a film company of her own is Virginia Pearson, known to photoplay audiences as a star feature for the Fox Film Corporation. The title of the new concern is Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc. Louis Meyer of the Theatre Magazine is president; Sheldon Lewis, well known for his portrayal of villains in a number of screen serials and the husband of Miss Pearson, is treasurer, while John B. O'Brien is vice president, director general and supervisor of productions. Paul Meyer is secretary and business manager, while Charles G. Husted is special representative and studio manager, and M. Fleishman director of publicity.

Miss Pearson's contract with the Fox Film Corporation will not expire until January 16. In the meantime a number of scenarios based on popular books are being considered and everything is being prepared so that actual production may begin early in the new year.

In an interview with Mr. O'Brien, who has to his credit a large number of feature productions for prominent stars, he announces that it is the intention of the company to produce only big special features in which Miss Pearson will be starred.

Mr. Lewis in addition to his work in the cast will also lend aid to Mr. O'Brien in the productions, while arrangements are being made by Mr. Meyer to have the stories of the pictures syndicated through the country.

The office of the company is at 6 East Thirty-ninth street, New York.

Brunet Declares Situation Favorable for Production

THE reconstruction period upon which we are now entering opens up a greater, larger field than the world has known in four long years, says General Manager Brunet of Pathe. During that period the industry has made great strides. While few people expected hostilities to cease for at least another year, many of the big producers and distributors have had their plans made for many months past to take up their new work upon the cessation of hostilities, and the task before them will not find them unprepared.

"While the industry may expect to bear the burden of taxation already imposed upon it, and which is reputed to have driven out of business many producers and about one-quarter of the exhibitors, it will now know where if stands and can make its plans accordingly; it will no longer have to work under the uncertainty of not knowing just what additional burden will be placed upon it. Altogether I look upon the situation as most favorable."

Fishback Making Comedies for Lehrman Sunshiners

FRED FISHBACK, who has been responsible for many successful comedies during the past ten years, is now a member of the staff of directors producing Sunshine Comedies under the general supervision of Henry Lehrman.

Mr. Fishback's early experience was with Thomas Ince. That was at the time when the Broncho brand of pictures were at the height of their popularity, and Mr. Fishback attracted much attention through the "Shorty Hamilton" series, which proved to be among the most successful money getters of the then famous brand.

Later he joined the Mack Sennett forces and played opposite to Charlie Chaplin. It was while Fishback was with Sennett that Henry Lehrman became interest in his work. He studied Fishback's handling of various situations and finally made him a proposition to became a member of his staff of directors at the Sunshine Studios. Mr. Fishback's first Sunshine comedy "Her First Knight" was completed but a short time ago.

Herbert Lubin Under Knife.

Herbert Lubin, one of the moving spirits of the recently formed S-L Productions, will undergo a serious operation during the coming week at Dr. Stern's Sanitarium, 365 West End avenue, New York. Last November Mr. Lubin found it necessary to have performed an operation for appendicitis. Due to an unusual condition which has arisen during the last two months, it has been found necessary to again have recourse to the surgeon's knife.

That's What the World's Seattle Man Found on Trip to Southeastern Part of Territory—Exodus to Shipyards and Enlistments Deplete Population of Country Districts

By S. J. Anderson

DURING a recent trip to Southeastern Alaska the Moving Picture World correspondent visited all the motion picture houses along the way and found these small Alaska towns showing better pictures than many places several times their size in the United States, in spite of the fact that business is less flourishing in most parts of Alaska just now than it has been for years.

Since the beginning of the war the virile men of Alaska have enlisted in the army by the score, and others have left for the shipyards of the Pacific Coast. This exodus has been more apparent in the country districts than in town, and the consequent shutting down of many of the industries of the country, such as gold mines, lumber camps and railroad construction has caused the few men that were left to spend the summer in town. In some instances this townward movement has counterbalanced, for the motion picture theatre, the poor general business conditions. But where three or four towns have gained in this way the majority of them have suffered, and with the coming of winter conditions are growing worse, because more and more people are leaving the towns.

In normal times the population of Southeastern Alaska is stable, in contrast to the towns on the Western coast and in the interior, where about half the summer inhabitants usually "go out" for the winter. In fact in winter business is generally better in that part of the territory from Ketchican to Skagway, because the fishermen, who spend most of the summer on the water, as well as miners and construction workers, generally return to their homes in town to spend the winter. This stability of population, together with the plentiful supply of ready money in the pockets of the people, made business for the motion picture theatres, which furnish the only regular amusement for the people, exceptionally good. It is due to these conditions that well equipped motion picture houses using the best service on the market have been opened in the small towns that constitute the centers of population in Southeastern Alaska.

Ketchican Has Two Theatres.

Ketchican, the first port of call in the territory, has suffered the least from war conditions of any of the Southeastern Alaska towns. The increased importance of the fishing industry, causing several new canneries to be built in the immediate vicinity of Ketchican, has made the town a hustling place in summer, and the people are showing little inclination to leave it this winter. When the Moving Picture World correspondent visited Ketchican there were two theatres, the Dream, operated by L. H. Kubley, and the Grand, operated by A. D. Bosworth. Within the last few weeks, however, the Dream has been taken over by Jack Barbour, who has remodeled it both inside and outside, has added about fifty more seats to its former 280, and has changed the name to the Liberty. Mr. Barbour made a trip to Seattle and bought the equipment, Power's 6B machines, a Minusa gold fibre screen, etc. He also lined up the best service he could get. Mr. Kubley, who operated the Dream for five years, will open a new house.

As the Dream this was the pioneer showhouse of Ketchican, and Mr. Kubley was the first theatre manager in Alaska to sign a contract for Paramount pictures. That was in October, 1915. When Mr. Barbour took over the house in September, Artcraft-Paramount, Goldwyn, a few state rights pictures and an occasional special Metro or Triangle furnished the programs. Mr. Kubley is retaining his regular Artcraft-Paramount and Goldwyn service for his new house.

The Grand uses the regular service of Fox, World, Pathe and Vitagraph. This house seats 225 and is on the main street, less than a block from the Dream.

Difficulties of the Exhibitors.

According to Mr. Kubley, who by right of long experience speaks with authority, the exhibitors of this part of the territory have two great difficulties to contend with, both due to ignorance of conditions in Southeastern Alaska by the film distributing companies and their employes. The first is the trouble in persuading branch managers or their superiors that it is better to book the film direct from Seattle to the exhibitor. A great many of the films shown in this district are handled through the Alaska Film Exchange in Juneau, and they are generally relayed from one house to another, with the result that they are usually delayed in reaching Ketchican and other points south of Juneau, and other evils of the relay system, such as lost paper, misplaced slides, etc., are constantly encountered.

Ketchican exhibitors feel that since they are on the direct route from Seattle to Juneau, and are only forty-eight hours from the former port, from which vessels arrive two or three times a week, they are entitled to direct service from all the exchanges in Seattle. This has not proved impracticable, because Paramount has been doing it ever since their office was opened in Seattle three years ago, and Goldwyn has been doing it since the opening of their office. The result has been perfect service to the exhibitor and promptly returned films and advertising to the exchange. Mr. Kubley and other exhibitors of this vicinity hold that Paramount's three years' record of perfection on bookings, publicity and advertising can be repeated by other regular exchanges and state rights men.

The other difficulty imposed on the exhibitors of the territory by the ignorance of the film companies is the high rating of the motion picture houses by film executives back in New York, "to whom Alaska is the faraway land of gold mines, where every man goes seeking amusement at night with his pockets bulging with gold dust." This description by the exhibitors of the attitude taken by the film executives toward Alaska may be overdrawn, but their rating cards show clearly that they are not aware that out of the two or three or four thousand inhabitants of Alaska's leading towns the exhibitor can only count a little over half that many for his regular patronage. This is because many men who have their homes in town spend the fishing season on the water or at the canneries, while others sometimes go out for the winter. This injustice of overrating applies to the other towns of Southeastern Alaska, as well as to Ketchican.

Wrangell Has One Theatre.

Wrangell, which is the next port of call after Ketchican, is one of the most interesting towns in Alaska to the tourist, because of its ancient totem poles and other relics of Indian village and Government fortress days, but it is credited with a population of only 800, and one good motion picture show is all that it can support. The Rex Theatre, of Wrangell, presents pictures that are consistently better than are seen in most theatres with three or four times as many people to draw on, however, and its manager, Sam Cunningham, is recognized as a "regular" business man by his own fellow townsmen and by the exchange men in Seattle. The theatre occupies the lower floor of the Red Men's Hall, a high class frame building on the main street of the town. The lodge rooms are upstairs. The theatre seats 240. It is open only four nights a week in summer, but after the fishing season, when the people return to town, shows are given every night except Tuesday. Artcraft-Paramount, Mutual, Triangle and Pathe pictures are shown. The admission price is 30 cents for adults and 15 cents for children. The films are obtained from the Alaska Film Exchange at Juneau. Music is furnished here, as in most Alaska theatres, by a small orchestra.

Sam Cunningham.

Room for a First Class House.

Petersburg, which is only a few hours by boat from Wrangell, is a new town, brought rapidly into prominence of late by its large fishing interests. There are two theatres here, but neither of them are first class buildings, nor have they the best equipment, and according to Mrs. L. A. Willard, manager of the Dream, a really first-class house would make good money in the town. The Dream seats 130. Mutual and Vitagraph films are shown, and an Edison phonograph furnishes the music, with an occasional soloist obtained from the big boats that happen to be waiting to load cases of fish.

The Variety, a 200 capacity house, is owned by Rasmus Enge, who spends the summer in his fishing boat and leaves the management of the theatre to Mrs. Enge and C. E. Swanson, who is the operator as well as house manager. The admission prices are 25 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. This includes the war tax. The service is furnished by Artcraft-Paramount, Metro, Triangle and World. Mr. Swanson was one of the exhibitors who reiterated the complaint of Mr. Kubley regarding the sending of the pictures out on a circuit from Juneau. The pictures come to him from Wrangell and he sends them on to Haines, which is beyond Juneau. He adds to the complaint of poor service that of lack of opportunity of choosing the pictures that will appeal to his particular patrons. Most of the inhabitants of Petersburg are Swedish. They like slapstick comedy better than anything else, and Chaplin is their favorite star. A certain number of them like good straight drama, and Mr. Swanson tries to give them a fair mixture of both.

The Coliseum a Beautiful Place.

Juneau, capital of the territory, has had its population reduced during the last two years from 8,000 to about 4,000, and the number of its motion picture theatres have been accordingly reduced from four to two. The two that remain are the Coliseum and the Palace. W. D. Gross, who operates the Coliseum, is also manager of the Alaska Film Exchange. Through this he distributes Artcraft-Paramount, Mutual, Triangle and Metro films to Southeastern and Southwestern Alaska, as well as to some of the interior towns.

The Rex Theatre, Wrangell, Alaska.

The interior of the Coliseum is handsome, its walls being tastefully decorated, its aisles covered with heavy green carpets and its entrance and stage arches draped with green velvet. Its entrance on the main street leads through a long aisle-like foyer to the main foyer from which an incline rises to the balcony, at the front of which are well arranged loges furnished with easy chairs. The seating throughout this theatre is especially comfortable, because of the distance between the chairs. There are 800 seats. A big pipe organ furnishes the music for the pictures. The stage is made big enough and is fully equipped so that the house can be used on occasions for the legitimate drama. Mr. Gross lives with his family in well-appointed rooms above the theatre. He has a scale of three admission prices to the theatre, 30 cents for adults, 15 cents for children from 12 to 15 years of age, and 10 cents for those below that age. The loges are 40 cents.

The Palace Theatre has a capacity of 650, about a third of these being on the balcony, which is well planned for seeing the pictures to good advantage. The operating room off the balcony is large and well equipped, two Simplex machines being used. Fox, Vitagraph, World and Pathe service are used. An orchestra of four furnishes the music. The Palace is managed by John Spicket and Mrs. Spicket, old-time Alaskans, who understand the wants of the people better than they do themselves.

Business Poor in Skagway.

The last stop made by the big steamers plying the regular Southeastern Alaska route is Skagway, the entrance to the gold fields of the Yukon. This town sprang up like a mushroom in the gold rush days of '98 and '99, and it suffered more than any other town of this part of the territory by the drawing out of men from the gold mines when war called them to the battlefields of France and to the shipyards of the Pacific Coast. Over 6,000 persons have left the immediate vicinity within the last year. In the town of Skagway itself there are not more than 500 remaining, and general business conditions are consequently so poor that the place can hardly support even the Popular Picture Palace with its small capacity of 150. George Mowl, the manager, however, is showing himself an altruist in keeping the place going four nights a week. He uses the Alaska Film Exchange service and declares slapstick comedy to be the favorite of the greater number of his patrons. Mr. Mowl is 78 years old, but does not look over 60 and is as keen in a business way as a man many years his junior, and he is fond of motion pictures. He came to Alaska 20 years ago as a prospector and holds various mining claims, as well as owning and managing a tailor's shop.

From this it may be seen that the towns of Southeastern Alaska are well served with motion picture shows according to their population. The only places where they are lacking and are really needed are at the large mines and canneries during the summer season. Some of the big mining companies have found it necessary, in order to hold their men, to furnish them amusement, and they have installed motion picture machines in their recreation halls with good results. Ninety-nine per cent. of these institutions, which furnish employment to over two-thirds of Alaska's population, have absolutely no amusement to offer their men, and the installment of motion picture shows would be a godsend.

GOLDWYN TO DISTRIBUTE FORD WEEKLY

Beginning January 12 Will Control Releasing Arrangements for the Entire Country

EFFECTIVE January 12 and weekly thereafter, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation will release and exclusively control the distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly in the United States. This move is brought about under a contract signed in Detroit, by executives of Goldwyn and Fitpatrick & McElroy, of Chicago, sole representatives of the Ford Company's motion picture laboratories, after a conference with Henry Ford's representative, Ambrose Beardsley Jewett.

For four years the Detroit manufacturer has nursed and developed a motion picture weekly. The preparation of this subject involves an annual cost said to be well in excess of $600,000, and has made it necessary for its owner to equip at his Detroit plant, large motion picture laboratories.

The humanness and range of Mr. Ford's mental interests is indicated in some measure by his screen weekly and by the topics it depicts. It is both current and permanent in its appeal. It is a scenic, a travelogue, a historical record, a portrayer of industry in many of its phases, a stimulator of patriotism and efficient citizenship.

In the last two years the distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly has been in the hands of independent picture exchanges, where it was booked weekly in 3,000 theatres. The assumption of its distribution by Goldwyn is expected at once to give this unusual weekly booking in more than 5,000 theatres each week with the ultimate aim of acquiring 7,000.

"Nothing that has come to my attention in motion pictures in years has possessed such possibilities for distribution as the Ford Educational Weekly," said Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, in making announcement of his company's plans for a sustained campaign for this new unit in the Goldwyn distributing activities. "Where many of us in the industry are devoting ourselves exclusively to dramatic productions, Mr. Ford has realized the necessity of a great screen educator. He has placed his tremendous resources behind his screen weekly with no thought of profit, but because he felt that this weekly would do something big and significant for the American public—and do it continuously.

"The power of the Ford Educational Weekly and the range of its interest is indicated by its popularity at its frequent showings in the New York Rialto, Strand and Rivoli theatres and in the equivalent theatres of first rank in the largest cities of the country. This weekly is available at a minimum of cost to exhibitors everywhere, and we shall maintain its absolute independence of all other productions, either produced or marketed by Goldwyn. It is immediately accessible to churches, lodges, farmers' organizations and granges. I am informed from Detroit that one of the Ford Educational Weekly's big forthcoming plans is to cover the vital and dramatic reconstruction work of the European nations with a thoroughness for which the editors of the weekly are noted."

All prints of the previous issues of the Ford Educational Weekly will be withdrawn from circulation under previous distributing arrangements and Goldwyn will have the sole and exclusive field during the new year.

Prints of the first weekly issues will be in all Goldwyn offices in America by the middle of December, together with the necessary lithographs and exploitation matter. A special exploitation department of the Goldwyn organization will arrange for the simultaneous syndication of the text story of each weekly in important chains of daily and weekly newspapers in every section of the country.

At a conference in Detroit, Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel, and F. B. Warren, vice president of Goldwyn, arranged to link the distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly with 10,500 Ford sales agencies in America.

Betzwood Wants Westerns.

Writers for the screen frequently have cause for complaint against the slow process of getting decision on their wares from scenario editors. An exception is noted in the deal by which the Betzwood Film Company acquired the rights to William Patterson White's "High Pockets."

"High Pockets" was the featured novel in a recent issue of "Adventure." Within twenty-four hours from the time the issue appeared on the newsstands of Philadelphia, the screen rights of the story had been bought and paid for. Incidentally, the picture has already been completed and will be released following "Oh, Johnny," the first of the Bennison series to be released through Goldwyn.

Norman Jefferies, who transacted the purchase of "High Pockets" for the Betzwood Film Company, has been commissioned to negotiate immediately for several other stories suitable for Louis Bennison. Original or published stories with Western, Canadian or Alaskan locale are required at once. There is also instant demand for a feature story for Katherine McDonald.

Quick action is promised on stories of the designated type if submitted to Norman Jefferies, Real Estate Trust Building, Philadelphia.

Myron Selznick to Produce.

Myron Selznick, son of Louis J. Selznick, announces he is about to venture into the producing field. He says he will start with two stars and a competent support to put into effect the ideas he has acquired in different departments of the industry.

Jewel Carmen Gets Injunction Pendente Lite in Action Brought to Restrain Film Producer

AN argument bristling with charges and countercharges enlivened the presentation of an application for a preliminary injunction by Jewel Carmen to restrain the Fox Film Corporation and the William Fox Vaudeville Company from circulating statements in the motion picture industry to the effect that the Fox companies have exclusive rights to the services of the youthful cinema star or otherwise interfering with her efforts to earn a livelihood in her profession.

Rogers & Rogers, counsel for the Fox companies, submitted affidavits describing the plaintiff as a "contract jumper" and suggesting that it was time "recalcitrant stars" were taught a lesson. Counsel charged that Miss Carmen owes her success in the motion picture industry to the Fox companies, which employed her at a salary of $100 weekly when she was only earning $50 per week, and expended large sums of money in developing her talents.

Then when the plaintiff achieved stardom, largely through the efforts of the Fox companies, counsel contended, she secretly entered into a contract with the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation at a more remunerative salary, although her contract with the Fox companies had not expired.

Nathan Burkan, counsel for Miss Carmen, asserted that the Fox companies had threatened to have his client blacklisted unless she carried out the terms of her contract with those companies, although, he contended, that contract is not binding for the reason that Miss Carmen was a minor when she entered into contractual relations with the Fox companies.

Miss Carmen alleged in an affidavit filed in support of the motion that the Fox companies had entered into an agreement with the Keeney company agreeing to indemnify the latter against damages in consideration of the Keeney company refusing to employ her under the terms of her contract with that company.

"If the defendants believe themselves to have been the victims of a contract jumper they had and have their remedy," declared Judge Knox. "It lies, however, in the courts and not in harassing the plaintiff by threatening suits which are not brought nor by indemnification agreements, nor even by the teaching of lessons to recalcitrant stars.

"It is unnecessary to indulge in a discussion of the relative merits of the parties upon this application," continued Judge Knox. "It suffices to say that the complainant has, prima facie, established her infancy at the time the Fox contracts were made. These contracts, as I read the affidavit, were delivered in New York, so far as the defendants are concerned, and the law of the State of New York as to infancy will govern. The plaintiff has with no reason repudiated them and the fact that the defendants spent considerable money in developing the talents of the plaintiff becomes incidental and is not a reason for denying injunctive relief.

"An injunction pendente lite will be issued upon the filing of a bond in the sum of $1,000," concluded Judge Knox.

Paramounts and Artcrafts to Entertain Peace Party

SHORTLY following the announcement of the personnel of President Wilson's party of delegates to attend the Peace Conference in France, it was learned that the group will be entertained on board ship with motion pictures in which the most popular stars of the screen appear.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation received a wire from Washington November 28 to supply the motion picture entertainment, and arranged a list of fifteen subjects presenting its most prominent stars.

At the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution, said: "We naturally feel honored in being called upon to furnish the motion picture entertainment for President Wilson's party of delegates to the Peace Conference. We have selected with utmost care a series of pictures which were immediately prepared for shipment."

The photoplays supplied are all Paramount or Artcraft pictures and comprise Douglas Fairbanks in "Mr. Fix-It," "He Comes Up Smiling," "Bound in Morocco" and "Say, Young Fellow"; William S. Hart in "Selfish Yates," "Border Wireless" and "Riddle Gawne"; D. W. Griffith's "The Great Love"; Mary Pickford in "Stella Maris," "Johanna Enlists" and "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley"; Charles Ray in Ince's "His Own Home Town," Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane," Enid Bennett in "The Marriage Ring" and Polly Moran in Mack Sennett's "Battle Royal."

Allen Moves Over to Cleveland.

J. W. Allen, special representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Distribution Department, has left the Cincinnati exchange of that company, where he had taken charge since last July, and is now making his headquarters at the Cleveland office with Detroit as the next stop.

Mr. Allen, in his tour of Famous Players-Lasky exchanges, is giving every attention to details with an idea of enhancing the service to exhibitors. Mr. Allen appointed G. G. Rich, for several years with the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges at Pittsburgh and Cleveland, as manager. C. C. Wallace, formerly a representative of the company in Indiana, was made assistant manager.

E. M. Porter Studying Conditions.

E. M. Porter, general manager of the Simplex Company, is now on a two weeks' trip throughout the country in the interests of the Precision Machine Company, 317 East Thirty-fourth street. The journey has been made necessary by the changed industrial and economic conditions facing the country as the result of the advent of the return of general business to a pre-war basis.

He expects to obtain valuable data which will enable him upon his return to New York City to complete extensive sales plans, long under consideration, which have been held in abeyance by the unusual business conditions of the last few months.

LOS ANGELES THEATRES OPEN AT LAST

After Seven Weeks' Darkness, December 2 Marks Revival of Theatregoing, with Good Business—Other California Towns Still Under Ban, but Most Sections Are Released

(Special Telegram to Moving Picture World.)

Los Angeles, Cal., December 3.

THE influenza ban was lifted by the Los Angeles Health Board on December 2. Theatres opened after a darkness of seven weeks, the longest closed period suffered by any city of this size. People are still nervous about crowds, but houses are doing good business. Exhibitors look for a big increase in the next few days. Santa Barbara, Riverside, Pomona and several nearby towns are still under ban.

GIEBLER.

The above dispatch from Los Angeles reports on the most distressed section of the country. There seems to be no definite time set for the removal of restrictions in other cities in Southern California. In other sections the influenza epidemic is threatening to stage a "come back", but theatres are open and running unrestricted in by far the greater part of the United States and Canada. From a glance at our reports from scattered districts we find these "high spots."

San Francisco has permitted theatregoers to discard the gauze masks that were for a time necessary to admission. Several Indiana cities have again been closed, because of a revival of the plague. In some parts of Ohio a return of the epidemic is threatened and theatres are closed.

Kansas City is recovering so slowly from the influence of the disease that the authorities may again put a ban upon theatres giving performances. In Terre Haute, Ind., fourteen managers took matters into their own hands, after a protracted shut-down, opened without authority, were arrested and will be tried for their offense by a jury of their peers.

Our information from various towns and centers of population will be disclosed in the following reports:

San Francisco Rescinds Gauze Mask Measure

THE theatres of San Francisco, which were recently reopened, following a closed period of four weeks, are rapidly getting into their former stride, and business is expected to be normal again within a very short time. During the first week following the reopening business was a little below expectations, but this is attributed to the fact that the wearing of gauze masks on the part of the public was still insisted upon, as well as to the fact that heavy rains fell during this period. The influenza has been completely wiped out here, and the use of masks as a protective measure has been done away with.

While theatre owners suffered heavy losses as a result of the epidemic, the opinion is expressed that these would have been much heavier had their places of business not been closed. Rentals have formed the chief source of loss, but in some instances property owners have shared this loss with their tenants. Theatre men generally voice the belief that the masking ordinance has also proved its worth and has been a factor in bringing the epidemic to a speedy close with a minimum loss of life and permitting houses to reopen at an earlier date than would otherwise have been possible. They point to the fact that the Pacific Coast cities which enforced the gauze mask rule have speedily recovered from the scourge, while those which did not are still fighting the disease and theatres are still closed. Local health authorities declare that the epidemic is definitely stamped out and that it will not return unless brought here from the Southern part of the State, where it is still rampant.

Interior Conditions Still Bad.

Theatres in the interior districts have not opened as rapidly as was thought likely by film exchange interests. Communities where the use of gauze masks was not general are still in the grip of the influenza, and the opening of theatres has been postponed indefinitely. In some places they have been opened only to be closed again within a few days. At the present writing it is estimated that about 40 per cent. of the moving picture houses in the territory served by San Francisco film exchanges are in operation. Most of these are in the San Francisco Bay district and in the northern part of the State, with but few open in the southern part of the territory. Exchangemen having branches in Los Angeles declare that the situation there is very uncertain, the lack of co-operation between the health officers and the city officials being held responsible for the failure to curb the epidemic.

Indiana Towns Close Again Upon Influenza Recurrence

THE influenza epidemic has staged a "comeback" in Indianapolis and other Hoosier cities and, as a result, the state board of health has ordered the old closing ban back into effect in a number of localities. Indianapolis, however, has been fortunate enough to date to escape the closing order, but influenza masks have been ordered worn in all theatres, stores and other public places.

The board of health at first considered replacing the ban, which was in effect for about four weeks, but it was decided that such restrictions would be disastrous to business conditions, particularly to motion picture exhibitors, theatre owners and other merchants who sacrificed thousands of dollars when the ban was in effect before. The board decided, however, to only close the schools at the present time.

Dr. Herman G. Morgan, secretary of the Indianapolis board of health, said he had been promised the hearty co-operation of the motion picture exhibitors and theatre owners as well as the managers of the downtown stores in enforcing the order. The exhibitors and theatre men have been ordered to refuse admission to the theatres to all persons not wearing masks. All clerks and other employes of the stores are required to wear the masks when on duty.

Theatre Attendance Lessened.

The fear of contracting the disease, which has attended the "comeback" of the epidemic, naturally has caused many more "stay-at-homes" than usual, and, as a result, the motion picture shows have not been overcrowded. The exhibitors, however, are not complaining, as they would rather have business a little less than normal than no business at all.

It was said at the office of the state board of health that no general statewide closing order will be issued as long as the epidemic does not become more general, although the ban has been re-established in a number of localities.

At Terre Haute, a quarantine of afflicted homes has been established instead of resumption of the closing order, as a result of a conference of representative business men and members of the Terre Haute board of health which was held last week.

Shannan Katzenbach, proprietor of the American Theatre, who represented the exhibitors at the meeting, was called upon for his opinion of the matter, and he told those attending the conference that so far as he could see the closing ban had not helped matters much.

"Our theatres are cleaner and more sanitary than one-half the homes in Terre Haute," he said, "but we have never kicked on anything that we thought would be for the benefit of the city and its people. All of the time the theatres were closed the stores were open and crowds were permitted to congregate elsewhere. I believe the thing to do is to impose a quarantine and thus keep the affected ones away from public gatherings and out of crowds. Better results will be obtained that way."

Some of the cities which are again subject to the closing ban are Columbus, Greensburg, Sullivan, Laporte, Gary, Vincennes, Bicknell, and a few others.

Influenza Ban Is Lifted in the Canadian West

THE Canadian West began to see the light of day, insofar as the lifting of the epidemic ban was concerned, about November 20. The theatres of Calgary were permitted to reopen on that date, but on condition that all patrons wear masks while in the show houses. Six of the local theatres promptly reopened.

Winnipeg theatres expected to reopen on Saturday, November 23, but the local authorities did not remove the embargo until the following Thursday, November 28, almost seven weeks after the houses had been closed. Announcement was made that the city of Winnipeg would grant a rebate of a portion of municipal license fees to the theatres to help compensate for the loss which exhibitors had sustained.

The ban on Saskatoon theatres was raised on November 22, after local houses had been closed for five weeks. The theatres of Victoria, B. C., also resumed operations at the same time.

Exhibitors of various other centres of the West were also granted the privilege of reopening along about the same time, but many cities and towns remained closed for the time being.

Kershaw Makes a Protest.

After the Winnipeg theatres had been closed more than a month, President R. Kershaw of the Manitoba Exhibitors' Association made a protest to the Winnipeg authorities regarding a continuance of the ban. He protested against the attitude of the city in not closing other places, such as stores and street cars, and pointed out that some lawlessness had developed because the people had no place to go. He declared, however, that local exhibitors were not looking for charity or sympathy. They wanted common sense methods and justice. He used the argument that only healthy people would be going to theatres anyway. The sick ones would be at home and in bed.

President Kershaw also made the interesting statement that the reason why so many automobiles were being stolen during the period of the ban was that the young fellows had nothing better to occupy their minds. With the theatres open, the attention of the young man and others would be detracted from temptation.

Arrest Terre Haute Managers for Violating Closing Order

MANAGERS of fourteen theatres—practically all of them motion picture houses—at Terre Haute, Ind., were arrested by the police there on Thanksgiving Day for having opened their amusement places in violation of the order issued Wednesday by the city board of health because of the prevalence of influenza.

Six of the number, after being released on bond, again attempted to go on with their shows, and as a result were rearrested. Bond was denied them for several hours, but was finally accepted by the sheriff.

The ones arrested a second time are Albert Brentlinger, of the New Liberty Theatre; Peter Peters, of the Fountain; William Keating, of the Orpheum; Sam Dreyfus, of the Princess; Ben Van Borsum, of the Crescent and the Savoy, and Walter Nisbet, of the Orpheum.

Those who abandoned the idea of reopening their places after being arrested once were Charles Orman, of the Majestic; Roy Stewart, of the Rex; Claude Richie, of the Crescent; Charles Boland, of the Lyceum; Thomas Barhydt, of the Hippodrome; Shannon Katzenbach, of the American; Edward Galligan, of the Grand, and Elias B. Sheets, of the Lois.

All Refused to Plead Guilty.

When they appeared in city court Friday, November 28, all refused to enter pleas of guilty on the ground that the ruling of the health board was invalid. The defendants all asked that the evidence be heard by a jury and the request was granted by the court. The date for the trial has not been decided on.

Following the second arrests every theatre in the city became dark and in cases where tickets had been purchased for performances the money was returned. The same closing rule, which is sort of a "skip-stop" affair, was ordered into effect again from 6 o'clock Friday night until Monday morning. It is understood that the police intend to arrest any exhibitor or manager who attempt to violate the order.

Soon after the closing order was issued Wednesday morning the theatre men, their attorneys, Mayor Hunter, and several business men of the city met with the members of the board of health advisory board to try to find the reason for the closing of the theatres and stores and not the churches and schools.

Protests were heard and many discussions held and following the meeting the theatre men all voted to stay open as usual.

John Hickey, attorney representing the theatre and moving picture interests, told those who attended the conference that the whole ruling was based purely on a guess by the city board of health.

"Persons are going to get together in crowds in spite of whether the theatres open or close," continued Mr. Hickey. To say during which hours a store shall open or close seems to me to be an extremely foolish idea. Stop all gatherings, hotels, barber shops, street cars and everything if you are going to close the shows. Why should they have to suffer alone."

Much interest is being manifested by theatre men throughout the state in the outcome of the cases.

Quarantine Lifted in Spokane.

After being closed for six weeks, due to the influenza quarantine orders of the city and state health department, Spokane picture theatres and vaudeville and picture houses combined opened their doors November 20, the ban having been lifted at midnight November 19.

Probably one of the most widely advertised shows the first day was "Crashing Through to Berlin," shown at the Majestic, Spokane, by J. W. Allender, manager. He hired an automobile, had large colored sheets and advertising mounted on frames covering the car and a band inside. This patrolled the Spokane streets all day.

Reports from the managers are that the houses are not crowded, even though the places were closed so long; however, they are not complaining and said they were glad to be opened again.

Nearly All Towns in Southwest Open.

With the exception of a few small towns in central Arkansas all theatres in the southwestern district have opened following the influenza epidemic. Business is reported by Dallas film men to be better than in many months.

In Arkansas renewed outbreaks of influenza caused the quarantine to be again placed on theatres at Russellville and Corning.

Theatres for sale; theatres for rent and theatres wanted by live managers are listed very frequently in The World's Classified Advertising Department.

Kansas City May See Influenza Ban Restored

KANSAS CITY territory is not yet out from under the cloud of influenza. Kansas City and a majority of the towns in Kansas and Missouri have been "open" for two weeks; and for a week there have been no restrictions of any kind on public gatherings. A dozen towns in each state have been continuously under restrictions for more than six weeks. But the worst feature of the present situation is that restrictions may again be imposed in towns that have for a week or so been believing that the epidemic had been conquered. It is reported that in both North-Central Missouri and Central Kansas the disease is showing itself in worse shape than during October. Even in Kansas City there is an undercurrent of rumor that the ban may be restored.

The report from the territory, as well as from Kansas City, is that business has not yet, in two weeks, reached normal volume since the ligting of the ban.

Running at a Loss.

Some of the larger theatres, with considerable overhead, are running practically at a loss, and all theatres are having to rebuild patronage from the ground up. They are punctiliously observing all suggestions with reference to keeping houses clean, and stand ready to follow all orders as to fumigation, or holding down the number of patrons at any performance.

The exhibitors are much wiser now than while the restrictions were on. In many small communities, the exhibitors are now aware of the political aspects of the restrictions on picture shows; and they are in a better position to represent their views on the subject of regulations. It is said that in a few places moving picture houses were the last to be relieved of restrictions, and that the personal relations of officials with exhibitors—and the ideas of the officials as to public effect of some drastic action on somebody—have had much to do with the course of events. Diplomacy is now the order of the day; and great care is being exercised that the best possible relations shall be attained and maintained, between representatives of the industry and municipal officers.

Fresh Outburst in Louisville.

The influenza epidemic in Louisville has been giving some trouble during the past few days, there having been a fresh outburst, but as a whole the situation is well in hand, and no effort has been made at replacing the ban. Owensboro and Paducah are again running. Pineville lifted the ban on picture shows on November 23, after it had been in effect for six weeks. Dr. R. B. Norment, of the Louisville City Health Office, stated that he didn't think conditions would again become serious.

At Highland Park, a suburb of Louisville, it was found necessary to replace regulations to prevent a general increase in influenza. As a result the Highland Park Theatre is again closed. Jim Dawson recently took over the active management of this house, which is controlled by the Switow Amusement Company.

Ban Lifted in Halifax.

The ban has been lifted in Halifax, N. S., and the theatres are now running at normal times. At first they were only allowed to have two shows, one in the afternoon and one at night, but now the pictures are allowed to be seen in their usual order.

St. John Theatres Open.

The St. John, N. B., theatres are in full swing again, though, as fresh cases of the influenza are breaking out, the crowds of picture lovers have not yet come up to the usual numbers. People are still a little timid about going into large gatherings, and it will be some time before the attendance is normal.

Ban Extended in Alliance, Ohio.

The revival of the influenza epidemic after it was thought to be safely stamped out caused the health authorities of Alliance, O., to keep the lid down on theatres and other places where people might gather for nearly two weeks longer than in other parts of Ohio, and theatres were not permitted to open until November 23. Elsewhere, as a rule, they were reopened on November 11 or 12.

Ontario Managers to Fight Proposed New Ticket Tax

THE legislation committee of the city of Toronto carried out its threatened promise to impose a special tax on admission tickets to theatres at a meeting of the committee held on Friday, November 28. The committee did more than decide to place a civic levy on admission tickets. The members also came to a decision to make a substantial raise in the fee for municipal theatre licenses while it was also decided to tax bill boards on a space basis.

Despite a vigorous protest on the part of representatives of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, the committee decided to carry out its plans, which had been suggested by Finance Commissioner Bradshaw because the city is said to be sadly in needs of money. The matter will now probably go to the City Council immediately while the proposed by-laws will be placed before the Ontario Legislature for ratification by the province. The exhibitors will have at least one more chance to defeat the measure when it reaches the Provincial Legislature, and it is believed the Ontario Government will frown on the proposal to impose a tax on admission tickets, as the move almost duplicates the assessment on tickets now required by the province as a war revenue producer. It is also urged that if Toronto succeeds in its purpose of duplicating the ticket tax, many other centres in the province will follow suit.

Makes One Concession.

Only one concession was made by the legislation committee. The committee decided not to place a one cent tax on all tickets up to 15 cents, but the schedule of taxes suggested by Commissioner Bradshaw was otherwise adopted. The proposed scale is as follows: A two-cent. tax on tickets over 15 cents and up to 50 cents; a ten-cent tax on tickets valued at over 50 cents and up to $1; over $1 a tax of 25 cents will be imposed.

The committee also decided to increase the civic license fee of $100 a year to $300. There will also be a tax of $15 on billboards for the first thousand square feet and $5 for each additional thousand feet.

A general meeting of the Exhibitors' Association of Ontario was called for Tuesday, December 3, in the club rooms at 143 Yonge street, when the proposed taxes were discussed and steps taken to fight the imposition. The association boasts of a Toronto membership comprising 93 per cent. of the local exhibitors and is in a strong position to wage a war on the civic administrators. Announcement is also made that the association has decided on an initiation fee for new members, in addition to regular dues, and a last call has been sounded for delinquents.

CRISIS IS NOW PAST, SAYS AL LICHTMAN

Famous Players-Lasky Executive Sums Up the Situation in Middle West as He Saw It in Trip

THAT the motion picture industry has gone through its greatest crisis and is now well on the road to recovery is confirmed by Al Lichtman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution. Mr. Lichtman has just concluded a five weeks' tour of the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges, including visits to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City.

Mr. Lichtman, after nine days in confinement from influenza at Kansas City, returned to New York, where he has been recuperating for the past week.

"After personally seeing just how the motion picture industry at large went through the period of national depression, I am proud to say that I am connected with the business," said Mr. Lichtman. "In every district I visited theatres were closed for an average of three weeks. While gloom was evident everywhere and everyone seemed to be suffering, either personally or in a business way from the epidemic, exhibitors and exchange managers were not sitting down to bemoan their fate.

"Quite the contrary. Everyone was active, planning for better days to come and taking the dark days with grim determination to make up as soon as the business was resumed.

"At our exchanges I did not find employes sitting around wondering how long they would hold their jobs. They were making good use of this lull, cleaning house, checking up details of their organization and preparing for the rush of business that was bound to come. While here and there I found a calamity howler, the general feeling was one of optimistic hope.

"Exhibitors during this time have more than ever proved themselves to be good showmen. Everywhere I found painters, decorators and workers actively engaged in the renovation of theatres. As for the distribution department of the Famous Players-Lasky throughout the country, the lull, although it has cost us a great deal, will in the end result in direct benefit to the exhibitor. Although we were not booking pictures we used these so-called idle hours to good advantage. We were able to get the undivided attention of all executives and employes on matters of importance in a manner impossible under conditions of business activity. New ideas have been created and new systems installed, all of which point to greater service to the exhibitor.

"Among the stars who will appear in December Paramount and Artcraft releases are Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Elsie Ferguson, Marguerite Clark, Enid Bennett, Wallace Reid, Shirley Mason, and Ernest Truex, Charles Ray, Ethel Clayton, Dorothy Dalton, Dorothy Gish and Bryant Washburn. Producers who contribute to this month's offerings are D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, Cecil B. DeMille, John Emerson, Anita Loos and others, comprising the most noted artists in this field of the industry. Besides this there is the big Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Sporting Life," produced by Maurice Tourneur.

David Davidson Killed in Action.

The day that the people of the United States were having their premature peace celebration—Thursday, November 7—a gold star took its place in the Vitagraph service flag, for on that day David Davidson, formerly an artist in the advertising and publicity department, fell in action in France. It was one of war's ironies that the young Vitagrapher, who was one of the first National Army men to reach France, should have died even as the armistice that halted hostilities was being arranged. News of his death was conveyed to his family in a telegram from the War Department on December 2.

Davidson was twenty-six years old, a graduate of the Cooper Union Art School, and had been a commercial artist for several years before he went into his country's service. He had been in the Vitagraph art department for more than a year.

Mr. Davidson, who is survived by his father and two brothers, is, so far as known, the only Vitagrapher who was killed in action.

Metro Players Go West.

Margaret McWade, who plays Nurse Cavell in "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," will go to California soon, where she will appear in a number of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., productions. E. J. Connelly, also in the cast of this subject in the role of the old Alsatian, Paul Le Brett, is another who will go. Lilie Leslie, who plays the Katherine Kaelred part in "The Man Who Stayed at Home," will appear in the firm's productions staged on the West Coast, and another member of the same cast to go is Julia Calhoun.

Five other studio employes going to the coast are George McGuire, Dudley Blanchard, Mildred Anderson, Mary Doolan, and Mike Joyce.

Two Goldwyns on Broadway.

Goldwyn had the unusual distinction last week of having two productions shown simultaneously for pre-release first run on Broadway, at the Rialto and the Strand.

Rex Beach's newest story, featuring Frank McIntyre, "Too Fat to Fight," had its first presentation at the Rialto, and Madge Kennedy's "A Perfect Lady" was the week's bill at the Strand.

Senate Committee Restores 1918 Impost on Admissions

THE offices of the members of the Senate finance committee have been flooded more or less with protests against the proposals of the House Ways and Means Committee to double existing motion picture theatre taxes. The theatre men point out that inasmuch as the war has terminated and cuts are being made all along the line in the pending revenue bill, the theatre taxes should have consideration. It is declared that if the bill had been passed in its original form a large proportion of the theatres would have been driven out of business.

Apparently the finance committee has seen the justice of the contention of the motion picture men with respect to the admission taxes, and so at the meeting of the committee November 27, it was decided to cut in half the admission taxes proposed by the House and leave them as they now exist: 1 cent on each 10 cents or fraction thereof.

Briefs have been presented to the committee outlining the effect of the ten per cent, rental tax agreed on in the committee. It is pointed out that if the companies have to absorb this tax they cannot hope to remain in business, their earnings being only about ten per cent. of the total of their rentals. Some of the companies recommend doubling the existing footage taxes of one-fourth of a cent a foot on raw stock and one-half cent a foot on negatives. This would give the desired results, they contend, but calling attention to the fact that the existing taxes have been passed on to the exhibitor by the addition of a charge of 15 cents a reel a day, they suggest that a direct tax of 30 cents a reel a day be levied by the Government upon the exhibitors.

The Senate finance committee is cutting down the total of the revenue measure in accordance with recommendations of the Treasury Department. It is easing up the special taxes, such as levies on individual businesses, and commodities, and in line with this the admission tax cut comes. Every effort is being made, it is understood, to bring about further reductions that will help the industry, Congress being informed of what happened to it during the recent influenza epidemic. It would be a bad time now to cripple the motion picture theatres. LINZ.

Says Capital's Operators Are Inadequately Examined

IN his annual report for the fiscal year of 1918, Fire Marshal P. W. Nicholson again complains of the manner in which operators in the District of Columbia are licensed. "The present method of licensing operators of motion picture machines is extremely unsatisfactory and should be discontinued," he tells the District commissioners. "The method now followed is to issue such licenses solely as the result of a written examination, the questions for which are of such a nature as to prohibit their frequent change. There is, therefore, the constant liability of the dissemination of the details of the examination among motion picture machine operators and prospective applicants for license."

During the period covered by this report there were remarkably few accidents in the theatres, and all of these were confined to the operating booths. Mr. Nicholson states that during the twelve months sixty motion picture theatres and ten open air motion picture parks were examined and the issue of license therefor approved. The record is clean.

The casualties reported were as follows.

Robert Birchett was burned on the hands and face in trying to extinguish a fire of a motion picture film in the operator's booth at the Strand Theatre. George J. McConnell was burned on the left hand and S. S. Sharp was slightly cut on the head during a fire in the booth of the Circle Theatre caused by film coming in contact with a rheostat and igniting. James W. Patten, operator, was badly burned on the hands, arms and face, and George E. F. Stenz, owner and assistant operator, was burned on the hands and face and his right leg was sprained in jumping from the operator's booth, in a fire in the Hippodrome Theatre, caused by film breaking and lodging in the projection machine, thus igniting from an arc lamp.

No violations of the fire regulations by motion picture theatre owners during the period were reported.

Naugle, Vitagraph's Chief, Succumbs to Influenza

HARRY D. NAUGLE, western division manager of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, died a victim of influenza at Omaha, Neb., on Saturday, November 23. He was ill only three days. He was twenty-nine years old, and had been actively connected with the motion picture business for a long time. Born in Arizona, Mr. Naugle was taken to Los Angeles as a child. After leaving school he took a position in a Los Angeles bank. He studied law and was admitted to the bar, but before entering upon practice the lure of the motion picture business seized him.

Prior to his association with Vitagraph Mr. Naugle had been with the General Film Company, had acted as manager for Clune's Theatre, Los Angeles, and also had operated in the state rights field. He started with Vitagraph as a salesman in the San Francisco office in April, 1915, and on May 10 of the same year was appointed manager of the Los Angeles branch. He held this post until September 25, 1916, when he was selected for the position of coast division manager, and when the company put into effect its divisional plan, dividing the country in two, Mr. Naugle was placed in charge of the western division, and held that post until his death. His territory comprised the area west of the Mississippi, from Canada to the Mexican border.

At the time of his death, Mr. Naugle had stopped off in Omaha en route to a meeting of Vitagraph sales chiefs in the New York office, and he had only been in the Nebraska metropolis a few hours when he complained of feeling ill. The next day he was taken to a hospital and three days later he passed away.

His mother was en route to his bedside when he died, and she took his body back to Los Angeles, where he was buried on Friday, November 29. Besides his mother, Mr. Naugle is survived by his father and sister.

Film Accepted as Baggage Commencing January Next

COMMENCING January 1, 1919, uniform baggage rules are to be made effective throughout the country, so that motion picture films will be accepted as baggage in the South and West, just as they are now accepted in the East.

This is another big piece of work accomplished by the Washington Exchange Managers' Association for the industry as a whole. The report came to Oscar A. Morgan, secretary of the association, that it was impossible to send films as baggage out of Washington to the southern territory. This was somewhat disconcerting.

"To my surprise," said Mr. Morgan, who, in the business world, is manager of the Famous Players Exchange, "I found there was no way in which we could check films as baggage to points south of Washington. This was bad for us, when, on November 4, Harry Bernstein, manager of the Wells interests in Richmond, Va., called us on the telephone and stated that the authorities in Richmond had decided to permit the houses to open on that day. The films were sent in regular fireproof cases by messengers to the Union Station to be checked as baggage and to be accompanied by the messengers to the destination named. Movement of the films in this manner was refused, and there was no way we could get the films to the Richmond theatres.

"In the north the ruling of the railroads is that messengers accompanying motion picture films in transit cannot under any circumstances carry the films in passenger coaches, but must check them as baggage.

"Our organization here immediately got busy, taking the matter up with J. B. Mordecai, traffic manager of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad, who, willing to help the exchangemen in every way possible, took the proposition up with the Southern Passenger Traffic Committee at Atlanta, and secured the favorable ruling referred to. Now, on and after January 1, 1919, it will be possible to ship films as baggage from and to any point in the United States."

Kansas City Plans Going Through.

In Kansas City, Mo., the meeting of amusement interests on November 15 seems about to result in an organiation. It will be remembered that the speaking stage, vaudeville, burlesque, supply establishments, exchanges and exhibitors were represented at the luncheon. A committee was appointed, of which Charles W. Harden is chairman, to devise a scheme of organization to include all these interests. This committee has been doing faithful work; it has a plan which will be proposed at an early meeting. It is confidently expected that within a short time all phases of the amusement industry will be cemented into a body, formed for business purposes, that will not waste much time in social enterprises or bother much about minor dierences between elements in the industry. It will doubtless be in shape to handle any contingency that may arise because of a reappareance of the influenza epidemic.

AUTHOR MUST RESERVE CINEMA RIGHTS

Otherwise, Declares Judge Mayer in Manners-Morosco Suit, They Go with Contract for Play

AN illuminating decision interpreting the rights of producers and playwrights in their contractual relations has just been rendered by Judge Julius M. Mayer, of the United States District Court, which holds, in effect, that unless a playwright specifically reserves the motion picture rights the producer of the play is entitled to the cinema rights, at least in the duration of the contract.

This decision was handed down in an action brought by J. Hartley Manners, author of "Peg o' My Heart," against Oliver Morosco, who produced the play on the stage, which involved the actual limitation or period during which the producer was entitled to present the play on the stage as well as the moving picture rights to the production.

"When the first contract was executed, motion pictures, as the parties agree and as the testimony shows, were well known," declared Judge Mayer. "It is not controverted in this case that a motion picture of 'Peg o' My Heart' would seriously damage, from a financial standpoint, the production of the spoken play. It is difficult to suppose that Morosco, as a producing manager, would risk the money necessary to produce the play at least seventy-five times each year for several years and leave the motion picture rights outstanding in Manners. In such a situation Manners might, at any time, for some reason satisfactory to himself, sell the motion picture rights and destroy the financial value of the spoken play.

"It might very well have happened that the play, instead of turning out a great success, might have had a run of short duration with consequent lean royalties," continued Judge Mayer. "Yet the production might have been salable for motion pictures at a price in excess of any royalties which failure as a spoken play would indicate."

If such an interpretation were placed upon the contracts, Judge Mayer declared, the playwright would have an unfair advantage over the producer, who, having lost money in attempting to "put across" an unsuccessful production, would be deprived of the chance of recouping his losses from the moving picture rights.

In the absence of a specific reservation in such contracts clearly providing that a playwright reserves the motion picture rights, Judge Mayer concluded, the producer controls the cinema rights for the duration of such contracts.

Judge Mayer dismissed the suit in which Manners sought to enjoin Morosco from producing the play on the stage on the theory that he held the right to revoke what he termed a license permitting the producer to produce the play for a limited period and to restrain the producer from exercising control over the motion picture rights.

Polo Takes Away Loving Cup.

Eddie Polo, star of Universal serial pictures, the latest of which is "The Lure of the Circus," left New York Sunday night bound for Toronto, with a huge loving cup tucked into his trunk. The treasure, which is a silver thing with engraving of fine sentiments on its burnished side, represents the best wishes of the New York exhibitors to the departing visitor.

Polo's stay in Toronto, which was expected to be for about a week, is likely to be in the nature of a Christmas purchasing campaign. The star, whose professional and real life character is that of a Hercules, has the biggest job of his career in that direction. He is just now a Santa Claus for the movie queens on the coast.

Says Exhibitors Criticised Curtailment of Advertising

SPEAKING before the Associated Advertisers, Erwin J. W. Huber, managing editor and treasurer of The Pictureplay News, Rochester, N. Y., told of the methods and purposes of advertising and made the frank statement that the film industry leads all the rest of the world in effective advertising today. He told how the various film companies from the earliest beginning had to a great extent relied upon advertising and pubilcity to make a market for their goods. Mr. Huber could not understand why the film industry had shut down on advertising during the epidemic.

Mr. Huber has just returned from a half-dozen cities, where he has been studying advertising problems, giving particular attention to the needs of theatres. In every city he made it a point to talk with as many prominent managers as possible. He said the secretary of a company which controls a string of moving picture houses had told him that during the closed period it was the first time he ever had the opportunity to study the trade papers literally from cover to cover. Great was his disappointment to find that when he had time to consider any suggestions or ideas that the pages might offer, to find practically all producers had either entirely suspended or curtailed their advertising.

Another theatre manager said that he had spent a considerable portion of the closed period scrutinizing the film publications for information that would be of benefit to him in arranging the future policy of his house. He said that he studied many of the advertisements of films in the back numbers and only regretted that the producers did not lay down a heavy barrage of advertising matter during the time that the busy theatre men had loads of time to weigh their statements.

In the opinion of many theatre managers, according to Mr. Huber, the film producers made a "bonehead" play in cutting down their usual advertising space, even while they had suspended releasing of films. Mr. Huber said he was convinced more than ever that trade paper advertising was the best in the world for such such an industry, but that his experience had taught him that it must be consistent, even in the face of seeming difficulties.

Thieves Waylay Albert Brandt.

Albert Brandt, employed in the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is laid up with severe injuries received at the hands of highway robbers, who attacked him November 28 at 120th street and Lenox avenue, New York. Mr. Brandt was accosted by three men about sundown. He attempted to resist them, but was quickly overpowered. The assailants struck him over the head with blackjacks, knocking him unconscious, and robbed him of a diamond cluster pin.

GOLDFISH AND ROTHAPFEL GO ON TOUR

Producer to Make Trip to Coast and Look Things Over, While the Exhibitor Seeks Recuperation

IN order to make a thorough survey of conditions in the motion picture industry throughout America, Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, left New York December 3 on a trip to the new Goldwyn studios in Los Angeles, which will take in all the principal cities of the United States. With him went S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of New York's Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

The chief purpose of Mr. Goldfish's tour is to meet and consult with the most successful exhibitors and other leading business men in the big centres. It is his object through them to keep in touch with the trend of public thought and taste and to get opinions and suggestions that he can make use of in the production of Goldwyn pictures. At the same time he will have opportunity to visit and inspect in person the most important of the Goldwyn branches.

For Mr. Rothapfel the trip will be primarily in the nature of a vacation and rest from the activities of the most strenuous summer and fall that both exhibitors and producers of pictures have encountered. Since the news of his impending visit became known, exhibitor associations, press clubs and chambers of commerce in several cities have arranged luncheons at which Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Goldfish will be guests of honor. The first of these took place in Cleveland on Wednesday at the Hotel Winter. One of the surprises of this occasion, by the way, was the presence of Will Rogers, who recently made his cinema debut in Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde."

"My trip is primarily an educational journey," said Mr. Goldfish before he left. "I mean educational for me. I am going to admire and to see, but above all to listen and learn. You know it is rather a misfortune that a producer has for business reasons to spend so much of his time in New York. We do not produce our pictures for New York, but for America—for the entire world, in fact. It is, therefore, essential that a producer keep the closest personal contact with the exhibitor.

"We are entering upon a new phase of the cinema industry, now that the war is ended with a conclusive victory and the disastrous epidemic is over. It is obvious to anybody with half an eye that there never was such an overwhelming demand for good, popular amusements as we shall see and have to satisfy in the period that has just begun. This is the time when it becomes imperative that a producer see the exhibitors in persons—as many of them as he can meet and from as many sections of the country.

"I shall also spend four or five weeks in the new Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Cal., supervising the production of our new pictures before I return East. As you know, I have always been more interested in production than any other phase of the work. Success begins or ends with production. Of course I do not ignore distribution, but Goldwyn has a splendid business organization and now that it has got into its stride I can leave the home office with an untroubled mind."

On his way east in late January Mr. Goldfish will visit other sections of the country to meet exhibitors and look over the Goldwyn exchanges.

Jewel Taking on Old Employes.

H. M. Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, who returned a few days ago from an extended trip over the country, reports that Jewel exchange staffs are being greatly expanded to take care of men who are returning from the war service. He added further the general statement that business has developed greatly since the first influenza epidemic and the signing of the armistice. Mr. Berman traveled over the greater part of the northwest, touching the south as far as Oklahoma City.

Among the exchangemen whose names are well known in the trade and who have returned to their posts from the war are Curley Calvert, of the Omaha exchange, and Milton Feld, of Kansas City.

December Attractions at New York Theatres

STRAND.—Madge Kennedy in a screen version of the Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf stage play, "A Perfect Lady," was the feature at the Strand Theatre the week of December 1. The star appears as Lucille Le Jambon, a chorus girl, who quits the troupe at a small town and ends by marrying a local minister. James Montgomery Flagg's comedy "Independent B'Gosh," "The Riviera of Lac le Man," the Allied War Review and the Strand Topical Review were also on the program. The soloists were Margaret Weaver and Ralph Erolle.

Pearl White,

Pathe's famous serial star and DeWolf Hopper, veteran of the dramatic stage, united their efforts for the recent United War Fund Drive. They are seen here in front of a fire extension ladder truck on Fifth avenue, New York City. Miss White is about to climb the ladder as a stunt to raise funds for the drive, while Mr. Hopper will act as the "ballyhoo" man.

RIVOLI.—"Under Four Flags," the last Official picture of the closing chapters of the world war, opened a return engagement at the Rivoli. Week before last the picture was produced at both the Rivoli and the Rialto. Hugo Riesenfeld's "American Festival March" was also given.

RIALTO.—Frank McIntyre in Rex Beach's comedy, "Too Fat to Fight," headed the program at the Rialto. Hobart Henley directed the picture. Mack Sennett's "Her First Mistake," "Bad Men and Good Scenery" and the Animated Magazine were also shown. Vincente Ballester and Gladys Rice were the soloists.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—First half, Emily Stevens in "Destiny." Latter half, Mabel Normand in "Mickey."

BROADWAY.—Grace Cunard in "After the War," and "Shoulder Arms."

Kansas Convention Plans Discussed.

Plans are again being discussed for the meeting of the Kansas Exhibitors' Association. The convention, scheduled for Hutchinson more than a month ago, was called off temporarily because of the influenza epidemic. Most of the towns are now released from the restrictions. The necessity for the convention seems even more important since the experiences of the past few weeks; and when the convention is held it doubtless will have a record attendance.

Poppe Exploiting Octagon Films.

Harry H. Poppe has been appointed director of advertising and publicity for Octagon Films, Inc. He succeeds John W. Grey, who will hereafter devote all his time to scenario writing. Poppe has had wide experience in advertising and publicity capacities with both motion picture and theatrical companies. His last connection was with the Yorke-Metro Company, which produced features starring the late Harold Lockwood.

First Rest in Twelve Years.

W. S. Smith, manager of the Western studio of the Vitagraph Company, took advantage of the enforced closing of the studio to enjoy the first vacation he has had in twelve years. Mr. Smith is one of the hardest workers at the Los Angeles plant, and when the order came to "close shop" for two weeks he hit the trail for one of the ranches in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada mountains.

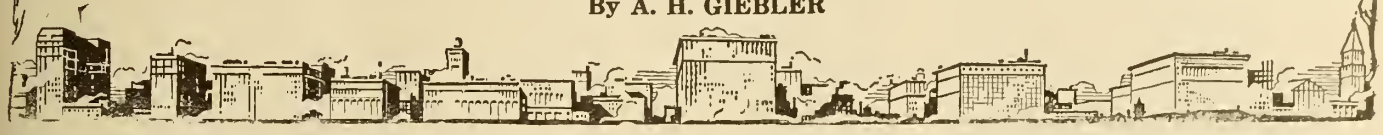
Grey Enters Writing Field.

John W. Grey has forsaken the advertising field and will hereafter devote all his time to writing. He has just formed an affiliation with Arthur B. Reeve, the well known novelist, and the two, as collaborators, will write serials for production by important manufacturers. Contracts for the disposition of much of their early material already have been signed.

The World's Classified Advertising section is a sure means to quick communication between the man who would sell and the man who wants to buy. Moving picture accessories are quickly disposed of; theatres sold and rented; many wants are weekly supplied through this excellent medium.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER



INSTALLS $7000 VENTILATING SYSTEM

New Lighting Scheme and Art Objects Also Are Placed in Grauman Theatre During Shutdown

DURING the enforced closing of all the theatres of Los Angeles while the influenza epidemic held sway, nearly all the managers and proprietors of moving picture houses put in the time cleaning and fumigating and otherwise making their houses safe and sanitary by installing ventilating systems and other conveniences for the safeguarding of the health of their patrons.

At the Grauman a $7,000 ventilating system has been installed, besides a new lighting system. A number of handsome oil paintings and other objects of art adorn staircases and rest rooms.

Tally's Broadway has undergone such a process of cleaning, renovating and fumigating that a germ of any kind would last about as long as a hail on a hot griddle in any place. The stage has been cut back and beautified with artistic decorations; new seats have been added, and the lobby has been entirely repainted and redecorated.

Fresh draperies have been hung in Quinn's Rialto wherever draperies are required in high-class theatres; a ventilating system guaranteed to furnish so many cubic feet of fresh mountain air every so many seconds has been installed, and a large symphony orchestra has been engaged to furnish the music for coming attractions.

Both the Auditorium and the Broadway, owned by W. H. Clune, have been made more healthful and more attractive during the shutdown. The Auditorium was given a complete coat of paint inside, and the stage redecorated. The Broadway's interior decorations have been made a pretty and pleasing combination of pink and white.

The Kinema has a new drop curtain, and underwent the regulation renovating process. The Alhambra has been redecorated, with a rich cream color the predominating note, while the Symphony shines in pure white.

These are the theatres in the downtown section of Los Angeles, but all theatres in the residence districts underwent the same rigorous process of renovating and refurnishing.

Fairbanks Will Go to France.

Douglas Fairbanks will make one more picture in Los Angeles, then will pack his kit and sail for the south of France, where he will film exteriors for perhaps three productions that will not be war subjects, nor treat of war conditions, but will be typical Fairbanks' stories with European atmosphere. The plans of the Fairbanks organization is to take ten members of the company, and to be gone about three months. Already the force that is to accompany Doug is learning the French and Italian languages under the direction of a teacher of foreign languages who visits the studio regularly.

Universal Opened on November 18.

The big Universal plant at Universal City opened for work on November 18, after a four weeks' layoff on account of the influenza epidemic. Within a week of the reopening it was planned to have twenty-five companies at work, including the L-KO comedy companies, the western and serial companies, and the Bluebirds. The scenario department is busy furnishing scripts to the directors of the various companies now at work.

New Fox Exchange Manager.

Paul C. Mooney, film exchange man from Cleveland, has arrived in Los Angeles with his family to take up his duties as Pacific Coast supervisor of all the Fox exchanges. C. M. Walsh is manager of the Los Angeles branch.

Fans Demand to See Paris Gowns.

When it was announced recently that Julian Eltinge would wear only masculine attire in his forthcoming picture, "The Fascinating Widower," it was the cue for protests to begin to arrive from feminine movie fans. In every mail came urgent and impassioned pleadings to Eltinge to give the public just one more view of his newest Paris creations; and June Mathis got busy and altered the story so that Eltinge would have logical excuses and reasons for wearing women's clothes in a number of scenes in the picture.

Anna Nilsson will play opposite the star, and production is scheduled to begin in the near future at the Brunton plant. Plans for the Eltinge vaudeville tour were completed here last week by wire, and call for the opening of the all-star company on the 23d of December at the Mason Opera House.

Meeting Broken Up by Officers.

A meeting held by the Theatre Owners' Association at Quinn's Rialto on November 19 was broken up by the police because of a misunderstanding as to the number of persons allowed to attend. Frank MacDonald, president of the association, secured permission from the Board of Health to held the meeting, and about fifty members of the organization attended. Discussions were being carried on as to whether it was worth while to open the theatres and admit only persons wearing "flu" masks or wait until the ban was lifted entirely by the Board of Health, when the police descended upon the assembly and dispersed the members in short order.

Pneumonia Takes Comedian.

Wayland Trask, comedian of the Mack Sennett studios, died of pneumonia at his home in Los Angeles, on November 18. Trask had been the featured player in many a comedy during his screen career, his size and weight of 285 pounds making him a splendid foil for smaller comedians in Sennett comedies. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Jane L. Trask, and two sisters, Mrs. Allan Leonard and Miss Dorothy Trask.

Selig Plant Reopens.

The Selig studio, near Lincoln Park in Los Angeles, has been reopened for the production of pictures. Oscar Apfel, who arrived from Chicago a short time ago, has been engaged by William Selig to film "Ravished Armenia," and it is being bruited about that other companies are being formed to work in forthcoming Selig productions, and that before the first of the year as many as a dozen different producing units may be at work at the great plant. Mr. Selig himself is expected on the West Coast soon, when the plans of the organization will be announced.

Bakersfield Theatre Man Dies.

Charles Grogg, owner of four theatres in Bakersfield, Cal., died on November 19, after a few days' illness, and following closely the death of his brother, Cornelius Grogg. Charles Grogg is survived by a wife and two-year-old son. Mrs. Grogg will continue to carry on the business of the Grogg Theatrical Enterprises.

Operation on Nose.

Madame Yorska, French tragedienne, has sacrificed two sections of her nose upon the altar of cinema art. Madame's nose, which was formerly of the oriental type, fitted perfectly the heroine of Sarah Bernhardt's story, "The Infernal Snare." But the next story that was selected for the star by her director, Gordon Matzene, demanded that the heroine have a Grecian nose. Mme. Yorska, who had always secretly thought that there was room for improvement on her nose, went to a doctor and had part of it trimmed off.

"It was a painful operation," said Madame, "but I have a perfect nose now, and I am very happy over it."

Universalites Gone East.

Two of the brightest of the Big U stars and their directors departed for New York last week. Dorothy Phillips and her director, Allan Holubar, who have recently completed "Victory," and wished to be present at its premiere in Manhattan, left early in the week. Later, Mae Murray and Robert Leonard, who have finished a series of four pictures for Universal, took the train for the East.

M. P. Specialists.

Gilbert P. Hamilton, former film director, and George P. Kern, have opened offices in Hollywood, and, calling themselves motion picture specialists, are prepared to handle anything from a star to a spotlight.

Sixth Theatre Opened by Fairbanks.

When the California Theatre in Los Angeles is formally opened to the public in December, with its first attraction a Douglas Fairbanks film, it will make the sixth large theatre that has been opened by Fairbanks. In order to have "Arizona" finished in time for the opening, the force of editors and cutters at the Fairbanks plant are working overtime assembling and completing the picture. Fairbanks' pictures opened the Rialto, Rivoli and Knickerbocker theatres in New York, the Strand in New Orleans, and Marcus Loew's theatre in Washington, D. C., in addition to ten other theatres in smaller towns.

Instead of the conventional floral piece that is usually sent to new theatres on opening night, Doug will present the management with a huge cactus plant.

Star Awards Gold Medal.

Margarita Fisher, who promised a gold medal to the first aviator from Rockwell Field who brought down a German plane, has been notified that Lieut. Frank Luke, of Phoenix, Ariz., brought down his first Hun on September 12. Just five days later another man from Rockwell brought down another plane. On September 28, Lieutenant Luke, after having downed several enemy planes, fell inside the German lines and was taken prisoner, it is believed. In the event that he has been killed, Miss Fisher will send the medal to the young man's father in Phoenix.

Laughlin Theatre Changes Hands.

The Broadway Theatre Company, of Los Angeles, which for two years has been operating the Superba Theatre, has taken over the Laughlin, one of the largest theatres in Long Beach. Matthew Bridge, who has been in charge of the Superba, will manage the Laughlin, and the first attraction under the new management will be Rex Beach's Goldwyn picture, "Laughing Bill Hyde," with a Harold Lloyd-Pathe comedy to round out the show. A new symphony orchestra will be conducted by Benjamin Laitsky.

Ban On Again.

Pomona and Pasadena, towns near Los Angeles, opened theatres, churches and schools for one week, then closed down again because an alarming number of new cases of influenza had broken out among the poorer classes of residents.

Los Angeles Brevities.

Sigmund Moos, who came west with President Carl Laemmle, of Universal, has joined the sales forces of the Universal exchange.

The theatre managers of Los Angeles decided early in the week of November 18 that they would not open their theatres until it was safe for their patrons to attend the show unmasked.

Bert St. John, manager of Clune's Auditorium, has returned from a business trip to San Francisco.

Carl Ray, one of the officials of the Miller Theatre, is now able to be out after a serious spell of pneumonia.

Studio Shots.

JACK HOLT has been engaged to play opposite Anita Stewart in her first picture to be made in the west under the direction of Lois Weber.

A bag containing three pairs of shoes belonging to Edna Purviance was stolen from her automobile one day last week. Besides the shoes were a nightgown, an ivory mirror and comb, cold cream and face powder.

William Parker, scenarioist, has been ill, but to date it has not been pronounced "Flu."

Eva Tanguay, who flew from San Francisco to Los Angeles to avoid the wearing of a flu mask, has nevertheless succumbed to a mild attack of Flu.

Al Ray is expecting his mother to come from the east to make her home with him in Hollywood.

Waldemar Young, staff author at Universal, passed a busy flu vacation. He prepared scenarios for three productions, then found time to go hunting and fishing.

Florence Oberle, well known film character actress, has just received word that her son, Jack Oberle, with the American forces in France, is dead.

Mabel Normand arrived last week to begin work in "Sis" Hopkins" for Goldwyn. Sets for the production were being erected at the studio the day Miss Normand arrived.

Aurora Mardiganian, the Armenian girl who will play an important part in "Ravished Armenia," has had a severe attack of Flu.

Helen Keller made an airplane flight one day last week for a special scene in her new picture. Miss Keller said she felt as if she were leaving her mortal self behind her and was rising into eternity.

Clara Horton has been cast for an important part in Shirley Mason's new picture.

Tom Santschi is playing the heavy in the newest Billie Rhodes feature, "In Seach of Arcady." Wellington Playter has the leading male role.

Shirley Mason, who arrived in Los Angeles just a few days ago, is already at work on her first picture to be made in the west at the Lasky plant.

Colonel Mary Pickford, when she could not accept the invitation by cable to go to France to join her regiment in their peace celebration, sent a cable and a check for $1,000, to make up for her absence in the jollification.

When Peggy Hyland arrived in Los Angeles last week she didn't want to go to a hotel. She wanted a bungalow and wanted it right away.

Anita Stewart and her mother will take a house in Hollywood for the time she will work at the Lois Weber studio on First National productions.

Clara Kimball Young, who has just finished the filming of "Cheating Cheaters" under the direction of Allan Dwan, will spend a few weeks in New York—reason: Frocks—before she begins on her next picture.

According to a wire just received at Brunton, Frank Keenan is on his way west to begin a new series of features for Pathe distribution.

Colleen Moore has been engaged as leading woman for Charles Ray in his new play.

Jack Kerrigan and Monroe Salisbury and other screen stars were guests of Constance Crawley at a recent "salon" given by the actress.

Frank Lloyd, who has just finished the William Farnum picture, "For Freedom," in the east, has come west to make his next production.

Kate Lester, grand dame of the stage and screen, has arrived in Los Angeles to appear in Goldwyn feature to be made at Culver City.

Alfred Whitman is playing opposite Bessie Barriscale in her current production.

J. B. Woodside is said to have deserted the ranks of film press agents and to have reverted to type—he is again a newspaper man.

Earle Williams is being sued for breach of promise for $160,000 by Roma Raymond of New York.

Bothwell Browne has taken a house near Hermosa Beach, and among other Southern California luxuries has installed a furnace in it.

Henry B. Walthall starts on his new feature, "Lives for Sale," within a few days, at the National studios, with Louis William Chaudet directing.

Joe Roach, who recently returned from France, where he served with honor in the Sanitary Service, is writing scenarios for the William Fox studios.

Michigan Exhibitors Plan a Protective Association

A MOVEMENT is on foot to organize The Michigan Theatre Owners' Protective Association, its object being to combat adverse legislation in state and city as well as any movement which is to the detriment of the exhibiting business. Theatre owners in Michigan are broadminded and are willing to take their medicine if they are in the wrong at any time, but exhibitors are waking up to the fact that they are getting this sort of thing in big doses away beyond what is necessary to get results. While it was generally felt conditions did not justify closing down the theatres during the recent influenza epidemic, exhibitors took what was handed them and said little. Since the state ban was removed dozen of health officers and boards in the smaller towns have exercised their authority beyond reason and have closed theatres, while permitting churches and stores to operate. In many towns exhibitors are wrought up over such discrimination, and yet they are powerless to do anything. However, they would not be helpless if they had an organization with sufficient funds to engage competent executives to guide them and to take their part.

A preliminary session of several dozen of the leading theatre owners of the state will be held in Detroit in a few weeks, and then a general call will go out for a big meeting, at which the whole plan of organization will be presented and some definite action taken. The legislature meets right after January 1, and already there is talk of some antagonistic bills coming up.

"When Your Soldiers Hit" Set for Dec. 23.

"When Your Soldiers Hit," the first of the U. S. A. Series of two-reelers announced by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, will be released December 23. "The Bath of Bullets," which was scheduled for the second picture of the series, has been set back, and the first release will be followed in January by "Wings of Victory," which tells the story of how, after seemingly insurmountable difficulties, the production of war planes in the United States reached notable proportions. Every phase of the making of the Government airplanes is shown.

"When Your Soldiers Hit," the first picture, shows the American people for the first time just how the wounded were rescued from the battlefields, how they were cared for and moved back to field hospitals, and ultimately to base hospitals, where they were given every scientific care.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

NOTICE is hereby served that no more publicity will be given to the Spanish influenza in this department, and apologies are offered for the unintentional touting the malady has received at our hands.

As an epidemic, the "flu" is a proper subject for comment, but we never thought it was as big a publicity hound as some actors that might be named, or that while we were kidding it along and poking fun at it that we were causing the darn thing to stick around by making it believe its act was good.

We now hold, along with Adam Hull Shirk, Harry Garson, Fatty Arbuckle, H. H. Van Loan, Harry Northrup and others that if everybody would stop talking about the "flu," pretty soon we would have no "flu," and that being the case we are going to do all we can to help kill it off by swatting it with what Irvin Cobb calls the "thunders of silence."

We want to remark in passing, however, that as a collector of publicity, the "flu" is not to be sneezed at.

This week witnessed the grand opening of the Rainy Season. The word "rain" is used for the benefit of Eastern readers. Precipitation occurs quite frequently and quite copiously in Los Angeles during certain periods of the year, but it never rains—at least, so far as the local press is concerned. We take our rains very seriously from a journalistic standpoint, and during the first few weeks of the moist season, nothing escapes us.

Enough precipitation to damped a postage stamp sufficiently to enable it to adhere to a letter without the assistance of a little spit is duly recorded and chronicled.

Clouds Precipitate All Over Everything.

A downpour of this character gets a display head on the front page. A tenth of an inch is worth a two-column spread with sub-heads and everything, and anything like a sizable shower is called a storm and extras are imminent.

At any rate, on Tuesday, a number of somber-hued and beetle-browed clouds held a mass meeting up on top of Lookout Mountain and then came on down town and precipitated all over everything.

This caused various adjustments in the movie colony. Companies ready to go out on location did not go. Chester Conklin took an hour off and a lead pencil stub and figured the probable profit the rain would bring to his bean ranch. Herbert Heyes bought a new umbrella. Albert Shelby LeVino phoned his wife to look up his seed catalogues against his return from the studio that night.

Wilfred Lucas had distinct symptoms of lumbago. Charley, the elephant, out at Universal City, got a bath. Bud Duncan's corns registered, still being on the job. Charlie Murray arranged to get milk from a dairy situated in the dry belt, and D. W. Griffith said, "Somebody light up the gas heaters."

Slickers and gum shoes went up 25 per cent. in price.

The rain made it a good week for rubbernecking. Everybody was at home. At the Sunset plant I found Allan Dwan, armed with a bran' new megaphone, making some of the final scenes for "Cheating Cheaters," with his all-star cast.

Directing Veterans Not So Easy.

"Must be nice and easy to direct a bunch of veterans," I remarked to Allan, whereat a sad look came over his countenance.

"It might be easier," he said, "if there were more centers to each scene. There is a point in every scene immediately in front of the camera that draws the star like a magnet. With only one star, things go nice and smooth, but with six or eight, there is more or less confusion and jostling."

Dwan made a scenes with Clara Kimball Young, Jack Holt and Nicholas Dunaew and Edwin Stevens, and as I did not see any of the camera monopoly he alluded to, I am inclined to think he was kidding.

I climbed to the upper decks of the William S. Hart studios, invaded the star's dressing room, and found "Bill" killing time between scenes of "Careless Carmody," the drama now on the fire at the Hart plant, by breaking in a young and skittish typewriter.

Melody of Hart Typewriter Perfect.

Mr. Hart handles a typewriter with the same ease that he does a gun or a pony. His method, while characterized with considerable absence of technique, is at once free, firm and filled with sang froid. His style might be considered faulty by a recent graduate of a business college. He is inclined to linger on the base somewhat—his tempo gets mixed with his motif at times, and his solo movements might be speeded up to advantage, but the melody is perfect. There is a rhythm to his work reminiscent of Verdi's Bella Figlia Dell' Amore. It would make a bear of a one-step.

Mr. Hart uses the Hunt and Peck One Finger system affected by many great writers, and my own favorite method, and considering the fact that he never took a lesson in his life and plays entirely by ear his execution is marvelous.

It was easy to see that the machine had a hard mouth, but it's a cinch that Bill will have it well gaited, gentle as a dog, and so that a woman can ride it with limber bit and without spurs in a very short time.

News came from downstairs that visitors had arrived at the studio, and while Bill changed his costume I went down and found Seena Owen, who plays the girl in "Careless Carmody," and little Buster Irving entertaining R. L. "Snowy" Baker, the noted Australian athletic impresario, and George Smith, who is with the David Belasco, William A. Brady, Alex Pantages and Orpheum Circuit of the Antipodes.

When Hart came down he and "Snowy" Baker, who is an old friend of his, got to swapping stories. Bill told of his life with the Indians, and of the free days of the wild and woolly west, and Baker came back with tales of the Australian bush.

"Snowy" promised to send Bill some souvenirs—a kangaroo or two, and a boomerang or so, and then Bill presented "Snowy" with his original sheriff shirt, a shirt that has been in more pictures than any shirt in the movies.

Rubbernecker Chokes on Hart Shirt.

I thought the occasion called for a few appropriate words, and was going to volunteer to say them, make a sort of presentation speech with a few side remarks on shirts in general and wind up with a very funny shirt tale that I like to tell, but it was all so pathetic. Good old Bill parting with his sheriff shirt—friendship is a great thing—a shirt that witnessed his success, a shirt that had supported the golden head of many a heroine while she was being saved from the scowling heavy—I got all choked up and couldn't say a word.

Feeling the need of merriment I left there and went out to the Chaplin plant.

"Is Charlie working?" I inquired of Alfred Reeves.

"Come with me," said Al, and I followed him out on the lot to where the inimitable Charles was doping out a new comedy. It was good stuff—Chaplin is just as funny making a comedy as he is in the finished film, but because there are many copy-cats in filmland—stuff that may not be spoken of here.

The Bridegroom and the Grindstone.

I chirked up quite a bit, and then—Charlie mounted to the chauffeur's seat of a grindstone, threw her in high, opened the muffler and was off—and sadness settled her somber shadow on my brow again.

To any man who has worn the galling

chains of matrimony long enough to know the terrible truth of the fable of the married man's nose and the grindstone, the sight of a newly created benedict and an instrument of this sort cannot but give rise to shudders of sympathy and the saddest of sad thoughts.

There was Charlie, freshly wedded, fooling with a grindstone, the symbol of marital chains, all unconscious of what the future has in store for all married men!

Wringing the hand of Edward W. Biby, who also understands, I dashed the tears from my eyes and stumbled away to the Pacific Electric street car and was so overcome that I almost lacked strength to call the conductor's attention to the fact that he had given me too much change for the four-bit piece I tendered him in payment of my fare.

St. John Exchange Tax Probably Will Be Lowered

A RECENT event of interest in St. John was the coming to that city of L. Ernest Ouimet, general manager of the Specialty Film Import, of Toronto. Mr. Ouimet represented the Motion Picture Board of Trade, and came to that city to put before the council the case of the film exchanges in St. John and their reasons for feeling that they must locate elsewhere. A conference was held with Mr. Ouimet and Mayor Hayes on Tuesday, November 12, and then Mr. Ouimet, with some of those interested, appeared before the mayor and commissioners on Wednesday, November 20.

Mr. Ouimet gave facts and figures as to the taxes levied on film exchanges in other towns, showing that St. John taxes were higher than in Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal even without the proposed tax on one half of the gross income. One exchange in the city had paid four years ago $67. This year it was asked to pay $440. In Calgary an exchange paid $17.46, while in St. John, N. B., it was taxed up to $400.

Maritime Exchanges Losing Money.

It was pointed out that in the larger cities the opportunities for selling film were so much greater and that every exchange is at present operating at a loss in the Maritime Provinces. It was natural therefore that the exchange managers should seek to cut expenses and to locate where they could get some measure of tax exemption.

It is claimed, Mr. Ouimet said, that $100,000 is paid out in St. John, which included the censors' salaries, rents, and all the expenses of running an office.

The taxes were gone over in detail, naming first the Dominion tax, next the import tax of $30 a reel, then the provincial tax which must be paid for each province, then the censor tax also in each province for each reel of film, then the personal tax, as well as this new one, which was to be on one-half the gross proceeds.

Exchanges May Stay.

The poor exhibitor had to pay a Dominian war tax of fifteen cents a reel a day, admission tax for each province, license tax, seat tax, as well as personal and property taxes. In all it made the separate taxes (if a man happened to be an exhibitor as well as an exchange man) mount up to seventeen different kinds.

Mr. Ouimet made a most favorable impression on the Council, and it is proposed to amend the by-law so that it may be much fairer. While Mr. Ouimet had to report to the Motion Picture Board of Trade at Toronto, he intimated that it seemed probable the exchanges would stay in St. John.

Another argument used was to show that the express companies would have to withdraw one man at least, as it requires the services of one man to look after the shipping of film. The loss to the town of the personnel of the exchanges was described, and the importance of encouraging rather than discouraging an industry which helps so materially to build up a city dwelt upon. The fact that adding the expense of express charges to the already high cost of running a theatre meant in all probability the raising of admission prices, thus cutting off from the poor man his favorite form of amusement, was another good argument cited.

Exhibitors Lose Privilege of C. O. D. Film Shipments

FILM producers and exchanges throughout the country will be gratified to learn that the Postmaster-General has ordered postmasters to refuse to accept collect-on-delivery shipments of motion picture films from exhibitors and addressed to film manufacturers, distributors or exchanges.

That this order has been issued as a direct result of the abuses which have been practiced by exhibitors in sending films back to the exchanges with large-sized charges attached is evidenced by the fact that the order provides that motion picture films, shipped C. O. D. and addressed to exhibitors may still be accepted from producers, distributors or exchanges. Films being shipped by exhibitors, however, will be accepted only as insured mail or, if sealed, as first-class registered matter.

Exchangemen for a long time have been endeavoring to secure some such action from the express companies in an attempt to combat the practice of some exhibitors in returning films with charges attached for various reasons. It is declared that if an exhibitor feels that a certain film failed to secure for him as great a profit as it should, he sends it back to the exchange with a charge sufficient to make up the difference. Or, if a film was not in the best of condition, he may make a claim for damages—but makes sure of collecting it by sending the film back C. O. D. in advance of his letter. Or, again, if he desires to collect a deposit he may have with an exchange—back goes the last film, collect, for the amount.

Distributors declare that if the express companies, also under the control of the Government, will follow the example of the Post Office Department and refuse exhibitors the privilege of C. O. D. shipments, they will be able to put a stop to this practice, which is not only expensive, but frequently very inconvenient, since a C. O. D. shipment is held by the transporting agency until all charges are paid.

It is possible that the exhibitors will put up a kick, charging discrimination, but, undoubtedly, had they not so abused the privilege as to make it seem advisable to the Department to take it away, the order would not have been issued.

"SMILE FILM" ON THE WAY TO FRANCE

Chicago Boys Over There Will See Face to Face Relatives and Sweethearts and View Home Scenes

THE Chicago "Smile Film," referred to in my letter of October 26, will be well on its way to France by the time this article is read. Ever since October 12 this production has been underway—the first of its kind ever filmed, and, therefore, one of the most unique. Its making demonstrates in a most convincing manner the remarkable serviceability, as well as the potency, of the moving picture as a form of human expression. What word of mouth or pen or printing press could carry the joy or the delightful realism which these pictures will bring to the Illinois soldier boys in France! And around Christmas and New Year's time what other medium could so effectively annihilate for the time the loneliness of our boys and the distance that separates them from the home circle and their loved ones?

The Chicago Herald - Examiner fathered the plan, and, in conjunction with Watterson R. Rothacker, has completed it in a broad and worthy manner. The scope of the plan broadened as the work proceeded, until the finished product reached a length of 26,683 feet, every foot of which will be considered indispensable by the boys over there.

At first it was the intention to confine the pictures to the showing of the relatives and sweethearts of the boys of the "Dandy First" and the "Old Second" of Illinois, now respectively the 131st and the 132d Infantry. In its completed form the "Smile Film" devotes about 3,000 feet each to these subjects, while the two sections of the 149th Field Artillery are given nearly the same length. The Black Hawk division, comprised of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin boys, is honored with nearly five reels, and the relatives and sweethearts of the Marines and of the Illinois colored troops are each given a section close on 2,000 feet.

Will Include Chicago Views.

To convince the Chicago boys that they are really at home while viewing the pictures, favorite views of the city and its environs have been given—such as dancing bears in Lincoln Park and other familiar scenes; two full reels of home scenes full of surprises; a glimpse of the widening of the Lake Shore Drive from Randolph street to Chicago avenue, and stirring views of the Victory celebration on November 11, especially one showing what Chicagoans declare to be the busiest corner in the whole world (State and Madison) on that day of days for the inhabitants of the Lake City.

The pictures allotted each unit are headed by a picture of Governor Lowden, who greets the boys at the opening of the film, while further on Judge Landis appears and tells the soldiers to give the Germans "both barrels." Director Rex Weber, under the title, "And when you come home, boys, this is what we'll do to the old town," has given a humorous scene which shows the turning of Chicago upside down. By a contrivance of his own, Mr. Weber turned the camera over during the taking of the scene, while the camera man continued to turn the crank.

Charles S. Hart, director of the moving picture division of the Bureau of Public Information, who left for France a fortnight ago, will receive the "Smile Film" when it arrives, and will see to it that the sections will be rushed to the various military units by special messenger wherever they may be stationed. The Y. M. C. A. operators, one of whom is assigned to each brigade, will screen the pictures in the Red Triangle huts on Christmas Eve, and will continue daily until New Year's day is over.

Wounded Soldiers to See Films.

Arrangements have been made also for the showing of the "Smile Film" to wounded soldiers whose relatives and sweethearts appear in the pictures, as they will be shown at convalescent camps. It will also be attended to that "boys" on furlough in Paris or elsewhere who belong to the Illinois units shall see the "Smile Film."

Units encamped beyond the Rhine will not be overlooked, while those who may be stationed in Metz, Strassburg, Coblenz and Cologne will also be partners in the pleasure brought by the "Smile Film." Base hospitals in Paris, where the miscellaneous and train units are stationed, will also be remembered.

It is expected the Black Hawk division will be in France till after the holidays, so that they will not be disappointed as a unit in seeing their section.

President Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, tells me that Director Rex Weber and his assistants are thoroughly exhausted by the incessant work on the "Smile Film." Just as soon as they have rested work will be begun on assembling the print that will be placed on exhibition for the sweethearts and relatives of the soldiers here. Their hearty co-operation with the Herald-Examiner made it possible to make the pictures for the boys over there.

"Lure of the Circus" Cheered.

The Lane Technical High School Band of twenty-five pieces led a parade of 500 youngsters, dressed in clown costumes, one night last week in the vicinity of the Acme Theatre, owned by Harry Miller, where the first episode of "The Lure of the Circus," Eddie Polo's new serial, was shown. The theatre was packed and the applause was deafening at times.

Universal Manager Tells of "Flu" in His Territory

THE manager of Universal's Indianapolis exchange, R. W. Abbett, paid the city a visit last week. During a conversation he informed me that Indianapolis had been hit pretty hard by the "flu" epidemic, having been closed for four weeks. The second week, after opening up the city, the Health Board ordered masks to be worn in all public places, including theatres, churches, stores, street cars, etc. Public schools in the meantime were kept closed. During the week of November 25 it was left to the discretion of the people themselves whether they wore masks or not.

"Business conditions at present in Indianapolis is such that exhibitors are complaining considerably, as scarcely one-half the normal volume of business is being done," Mr. Abbett said.

An exception to this, however, was the Circle Theatre, Bob Lieber's well known house, where crowds packed it during the run of "Husbands Only," a Jewel picture, featuring Mildred Harris, now Mrs. Charles Chaplin.

Mr. Abbett said that Southern Indiana was entirely under quarantine, with the single exception of Evansville. Theatres in the southern section were allowed to open when the ban was lifted in Indianapolis (November 2), but were again closed and have so remained ever since. This section is furnished with Universal films from the Indianapolis office.

Kentucky, with the exception of Louisville, has been entirely closed since October 7, at least that section of it which is booked from the Indianapolis office. A few houses were opened, however, during the week of November 25, in Bowling Green, Owensboro and Henderson. The eastern section of the state is booked from the Cincinnati office, so that Mr. Abbett could say nothing about quarantine conditions there.

Operators' Union Demands Higher Pay from Exhibitors

THE members of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., this city, have made a formal demand for an increase in wages, and it is being considered by the members of the Allied Amusement Association, of which Peter J. Schaefer is president.

About a year ago the request of the operators for an increase was settled by granting them 75 cents an hour, overtime to be paid at the rate of time and a half. The present demand is for $1.25 an hour and double time on Sundays.

It is believed that a compromise will be made on these terms and that a strike will be averted. That would be the cheapest and the most sensible way to settle the question.

Miss Melcher Is Organist at Furniss' Rex Theatre

MISS KATHERINE C. MELCHER, one of the most talented woman organists in the city, who has made a specialty of playing organ accompaniment to the presentation of moving pictures for several years, left for Duluth Wednesday, November 27, to take the position of organist at the Rex Theatre, the principal house on the circuit owned by Thomas Furniss.

Miss Melcher has also been conductor of orchestras for dramatic and vaudeville attractions and has always been in great demand in musical circles. She studied the organ and piano under Harrison Wild and other widely known masters of these instruments.

Miss Melcher is well known in North Shore society in Chicago, and is a prominent clubwoman. For two years she held office in the Catholic Woman's Club of Rogers Park and in the Society of Saint Rose, besides being an active member of eight other clubs.

In the fall season last year, when the Chicago Grand Opera Company's orchestra played the accompaniment to a number of feature moving pictures at the Auditorium, Miss Melcher was honored by being selected to play the great organ in that building, and acquitted herself admirably.

Miss Melcher is a prominent member of the Chicago Federation of Musicians and rendered fine service to Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., about a year ago, by compiling a complete list of nontaxable music for exhibitors generally. This list appeared in the Moving Picture World at the time, in several issues, and proved invaluable to exhibitors throughout this country and Canada.

The Chicago office of this publication wishes Miss Melcher great success in Duluth, and the writer, personally, congratulates Tom Furniss heartily on his happy find.

The Randolph Will Open Xmas Day.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer will open a new theatre, the Randolph, on Christman day. Announcement of the building of this house appeared in these columns several months ago. It is situated on Randolph street, a few doors west from State street, on one of the busiest thoroughfares in the city. The capacity is not yet exactly known, but it will be anywhere from 900 to 1,100 seats.

Louis J. Jones, at one time manager of the Studebaker Theatre, has been appointed manager of the Randolph and the assistant manager will be Walter H. Moore, who has held a similar position with the Orpheum Theatre, on State street, for several years.

Universal Items of Interest.

S. J. Goldman, sales manager of Jewel Productions in Chicago, when seen last week, stated that Mildred Harris' latest picture, "Borrowed Clothes," is going over big in Chicago territory. "Women are all exceedingly anxious to see her work on the screen since she has become Mrs. Chaplin," said Mr. Goldman.

Harry M. Burman, general sales manager of Jewel Productions, stopped over in the city Monday, November 25, on his way to New York from middle western territory in which he had spent about three weeks calling on Universal exchange men. He reported that business was picking up, but that much of the territory was still under quarantine.

"Lafayette, We Come!" at Ziegfeld.

"Lafayette, We Come!" had a week's showing at the Ziegfeld Theatre, ending Friday evening, November 29. The management of the Ziegfeld reports a large attendance for the entire period and that great enthusiasm prevailed. This feature is the first release of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, which recently acquired control of the Mutual Film Corporation, the new organization being known as the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Company.

American Film Company's News.

R. R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Company, Inc., returned last week from a trip to New York, where he remained five days. While in the metropolis Mr. Nehls was engaged in arranging a big export deal for his company. The proposition is already well under way, and he expects to complete it in the near future. He reports that the foreign trade is getting brisker.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the company, left for the Santa Barbara studios Thursday, November 28, where he will remain for about three weeks, looking after the reopening of the studios after the fixed closed period.

H. E. Belford, formerly chief assistant to Joseph Hopp, has succeeded him as American's representative in Chicago territory, with headquarters in Pathe's Chicago office. Mr. Belford has been for a long time connected with the film business as an expert salesman in Chicago territory.

Bonneville New Publicity Director.

T. D. Bonneville, who, since its inauguration, has been the principal traveling publicity and business representative of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, has been appointed director of publicity and advertising of the division, succeeding W. J. McInnis.

W. D. Coxey, who has been in charge of the press bureau, has resigned to become advance business manager for Harry Lauder.

Tucker to Make Mayflowers.

George Loane Tucker has signed a contract with the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation to produce a series of super pictures. Mr. Tucker will leave for Los Angeles this week with John W. McKay, business manager for Mayflower, and will start at once on his first production.

BURLINGHAM FILM FULL OF THRILLS

Sherry's "Scrambles in the Alps" a Most Remarkable Example of Daring Mountain Climbing

WHAT is undoubtedly a most thrilling example of mountain climbing will be found in one of the latest of the Sherry-Burlingham releases, "Scrambles in the High Alps," exhibited at the Strand Theatre, New York City, during the week of November 24.

The picture, which is also a sample of excellent photography, opens with a view of giant precipices, followed by a close-up of a group of the famous Zermatt guides, men who daily risk their lives among the crags and glaciers of the Alps. On the way from Zermatt, the great Alpine center, we come to the "wall of rendezvous," where the guides wait for belated tourists, and where we pause a moment to watch a party pass on and upward to the ice fields beyond. In the distance we catch a glimpse of Scene from "Scrambles in the High Alps" (Sherry-Burlingham).

Le Dent Blanche, 14,318 feet in height, rom which our attention is attracted to series of wooden canals at our sides vhich carry the water from the mountain streams to be used for purposes of rrigation; and finally at nightfall we top to rest at an Alpine cabin.

The next morning we follow the party on its thrilling climb, passing as ve go Black Lake and chapel, where he peasants gather to pray for rain n time of drouth. Monte Rosa, which s half in Switzerland and half in Italy, ooks at us from the distance, and as ve rise amid a sea of clouds we gaze on the Matterhorn, also a distant peak. At a height of 12,000 feet a dizzy landcape beckons us, and the daring guides vith their followers begin to do stunts hat would put our "human flies" to hame. There among crags of immeasrable dangers they scramble with nothng but a rope and their fellows beween them and death. The accompanyng cut gives the best illustration that still picture can give of the final hrill of the film.

Some of the scenes of this picture are nusually beautiful and bring to the screen a realism from the realms of eternal snow. With the exception of "Facing Death on the Blumisalp," which was one of Frederick Burlingham's first releases through the William L. Sherry Service, we have seen no picture of this character which can approach "Scrambles in the High Alps" in adventurous color. M. I. M.

Winnipeg Men Denounce Proposed Building By-Law

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made at Winnipeg, Manitoba, that the much-discussed by-law which would require local exchanges to remove to one story fireproof structures, will probably not go to the City Council until after the new year—after the municipal elections. It is also declared that there may be some modification of the clause which will compel the exchanges to accommodate themselves in one story buildings. Other clauses of the by-law will go to the City Council for a vote. It is also intimated that another clause providing for a municipal fee from exchanges will be added.

The Winnipeg exchanges are already paying a Provincial license fee of $250 a year as well as a fee of $2 a reel for the censoring of pictures. The exchanges also pay a business tax to the city as well as duty and war tax on imported films. Winnipeg theatres pay an annual license fee to the city of from $200 to $500, and the exhibitors also pay a fee of 20 cents a seat a year to the Province of Manitoba. In addition to all this, the theatre patrons pay the amusement war tax on all admissions.

On November 23, the Winnipeg exchange in the city, and the managers were preparing to move from Winnipeg altogether if the film exchange by-law is passed by the city council in any form. Modifications promised did not interest them because they would not be doing business in Winnipeg if any of the proposed clauses were passed.

The famous by-law was copied from legislation which occupied the attention of Chicago film men some time ago. Winnipeg exchange managers declared that they wanted the city to leave present regulations alone because they were capable enough to guard against any possible fires in exchanges. No fires had yet occurred in any exchange in the city and the managers would be "fools" not to take all necessary precautions.

Red Cross Films Make Vaudeville Hit.

The weekly American Red Cross war work films began appearing generally as a regular part of the United Booking Offices program on November 24 at the principal vaudeville houses all over the country. Wherever the films were shown, reports indicate that they were received with enthusiasm, and their debut is regarded a notable success. Every General Film Company exchange was kept busy providing prints for the dates which opened the series of bookings.

In New York the Red Cross films as program subjects made their principal first appearance at the Palace theatre, which is correctly known as the parent house of all vaudeville. Here the picture chosen was "Rebuilding Broken Lives," an absorbing visualization of the manner in which soldiers minus an arm or leg are fitted to pursue the arts of peace and industry through all kinds of clever mechanical contrivances and through instruction in various trades.

Picture Salesmen Say the Theatres Are Prosperous

REPORTS arriving at the home office from salesmen of World Pictures, referring to business conditions throughout the country, establish the fact that motion picture theatres are enjoying a prosperity that tops any like period of the past three years. One salesman added a poetical touch to his statement when he said: "They are coming back to the picture shops like a huge army, finding resistance gone, sweeps all before it."

Another salesman says: "The only thing that is bothering the exhibitors now is 'what class of pictures shall I run?' It is the subject matter of photoplays that will appeal is giving him the greatest concern."

Denver says: American stories with American locale, sprinkled with laughs.

St. Louis wants no American made war dramas that existed only in the minds of the scenario writer. Neither does it want underworld stuff.

Chicago expresses a preference for human stuff with plenty of youth and the romance that goes with it.

New Orleans wants excitement that does not strain the imagination in order to create the semblance of truth.

And so on. On one point they are unanimous. They do not want the swashbuckling pictures disguised in modern clothes. Moving picture patrons want the photoplays that have an element of common sense shown in the selection of the subject matter and a rational development in the matter of the plot as expressed in the continuity.

Lift Censorship on Export Films.

On and after December 9 there will be no further censorship of motion picture films intended for exportation from the United States. An announcement to this effect followed a conference in Washington in the office of Dr. L. S. Rowe, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. This conference was participated in by officials of the Customs Division of the Treasury, representatives of the War Trade Board and of the Committee on Public Information.

No Extension for Pathe Serial.

"The Lightning Raider," Pearl White's next Pathe serial, will positively not be extended beyond its original length of fifteen episodes, says Vice-President Paul Brunet, of Pathe.

Peggy Hyland in California.

Peggy Hyland, the William Fox star, arrived in Los Angeles on November 20. This is Miss Hyland's first trip to the Coast. Her director, Harry Millarde, arrived from the East a week ahead of Miss Hyland.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

IN DISCUSSING the proposed amalgamation of the National Exhibitors' League with the N. A. M. P. I. we called attention last week to the lack of organization among exhibitors and mentioned in a very general way the reasons for that lack. While those reasons are the probable immediate causes of the unorganized state of the exhibition business there is an underlying cause more potent than those mentioned, namely, antagonism to producers. In the beginning the avowed purpose of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was to oppose the manufacturer; to prevent him charging higher rentals and from doing a lot of things that cost money to the exhibitor. This spirit exists in a measure today and has made possible the promotion of several schemes promoted with the purpose of punishing the manufacturer, but which turned out to be in the interest of the promoter's private pocket and were really schemes to exploit the exhibitor. Consequently, between the handicap of a wrong purpose and exploiting leaders the individual exhibitor has acquired a dislike for any kind of organization plan that may be offered.

What the exhibitor would like to know before he approves the plan to affiliate him with the N. A. M. P. I. is whether or not his interests will be protected by that organization by reason of his being a member of it. In other words, does his membership automatically insure him of uniformly fair treatment by the members of the other branches of the organization, or must he continue to look out for himself as he has always been compelled to do. While the manufacturing and distributing branches of the organization will deny that the exhibitor has been unfairly treated there are exhibitors who believe that they have just cause for complaint and will want ample assurances along those lines before their support can be obtained. It is a reasonable demand and should be fully and freely accorded. By doing so the manufacturers and distributers will escape a repetition of such opposition as greeted their proposition to charge 15 cents a reel to cover the film tax.

Another matter is the question of financial control. Circumstances are known to the exhibitors that will cause them to think a lot before they agree to contribute to the financial support of the N. A. M. P. I. Our personal knowledge of matters, regarding which we cannot speak here, brings us to the conclusion that there must be a radical change in the conduct of the affairs of the N. A. M. P. I. in any event. Proper authority is not exercised over the management of the organization. It is clear that something radical will have to take place in its management if it is to be placed upon a sound basis or if it is ever to become really useful to the trade. We do not condemn it utterly because we believe that is the best trade organization we have yet had and that it can be made all that it should be. But there are some changes that are imperative, either in its rules or its conduct under them.

Because the N. A. M. P. I. can give the exhibitors of the country the sort of a central organization they ought to have we hope that the plan will be given a trial. It will cost something to put such a central bureau into proper operation, but the service it will give to the trade if properly directed will more than repay us for the effort and the expenditure. Competent direction, though, must be guaranteed or it would be better not to begin.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made that William A. Brady and Arthur Friend will again go to Washington to importune the congressional committees on the film tax question. We recall that they went once before after which one member of the committee who heard them said: "The film men do not know what they want." We hope that Mr. Brady and Mr. Friend will get together and agree on one story to tell the senators or the representatives, whichever they happen to talk to, so that it will be fully understood that the motion picture branch of the amusement enterprises of this country are now paying about double their proper share of the war tax. Make them understand that the film tax as now levied, or the rental tax that is proposed, is not fair and should be dropped from the schedules. Make it strong!

OUR GENERAL FLATNESS

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

NO fevered encomiums can be lavished upon screen products of the year. Many of them are very safe, some of them pleasant stuff in a way, mildly pleasant, like blue milk, and still others perfectly sane—we are not so crazy as we look, but the majority of releases are made according to pattern. The alleged violent adventure, the risk that gives no thrill because the rescue is all too obvious, all very quieting to the nerves, no doubt, and to be recommended to those who live in fear of straining their brains, as there is nowhere to be found much of a demand upon ordinary intelligence.

The European war had been going on several years before it dawned upon some enterprising producers that the kaiser was not enjoying well-established popularity in this country, but they summoned enough spirit to say some bitter things about him toward the end.

It takes such a long time to become sensible!

Millions of Americans have gone to the war.

Millions more have been training for military service.

Their mothers and sisters and wives number more millions.

Big plays of the future will appeal to these millions

Millions upon millions of intelligent and true-hearted Americans are deeply interested in events of these four years. Outside of stories of adventure and romance in war regions, now rich with drama, there are to be considered the tremendous changes made in our ways of living, in our new ideas of national service, of the injustice done many of us during these years, hundreds of big and vital themes for drama, because they strike home to the heart of us and to our pocketbooks as well.

The screen must keep up with the times.

We have had a plague of ancient fiction.

No amount of Worcestershire sauce can make it taste like the genuine screen story, but we have had to swallow it or stay away from the moving picture show, so we gulp it down, and smile like Charlie Chaplin does in the trenches, when trying to look as though he enjoyed it.

Somewhere in the studio is a library of novels.

The producer looks over their gilded title with innocent pride.

He thinks they're Ibsens, Molieres, Rostands and Maeterlincks.

By the time any one of these works of fiction is completely denatured by some hack for the screen it might just as well have been sewn in a sack and dropped into that River of Oblivion where budding screen genius is usually strangled. To put it on exhibition, dragging through "continuity" with leaden feet, too palpably padded with unimportant movement, wigged with artificiality, false-hipped with directorial interpolation, it becomes as pitiful as a Hun suspect trying to sing "The Star Spangled Banner."

The stage has been hampered by prejudice and predisposition.

The screen might well replace these with cold common sense.

A brick house may be beautiful, useful, a work of art, yet the materials from which it is constructed are not suited to building a battleship.

The stage play, written to be interpreted through utterance, requires creative genius linked to technical skill of treatment and intelligent interpretation on the part of speaking actors.

The screen play, written to be interpreted through psychology, requires creative genius linked to technical skill of treatment for a totally different interpretation. Where it is not intended for that kind of interpretation from the outset there is usually a flat result, about as entertaining as a dentist, about as stimulating as a headache "next day."

A plague on this stale-beer stuff—we're just born again.

These last four years have turned the world upside down.

Let us have done with what incoherent and uninforming, theatrically prejudiced or fictionally preposterous, sicklied o'er with the pale cast of some other art, in which it was none too good. Let us move along in American style, with ingenuity, with originality, with sound judgment, with subtle humor, with pictures of manhood such as marched away to France, types of true American womanhood, either that or lie down and quit, too flat for an upright art.

PERMANENT HEALTH RULES

By Robert C. McElravy.

MOVING PICTURE theatres, as well as other places of amusement and instruction where crowds assemble, might do well to profit by the now waning epidemic by establishing certain permanent rules regarding the public health. It has no doubt been observed by those who have continued to patronize theatres during the epidemic that coughing and sneezing are not at all necessary where severe restrictions have been imposed. Whether the threat of being ejected from the place has had a deterrent effect, or whether the patron's mere consideration for others has caused him to refrain, there has been a wonderful abatement of this unpleasant habit. It has been possible to sit through entire performances without hearing a pronounced sneeze.

Coughing and sneezing are of course unavoidable where the patron is the actual victim of a hard cold, but in such a case he is no doubt better off home in bed, epidemic or no epidemic. Even in ordinary times it rather disturbs one's hard won democracy to have some wheezing individual sprinkling the back of his neck every few moments with a sneeze. To sit through a performance under such circumstances is at any time a painful thing, as well as a source of real danger, as the best medical authorities agree. Those afflicted with colds should at all times be required to use handkerchiefs for the protection of others, and where the coughing is violent, should be perfectly willing to leave the theatre.

There are always people who are timid about going into crowds for the very reason that they are exposed to perils of this sort. Their comfort should at all times be considered, rather than that of the afflicted person. The latter, if he is not asked to leave the theatre, should at least be obliged to get "under cover" and be as discreet as possible in his coughing.

The great epidemic is now passing, but it will not quickly be forgotten. And there is of course the danger of its return at some future time, perhaps next spring. That at any rate has been the experience in other afflicted countries. For this reason we believe the proprietor of a moving picture house will have every excuse for keeping close watch upon the health of his patrons at all times in the future. Just how rigid his regulations may be made is something he must determine for himself, but we think he will make a general gain in the confidence of his clientele if he announces careful supervision of some sort in future.

The general question of conduct of theatres, aside from matters of health, is of course always a delicate one, but it is important from every point of view, and there are many things that the manager can regulate without difficulty. Noisy ushers come easily under his control, and there are many houses where the ushers talk loudly and run up and down the aisles in a distracting manner. This is particularly noticeable in certain legitimate theatres, where the whole first part of a performance is frequently lost to those sitting in the rear seats. Much of this noise may be obviated by having soundless carpets. But as for the usher who talks glibly with patrons, or enters into a loud controversy over the location of seats, that is something else and should not be allowed to happen so frequently.

"THE HELL CAT'S" AVERAGE

By Edward Weitzel

TO be explicit about the matter, only one man ever called Panchita O'Brien a "hell cat," and he did it in a fit of savage rage, because she refused to hide her contempt for him and fought with all her strength when he made a captive of her and killed her father. Panchita is as fine a specimen of womanhood as ever grew up on a Wyoming ranch. When she takes the law into her own hands and escapes further indignities by burying a dagger in the heart of Jim Dyke her act more than justifies itself. And every one will applaud Jack Webb for telling her that her suffering has only added to her claim on his love and devotion. In other words, Panchita O'Brien is a thoroughbred, and her story will interest every man and woman who admires courage and deep affection and all that is best in woman.

This very impotant point being established, it is in order to check up the other merit marks in the Goldwyn production, "The Hell Cat," and discover how near it comes to that elusive one-hundred-per cent. average. A review of the picture printed in last week's Moving Picture World stated that the plot "departs but little from a familiar and well-tested trail." Further on the article held that, "No Goldwyn production has ever been more completely satisfying."

But one means could have reconciled the two statements—craftsmanship.

Taking the story for consideration, it is quickly made clear that its material has been forced to yield every ounce of its dramatic value without once lowering the tone of its artistic standard, which is a veritable transcript of life. The main motive is primitive passion, and a story of crime and animal instinct is told on the screen lucidly and without compromise, but the artistic restraint which marks the true craftsman is never absent.

Willard Mack has employed the art of the dramatist in putting together the situations of Geraldine Farrar's latest starring vehicle, and the steady pull of its action is never broken by the introduction of unnecessary incident of any description. The closing scenes, which compose the wronged girl's vengeance, are remarkable for their brevity as well as for their power. The effectiveness of their restraint could not be increased. The character drawing is equally well done. Jim Dyke, Jack Webb, Panchita's father and Wan-e-mee are real flesh and blood beings, as created by the author and acted by the members of the cast.

Reginald Barker and his share of the work contribute largely to the merit marks of the production. With the temptation of countless long shots in a sweep of country that abounds in views of great beauty, the director subordinated everything to the human interest of the story and kept the way clear for its constant advance. This scenic background of the picture, when exteriors are used, is a delight, but from the moment Jim Dyke rides over to the O'Brien ranch and meets Panchita the fate of the girl becomes the absorbing feature of "The Hell Cat." Director Barker evidently recognized that nothing else mattered so far as the spectator was concerned. All the help that skilled attention to detail could give was bestowed on the picture, and no legitimate opportunity to add a touch of romance was neglected; but before everything else the director realized it was his duty to create drama.

Here, then, we have "The Hell Cat's" average and the reason for the picture's entertaining qualities: a one-hundred per cent. production of a familiar story whose drama possibilities will never grow old. There have been loftier themes, but none with greater vitality. And none has been told on the screen with a better understanding of its demands.

To Continue War Review While the Material Lasts

AT a conference held in the office of Marcus A. Beeman, acting director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, between the various interests concerned in the production and distribution of the Official War Review, it was definitely decided that the Review would be continued as long as the pictorial news coming from Europe made it possible to keep up the present high standard of the weekly issues. Among those present at the conference were representatives of the Division of Films, Pathe and the Bureau of Official British Films in the United States.

Captain G. McLeod Baynes, in charge of the distribution of British films in the United States, announced that he had just received a cable appraising him that the surrender of the German fleet to Admiral Beatty had been successfully filmed, and that thousands of feet of this historic scene would be available for the Official War Review. Captain Baynes also stated that a great deal of other interesting material was now available, and that the British contribution to the War Review would continue to be of a most interesting character.

Mr. Beeman stated that Director Hart, who has gone to Europe, would arrange for comprehensive pictures of the peace conference, and that the interesting period between the granting of the armistice and the signing of actual peace would be fully covered.

In the view of those competent to speak, it will be many months before the historic happenings in Europe cease to have a pictorial interest for patrons of motion picture houses.

War Risk Rate Reduced.

Of interest to exporters of motion picture films is the announcement just made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the reduction in the Government war risk rate to England, France and certain of the Mediterranean ports to one-eighth of 1 per cent. This is the rate now charged by the British Bureau of War Risk Insurance for this same voyage. In announcing the change, the Secretary of the Treasury states that this reduction has been brought about by the fact that the terms of the armistice, insofar as the naval situation is concerned, have been complied with and practically the only risk now covered by war policies is that of mines. Prior to the signing of the armistice, the transatlantic rate was 2 per cent.

Motion Picture Educator

An Opportunity for Successful Work by Schools and Colleges of the Country

AFTER the war" became an almost universal slogan among school authorities when the question of a more extensive use of the moving pictures in schools was urged. By the use of this expression these authorities admitted the proper occasion and circumstances under which they saw coming the opportunity for a definite form of development in the schools for moving picture activities. The war is now over, all difficulties brought in by the numerous war-time restrictions are being rapidly removed, consequently within a period of time shorter perhaps than many anticipate, there will fall upon the country privileges and opportunities for such great educational advancement that it will not only be criminal to neglect them, but it will be a crime against the rising generation of scholars and students if a state of unpreparedness exists.

Lessons from the Past.

Present-day advantages always cause a comparison with the past, coupled with many expressions as to "What might have been." The educational war pictures of today, abounding with historical importance, have been the occasion for many yearnings that the moving pictures might have existed in the days of the Civil War and the immortal Lincoln; what an education! What an inspiration! What history! With this feeling there was written upon the pages of this paper some eight years ago a similar reflection, with the prediction that, in the event of another war, the moving picture would become the greatest factor, for record, for history, for education. All this has been most surprisingly surpassed, the unexpected war came in a hundredfold greater power; the moving picture was called upon in a hundredfold greater measure, and proved of limitless good under every possible, yet previously unconceived, occasion.

To enumerate the achievements of the moving picture would be a tremendous undertaking; it is satisfactory to know, however, that its accomplishments are legion, and universally known, also that now its possibilities are all in the future.

The Future.

t is now everywhere conceded that the moving picture is the greatest aid to education the world has yet received; it must now be conceded also that it possesses the greatest bottled-up store of needed information that has ever been conceived possible; the dissemination of this valuable knowledge is now demanded by the advanced needs of a waiting world of schools; the only question now is: "Shall it be given them?" To this those authorities everywhere who have under their control the management of educational institutions must make answer. The Government of the United States has already made answer in the abundant preparations secured under a duly authorized brand, and the Government pictures are prepared with the very purpose for which educational kinematography forecast. If an example is needed it can be found in the very latest picture released under Government authority ,entitled "Under Four Flags." A review of this picture cannot be given here, indeed it ought already to be widely known to all those reasonably expected to be acquainted with educational propaganda. Following such a picture as "America's Answer," a school that lacks it falls short of its required standard, and the American boy or girl deprived of its teaching is robbed of that education which the laws of every state demands in their behalf. By the admission of all educators, the "after the war" time having arrived, they are now ready to join the long waiting advocates of visional education as especially applied to moving pictures, by at once making such plans as shall bring together in the most practical manner these teaching powers and those to benefit thereby. Let there be no further delay—the Moving Picture Educator is ready to advise with any so desiring.

W. H. JACKSON.

A Message for the Producer.

The Motion Picture Section of the Department of Labor has requested us to hand to the producers of motion pictures, through our columns, a message which we believe is but an echo of the sincere spirit of Americanism which is and has been paramount among motion picture producers during the trying period through which the nation has been called upon to pass. The following is the message:

The motion picture undoubtedly shortened the war by at least two months. This is the opinion of officers in the army who are in a position to know. The motion picture can do more to stabilize labor and help bring about normal conditions than any other agency. An injudicious use of motion pictures, on the other hand, can do our country incalculable harm.

Constructive education will do infinitely more good than destructive propaganda. To portray the villain of a photoplay as a member of the I. W. W. or the Bolsheviki is positively harmful; while, portraying the hero as a strong, virile American, a believer of American institutions and ideals, will do much good.

Motion picture producers and scenario writers will undoubtedly be using labor themes in their productions for some time to come. The Motion Picture Section of the Department of Labor is anxious and willing to advise with any members of the industry who, being American citizens, are unwilling to produce anything for the screen that violates the policies of the Government as represented by the Department of Labor.

This Department is both appreciative of what you have done during the war and conscious of what you are willing to do, that all may enjoy the fruits of victory.

We do not want to exercise any censorship over the screen at this time; we do not think it necessary. We do want to help you to help your Government.

"Finger of Justice" Runs in South.

The necessity for control of film censorship under one head has never had a better emphasized illustration than in the case of the Paul Smith anti-vice picture, "The Finger of Justice." This production, which was prohibited by the New York Commissioner of Licenses is to be distributed throughout Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Florida by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Virginia by contract with the Paul Smith Pictures Company. Negotiations have been consummated through the Arrow Film Corporation, acting as agent for the producers.

Contrary to the action of the New York Commissioner the picture has been passed by the Board of Censors in the city of Chicago, and also in the state of Ohio. And it may be remembered that during July last, both Washington, D. C., and Seattle, Wash., set their seal of approval on it.

The production is being exploited as a road attraction and is reported to have opened and played to capacity houses at the Bluebird Theatre in Richmond, Va.

Social and Industrial Subjects.

The 144th issue of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph contains two subjects of special interest besides a Wallace Carlson animated cartoon entitled Goodrich Dirt in "When Wishes Come True." The serious subjects cover the "Industries of the West Indies" and "The Second Line of Defense," showing what the Young Women's Christian Association is doing at the camps and in the cities for the welfare of the boys in service.

"The Industries of the West Indies," which is one of a series of pictures dealing with the Virgin Islands, our newest possessions, covers the Bay Rum industry, which is the principal industry of these islands.

Screen Magazine's Next Issue.

The 96th issue of the Universal Screen Magazine presents as its most interesting subject "The Doctoring Duds Hospital," which shows one of the repair shops for the clothing of the soldiers. The one photographed in the picture is at Camp Meade. The picture shows how the impaired coats and trousers and even hats are doctored up so as to look almost like new by expert workmen. Another scene of the magazine shows Madame Schumann Heinke singing at a war benefit. The last subject presents a series of colored pictures (not well colored, by the way) of various kinds of birds, including pea fowl and parrots.

"Scenes in Dutch Malaysia."

In this number of the Post-Pathe series the Island of Java comes in for attention. The principal city of the island, Batavia, has been covered by the camera, showing the streets filled with the various kinds of people that populate it. One of the most interesting scenes in the picture is the manufacture of brick by hand, and the preparations for construction work carried on by women. This is the most interesting thus far of this series from an informational standpoint.

"The Island of Sumatra."

One of the most interesting of this very instructive series of travel pictures. This is devoted to scenes from Sumatra, an island on the Malay archipelago, whose chief city is a Dutch settlement of 60,000, known as Palemburg. The town is built like Venice, and has streets of water. It boasts of a floating hat store and other businesses conducted on rafts. Lace-making and various pursuits of the natives are shown.

"Official War Review No. 23."

The opening scenes in this number are picturesque in the extreme and have great historical significance. One of them shows the British soldiers entering Jerusalem. Other scenes show a gunboat in action on the Tigris River, and the manner in which camels have been impressed into war service. The Italian front comes in for further interesting delineation, and there are also views of ruined cities left in the wake of the fleeing Hun. An inspiring sight is that of Pershing's men crossing the St. Mihiel salient.

"A Wee Bit Odd" (Educational-Bruce).

A recent number of the latest Robert Bruce series contains two short chapters, each of which presents a subject not new, but as he, himself, puts it, "a wee bit odd." The first brings us with the placid waters of Snake River, Southern Idaho, to the brink of a precipice 800 feet in width and 200 feet in depth, at the verge of which it is converted into one of the most beautiful waterfalls of the world, vieing successfully with the great Niagara, Yosemite or Shoshone. It is needless to add that these falls have been beautifully photographed, none of their beauties have been lost sight of, and even the mists have been given a page to themselves.

The second chapter reveals a large ranch in Southern Oregon on which "Golden Sand" has been discovered, which makes its owner just $8,000 richer each succeeding month. From the prosaic form usually assumed by the act of hydraulicking gravel, it has been converted by the camera into "a thing of beauty." Bruce has thrown over its otherwise commonplace features the veil of artistic conception, and has given us a picture that rivals in true artistry one of his recent industrial subjects, "Tales of the Tall Timbers." This is a short bit, but as far as it goes it is decidedly unusual.

SHORT ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The 75th issue of the Screen Telegram includes among items of current interest a brief illustration of the binder twine industry, showing a plantation of cacti from the fibre of which the twine is made. Some snaps in a binder twine factory show the fibre on its way to be turned into rope or twine.

A number of seven and eight minute song subjects, including "Columbia," "The Battle Cry of Freedom," and "The Star Spangled Banner" have been made by the Ganthem Films, Inc., 110 West 40th street, New York City. The state rights of these short lengths are being sold by Robert Priest, Film Market, Inc., Times Building, New York City.

The H. R. Durant Film Service, Room 812, Times Building, New York City, have for the past two or three years been making a specialty of select programs for schools and colleges. They are at the present time supplying some of the best private schools of the East as well as high schools and public schools with programs for week-end entertainment and other purposes. H. R. Durant is assisted in his work by G. F. O'Connor.

Sherry Finds New Faces at Many Old Theatres

WILLIAM L. SHERRY, president of the William L. Sherry Service, returned to New York this week after a flying trip to several of the larger eastern cities. The direct object of Mr. Sherry's trip was to get some first hand information on conditions in the outlying territories. That there have been sweeping changes brought about by the epidemic there can be no doubt, and rather than trust to miscellaneous and unconfirmed reports, Mr. Sherry felt that the situation warranted a special trip.

"My trip was a touch-and-go affair," said Mr. Sherry. "By that I mean that I did not linger long in any one city, but while I was there I got all the information that was to be had and I did not leave town until I had it. My trip took me to Philadelphia, Boston, Albany, Syracuse, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh.

"By far the greatest number of changes I found were changes of ownership and management. Most of the theatres are still in existence and opening rapidly, but there are many strange faces at the fronts of old familiar houses. Many of the old faces are gone forever and I number many sincerely mourned friends among them. My trip, for one thing, convinced me that our mailing list will have to be extensively revised before it can be considered accurate. Any theatre management that survived the epidemic intact can consider itself a pretty substantial institution.

"On the whole, I came home well satisfied with the outlook. The sledding will be hard for some few weeks to come, but after that I can see the biggest year that motion pictures have ever had."

Frank Lloyd in California.

Frank Lloyd, director for William Farnum pictures, arrived in Los Angeles on November 21 after a stay of two months in New York. Accompanying him were the members of his directorial staff, including Scott Dunlap, the assistant director; Marc Robbins, scenario writer; Billy Foster, cameraman, and William Shepherd, technical director.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

COMPARATIVELY few managers of houses in towns shut down on account of the influenza kept their advertisements running. When they shut their doors they stopped advertising. Perhaps it was a natural move, but it is by no means the best. The manufacturers of a certain brand of tobacco now supply their entire product to the Government, but they keep right on advertising that fact. Hundreds of manufacturers of other products keep on advertising, if only to explain why they cannot supply the needs of their former patrons. Almost without exception the theatres stopped advertising largely because they thought they had nothing to advertise. They could not announce that they had this or that five-reel feature. They cannot get away from the idea that they are selling five-reel features. If they have no feature they have nothing to advertise. They have. They have amusement to advertise. That is what they should advertise, and when they are shut down they can still take space in which to regret the fact that they are unable to supply the demand for amusement. They could have told interestingly of what they might have shown had conditions permitted. They could have told of better pictures to follow the reopening. They could have kept the picture appetite on edge. Until we get away from the idea that the actual celluloid is the thing to be advertised, we shall make no real progress. We shall simply be theatres in which motion pictures are shown. The real business is not the unreeling of the film, but the presentation of motion pictures in the best and most entertaining manner. This is what the picture theatre is for, and when managers present their bills attractively and make a feature of that fact rather than that they have this or that feature for one night or three days, then, and not until then, will people follow the theatre rather than the stars. Much in the way of missionary work could have been done during the epidemic. Little or nothing was done. The film theatre had no film, therefore it had nothing to say. Some few houses devoted space to advertising the board of health suggestions. That helped a little, but a better plan would have been to have run a series of advertisements somewhat along these lines:

The epidemic of influenza still continues, and it will be some time yet before the Bijou can again welcome its patrons, but we have been thinking of our loyal friends every minute of the time. The enforced closing has permitted us to thoroughly clean the house. No grip germs now can find a lurking place in our theatre. When the doors are once more open you will find the interior more attractive than ever, and as sanitary as paint, soap and water and disinfectant can make it. More than that, the bills will be better than ever, for good films have been piling up. Watch for the opening announcement. It will surprise and please you.

Working along those lines will bring results and people will remember long after the scare has been forgotten.

Steve and the Opposition.

We've shown a lot of Steve Farrar's advertising, and it may have seemed odd that he uses so much space in so small a town as Harrisburg, Ill., but the answer is that Steve has opposition, and the opposition is good, too. Steve would take a big space anyhow, because he knows it is good for business, but he has to take big space when the other man also knows how to write advertising. It might be interesting to compare Steve's work with the opposition. The first display shows three twelves against Steve's three tens for his Orpheum. Steve uses a small cut against a big one, but that gives him a larger title and lets him play up his stars to greater advantage. He gets more talk, and he shows his goods in better fashion though we think he would do well to name his comedies. As a rule there is some appeal in a comedy title that will help the bare announcement. In the same way it would pay him to mention the high spots in the war review. Telling just what will be seen gives emphasis to the fact that this really is a war review. In the next example Steve takes three sixes and the other house three nines. Here the large cut works to better effect than the auto picture in the first example, but we think a smaller cut would have permitted a better display of the title. It is too long to go nicely in three columns and is striking enough to warrant a double line. The third display gives four sevens against two eight and a halfs. Here the Grand gets the best of it, and Steve gets the small end of the display. We think we would have staggered the star's name in two lines and then shot the play title clear across the space in as large a type as we could have had, raising "Another great triumph for" as it stands above Miss Dalton's name. It looks as though Steve had had no real dope, although perhaps as this is a second day run he thought it was not needed, but we do not think that the name of the author, director and photographer are going to help sell the picture to the public. It's the weakest advertisement we think we ever had from Steve, and the light line paneling does not help much. He could have pulled his type in to a seven and still have said all he says, with as good a display.

A Three Twelves and a Three Tens for Opposite Houses.

A Three Sixes and a Three Nines.

Advertising the Weeklies.

Here's our idea of advertising a war weekly. It is from The Movie Fan, the house organ of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado. Of course Mr. Decker has a whole newspaper in which to give his display, and does not have to worry about the cost of space, but we think that even where space rate must be paid, it will be remunerative to play up the Official War Review. There is no feature in five reels or more that can equal in timely interest these actual pictures from the front. Just because new weeklies have always been regarded as a filler to bring a program up to the necessary length is no reason why they should still be so regarded. Play up the live, vital features of the review and let your drama feature take a back seat for one night. See what happens. You will never change if you write the proper sort of advertisement.

Tarzan and the Hun.

S Barret McCormick has done some excellent work for "The Romance of Tarzan." He took five fifteens for an advance, the cut showing a jungle scene with one of the "society" pictures for contrast, the two being connected by the silhouette. Having an exceptionally long story to tell, Mr. McCormick starts in with 24 point and works through eighteen and ten point lines to an eight. A portion of the space is used to announce a new conductor for the orchestra. A second Tarzan advertisement is five fulls. Here the same suggestion of jungle and palace is carried out in the sketch, but there is rather less descriptive matter, for this is for the opening, and the groundwork has been laid. The selling is done at the start, and after that it is necessary only to sustain the interest. Here the punch is set in four lines of 24 point. The "Hun Within" opening advertisement takes four fulls, the sketch being shared with the Lusitania picture. This same cut is later trimmed down to get ten and a half inches. Apparently this use was planned when the original drawing was made.

A Five Fulls for "The Romance of Tarzan" and Four Fulls for "The Hun Within."

A Four Ten and a Halfs Made from the Larger Cut Shown Above.

The background is the map of the United States, but this does not show as plainly as it might. Mr. McCormick is strong for the second use of cuts, and knows what can be done through cutting down. For that matter even the mat stuff supplied by the publicity bureaus will often work out well if a little care is used in planning.

Universal Stuff.

Hal Hodes has been emulating our own Walthill and has rambled lately. From Chicago he sent in a page from the Herald-Examiner for "Crashing Through to Berlin." The display was gotten up by the paper's staff. Many, if not all the large western papers, are ready to help advertisers prepare or to prepare for them the larger displays. This one is nicely laid, but the feature is the bank of selling talk. This is what sold the film to the public, and it is written to sell. The second Ramble is the Sunday directory from a St. Louis paper, in which Mrs. Cornelius, of the Royal, "hogs" the space for her showing of "Her Body in Bond." The entire space is about 18 inches deep, across six columns. The Royal space is only a two elevens, but it dominates the entire area. The Paramount gets the best position, but too great a reduction in the "Three ways to know" spoils the looks of the entire space. It gets the cuts so small, that they hurt the entire space. They look too piffling. They were all right on a page of the Saturday Evening Post, but they are blotches when the page is reduced to a two sevens. At that they are no worse than the West End cuts over to the left. The general average of the advertising is not good, but it is not wholly a matter of space. The Royal still stands up with less than four inches for "To Hell with the Kaiser" over on the left.

Good Works.

This is our idea of sound, intelligent work. It is from Ezra Rhodes, of South Bend, Ind. Some years ago Mr. Rhodes used to be one of the most valued contributors to this department, but lately we have not heard from him. That he is still at it these samples prove. And he has two houses now. When the influenza shut down his houses, he did not cut down his space. He went right along taking two sixes for each house, one in South Bend and the other in Elkhart, and he did not waste his space. Just as before, he advertised to create a demand for pictures. One half of the space was given to large type regrets and the other to a chat on what was coming when the houses reopened. He kept alive the desire for pictures. He sharpened the appetite by telling them what thy were going to get presently, and he kept his public on edge. This is precisely what we should have done in the same case, and Mr. Rhodes is the only man who did it, so far as we know. The Chicago houses kept on with their space in certain papers, but they did not do individual advertising to preserve the desire for amusement. It's fine work. And we hope that Mr. Rhodes will keep on coming in now that he has found his way back.

tens in English and a single ten in Italian. There is a large Italian population in that territory, and Mr. Barclay finds it worth while to appeal to them in their own language paper when he has anything along the lines of a patriotic or propaganda picture. A four sevens was used for another display which covers the announcement of a special matinee for children, when they were admitted for five cents and the tax in order to leave more room for the adults at the night shows, when the prices were fifteen and twenty cents. Mr. Barclay, for once, had the cuts he needed, for the Metro exchange came through with several in addition to the three shown, and he smashed the house record with a four-day run. The same company operates the newly remodeled Nemo. for a chat about the house, and writes that later he will take the items up in greater detail in a series of educational advertisements. The house has been enlarged to seat 1,600 persons. The opening announcement was three fourteens, with a three thirteens for the next program. The centre display is unusually good and we think it was worth much more than it cost the house. About the only point he did not cover was the fact that the enlarged capacity makes it possible to play better features. Perhaps he held that back because the company also operates three smaller houses. The proof reader slipped when he announced that the house would be conducted "on the open booking plan and will be tied to on one program," instead of "will be tied to no one program." That proofreader should get a hard look. He deserves it.

Christmas for the Kiddies.

Don't forget to provide a special morning show for the poor children on Christmas day. Just throw your house open in a small town. In a suburban or neighborhood house work with the churches or school teachers, but plan in some way to make Christmas merry for the children who cannot afford even the small cost of a matinee ticket. You'll have to sweep out the house before the regular matinee, but it is a small price to pay for the joy you will bring into shadowed lives.

Suggestions Wanted to Abate a Nuisance.

From (deleted by request) in the state of (deleted by request) comes the following.

> Have been subscribers to the World for several years and not having called on you before I now take the liberty of submitting the following, asking relief from a source of trouble which is a nuisance. This is a railroad town and we are obliged to call train men out of the theatre. We have been using a slide for the purpose, but it is necessary to make a special slide for each person to be called and very often we are forced to break into the show, since when a train man is wanted, he is wanted, and that is all there is to it. Could you advise us as to some system which will eliminate the slide call? Some sort of sign which can be easily and quickly changed and be read from every part of the house. An electric sign of some sort is our idea. Any information you can give (preferably by letter) will be appreciated both by the writer (house manager Ed.) and the theatre.
> We publish this knowing the situation the manager is up against from our own experience as trainmen. We realize that anything we may do to help solve his own difficulty will help the train men as well, and we [illegible] suggestions from our readers. One of the banes of the trainman's existence is that he absolutely cannot go anywhere or do [illegible] so arrange that the "caller" can find him in case he is needed. And the caller must be able to get his man without undue delay, or without any at all. The man must "sign the book," and the caller often cannot or will not wait. An electric sign would be extremely expensive and, I believe, not practical, if by electric sign you mean one which will spell out the letters of the name in lighted bulbs. It could be done, but——.
>
> There are, however, a number of entirely practical plans for displaying names to an audience, one of which would be a transparency on the front wall, into which a sheet of glass with the name of the desired individual written in large letters, could be slipped, the same being illuminated by electric lights behind. Between the glass carrying the lettering and the lamps should be a sheet of ground glass. But this, while practical, would involve more bother than would the slide you are now using. It would not, however, interrupt the show. Another, and better plan, would be the installation of a small stereopticon to project the name (written on a slide cover glass with slide ink, as you now do) to a small screen located on front wall of theatre. This is practical; also fairly unobjectionable, in that it does not interfere with the show and the writing of the name on a cover glass is not much work. You could have a slide made carrying the words "Conductor" and "Wanted," with space between for writing the name, also one for engineers, firemen and trainmen. Or you could cover a lot of slide cover glass with a coating made by rubbing a wet brush on Bon Ami, letting them dry. You could then write the desired name in the coating with any sharp instrument, projecting same to small screen with a stereopticon. A small, cheap stereopticon will do quite well for this service.
>
> Who can offer a better plan.

From Nebraska.

Raymond W. Fisher, Fairbury, Nebraska, who is a member of Local Union 151, Lincoln, Neb., which organization entertained the editor on the occasion of his visit to that city a year or more ago, writes as follows:

> Find enclosed $3.44 for year subscription, both sets of question booklets and carbon copy of dept reply, if any. Was member of reception committee which met you at the depot when you visited Lincoln last year. Have been located in present position for five and a half years. We have (they all say so) one of the prettiest houses in this section of the country. I use a Simplex projector, which, by the way, surely is a dandy. Have run about 11,000 reels, with only about $15 repair bill. Had to get new cam and star after about 8 months' service. Cam-pin came loose and knocked merry hallelujah out of things. Don't know whether Mr. Bartlet, manager, had to pay for it or not, he being away when the new parts came. Had to have new intermittent sprocket, and that is about all. Also have a Motiograph I have had about two years. My Simplex intermittent sprocket shaft has become out of true about 1/1,000th of an inch. Causes slight movement on screen. Am using somewhere between 30 and 40 amperes through new G. E. rectifier. Have an ammeter, but it is intended for high amperage, and does not register accurately on low. Have 83-foot projection distance to Minusa screen. Picture is 15 feet, 4 inches. Was using the old haphazard maybe-its-right - and - maybe - its-not condenser system until the new chart came out in our department about a year and a half ago, whereupon I got busy, and say, boy, I thought some one had been monkeying with my rectifiers. Rich, old man, you sure pulled something that time. Why, man, I had to cut down my juice so I wouldn't burn the place up. Too darned much light. My wage is $18 per for three shows a day, the three shows making a total of 18 reels. For all over 18 reels I get 25 cents per reel extra. When we have seven or eight reel programs I get quite a bit overtime. Since Mr. Bartlet's son has gone to war I take care of the outside advertising, which adds another few bills to my weekly stipend, so that the total is $100 to $108 per month—not so bad for a small, small city. By the way, I have a "Richardson rewinder." Takes 11 minutes to rewind 1,000 feet of film. Took rewinder which came with Simplex down to the foundry and had two duplicate posts cast. Only the part which goes under the bench is lacking. Had shafts made, got me an old sewing machine stand, and put a board on it. Makes an ideal rewinding table. Next secured a 1,200 r. p. m. motor, which is belted to the sewing machine drive (treadle) wheel, attached to which is small groved sewing machine wheel. From this I belt to another large groved wheel on rewinder. This latter makes just 60 turns per minute. Believe me it surely does do the business. Projection room is 18 by 9 feet, with 7-foot, 6-inch ceiling. Have photo I've been intending to send. Too small, yes, but impossible to enlarge it. Will send photo of room and rewinder later.

Your rewinder spells common sense. The damage done by rapid rewinding and crooked reels is enormous. Amounts to hundreds of thousands of dollars per year. And it is all so utterly useless and senseless. Glad you have "seen the light" on that proposition. Your wage is good for a small city. In fact it is as much as some men are getting in some quite large places, but that is qualified by the fact that some quite large places have some men who are not worth half what they are getting. Catch them bothering to build a rewinder to eliminate film damage. Not on your tintype! "T" hell with that kind of funny business" is the way they would put it. They have a certain number of hours to put in, and, having succeeded in putting them in with the least possible outlay in exertion consistent with not getting fired, that ends the matter so far as they are concerned.

I shall be glad to have the photos, but try and get that of the rewinder close up, so we can see just how it is made.

DeVry Projector and Other Things.

J. Franklin Schach, Army Y. M. C. A., writing from Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky., says:

> Would call attention of projection department readers to recommendations of Bernard M. Baruch, Chairman Board of War Industries, to projector manufacturers, as set forth in Official U. S. Bulletin Sept. 18 (also recently published in this department.—Ed.) Would also like to get comment on successful operating by projectionists who have used the DeVry portable projector. Will you kindly advise as to approximate efficiency of a. c. and d. c. arcs, in watts per c. p., as follows: 50 volt, 40 ampere, 60 cycle arc, 50 volt, 30 ampere d. c. arc and 50 volt 40 ampere rectified a. c. or pulsating d. c. arc.

The recommendations set forth in official bulletin referred to have already been published in this department. Space is too limited to repeat them. As you may have noticed, at least two overseas projectionists have recently referred favorably to the DeVry for certain kinds of war work, particularly where "shows" must be given in several rooms, as of a hospital, daily, or pictures thrown on ceiling so that soldiers may see them while flat on their backs in bed. The DeVry is a very practical machine, within its limitations. It is not intended for theatre work or for the projection of anything larger than a ten, or at most, a twelve-foot picture. It cannot give good results on anything larger than an 8 or 10-foot picture in anything but a dark room, and to get really good results on a ten-footer a semi-reflective screen must be used. However, for war work the ten-foot picture on plaster or even cloth is quite acceptable. The DeVry uses a Mazda.

As to the last query, your data is not complete without statement of voltage of d. c. current, since it must be broken down to arc voltage by resistance; also, there is no data I am acquainted with in the form you ask of it. Let us put it this way: The 50 volt, 40 ampere a. c. arc would not give good results in projection, I think. Measurements of very many a. c. arcs, when at their best, gives their voltage at from 33 to 36. You have evidently made an error in your query. It is the d. c. arc which is 50 volt and the a. c. arc is less than 40. Taking a normal 40 ampere a. c., 60 cycle arc taking current through an economizer, and a 50 volt, 30 ampere d. c. arc taking current through a rheostat from 110 volt lines, the item of economy in current consumption would probably be (depending on efficiency of economizer) largely on the side of the a. c., but the economy as affects the screen would be dependent on many other considerations, as: Have we under consideration a mere machine operator, or a projectionist who knows his business, and is able to make the most of the power he is using? With poor contacts, half charred wire leads and inefficient carbon setting, the man in charge (that would be an "operator") would waste from one-third to half his impressed power. With those things O. K., but with wrong distance from condenser to film, wrong projection lens diameter, wrong distance of revolving shutter, from aperture, hence inability to reduce its cutting blade to its lowest possible dimensions, and, possibly, in addition to all that, wrong condenser combination, he may also waste an enormous percentage of his power.

You will therefore see how impossible it would be for me to give you an intelligent answer without full knowledge of the electrical and optical lineup of each individual case. Projection is not the simple thing many believe it to be. Most anything will place some sort of result on the screen; also, it is quite possible to get a really good screen result, but to expend twice the necessary electric power in so doing, through lack of knowledge on the part of the man in charge. I can give three different men your three propositions, let them apply all the knowledge they have and find, as a result, an approximately equal result on the screen. I can give the same thing to three other men and find a very different result on the screen. Your propositions all hinge on the degree of accurate knowledge the man who is to handle the current has on the electrical end, on the handling of a projection arc and on the optics of the projection machine.

Canada and the Disabled.

This department is in receipt of the following interesting communication from W. A. Oswald, of the Board of Moving Picture Censors for British Columbia, which also acts as examining board for projectionists. In reading this, bear in mind the fact that, regardless of friend Oswald's modesty, the Vancouver examination for class I projectionist's license makes any other examination I know of look like a plugged nickel. Mr. Oswald says:

"Dear Friend Richardson: It is a little more than sixteen months since you visited our city, reviving our drooping spirits with kindly advice and that splendid lecture, the fruits of which, I am glad to say, are today in evidence in almost every projection room in the entire province. For this I desire to once more convey to the Chalmers Publishing Company and to yourself hearty thanks—thanks not only from myself as inspector, but also from all of the projectionists who have benefited by your visit.

"I note, October 5 issue of the "World," that you, as a nation, are beginning to experience the returned veteran problem. Our own country has been confronted with that problem for nearly four years, and our Dominion Government, through the Vocational Training Department of the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Branch, in co-operation with the universities of the country, is accomplishing wonders in the training of those who desire to take up various technical professions, among which we find motion picture projection. The course in motion picture projection covers a space of twenty-six weeks or more, during which time both the theory and practice of the mechanical, electrical and optical work of motion picture projection is taught by the professors of the universities and their assistants in the laboratories, aided by the best of our motion piture projectionists. At the University of British Columbia, a large number of returned men are enrolled, among whom are five or six forming a class which is taking the course leading to a No. 1 license issued by this province, with an equal number waiting to take up the course. They receive a good grounding in the basic principles of electricity, mechanics and optics in the leture rooms, as well as exellent practical training in the machine shops and electrical laboratories of the University, supplemented by work in theatre projection rooms under capable projectionists. This course is so planned by the professors, in conjunction with the projectionists, that the men, all of whom are willing and anxious to develop in their new profession, will be real projectionists. The local union has taken charge of their training in practical projection work, and I must say that the boys are doing their very best by the students, who spend from four to six hours per day in the projection rooms with them. It is the idea of the professor in charge that the students will become good all-round projectionists, who can and will enter the local union on a basis which will allow them to carry out its obligations as well as any projectionist can. The men of the local are standing behind the students, and are pushing them steadily toward that degree of efficiency necessary to secure a first-class license in this province. We expect to receive the first application for examination from a veteran before long. Here's to his success!

"Speaking of projection, we had a visit from your friend McArthur, formerly with L. T. Gardner, of Detroit, now projection expert for the Perkins Electric Company. He advised us he had been hearing of the improved projection due to our examination, also that you had advised him to look us up, look us over and see the cause thereof for himself. He saw the examination room just as an applicant had left the equipment, and I believe that he was somewhat taken aback when he viewed the paraphernalia. He expressed himself as well pleased.

"Disoussing examinations, I am on my own grounds, and since your letter in the department on standard projection rooms I have been doing a lot of hard thinking along the line of another standard, viz.: standard projectionists. We may have high grade theatres, high grade projection rooms, high grade projection machines, high grade electrical and other equipment, still if we have not a high grade projectionist we greatly lessen the value of everything else, and are, to use a colloquial phrase, up against it and up against it right. Do you think, sir, there could, by mutual arrangement of all parties concerned, be a standard established for Class A, or Class 1, projectionists, whereby the men who have passed the examination required by that standard board or council would be entitled to work anywhere in the Class A district, no re-examination being required should they move from one town or city to another? I am not asking this question because we have a Class A grade examination here in Vancouver. I realize that we have not, and that in order to turn out standard men, quite a number of points of our examination would have to be changed and strengthened, though I will say, without fear of successful contradiction, that we have projectionists who need not take off their hats to anyone in the business; also I believe a very large percentage could pass a standard examination entitling them to work anywhere in North America.

"Our boys are realizing, more and more, that the man who studies is the man who gets to the top and stays there. It is a common thing now to go to a projection room and discover the projectionists trying to conceal a text book he has been studying. Before the examination came into effect it was different, but now one can almost invariably find text books pertaining to projection room practice in the possession of the projectionist. In fact I have on several occasions been surprised at the books some of the men are studying. Not long ago I found an "Arithmetic of Electricity" lying alongside a rewind bench in a small town near Vancouver, and there were several problems worked out correctly, too. That particular man now holds a second-class license, but is working to fit himself for Class 1.

"I was much pleased to see one of our British Columbia men break into the department columns recently with a well written and thoughtful letter. It does one good to see men trying to get ahead in their profession; also it makes one think that perhaps, even after being called all kinds of names for evolving an examination which made the old-timers sit up and gasp, that it was really worth while.

"I would like your candid opinion on the subject of the standard for projectionists; also would like to hear the opinion of both examiners and projectionists who are interested. Hope I have not overtaxed your time and patience with this letter. W. A. Oswald, E.E., Assistant Censor and Inspector."

No, neighbor Oswald, neither time nor patience is overtaxed, for your letter is one of the "worth while" ones. It comes from a man who not only backs up theory with performance, but from a man who, together with his colleagues of the British Columbia Board, has blazed the path which other examining boards should, and sooner or later must, travel. I repeat, so far as I know, that the Vancouver examination is by far the best, most complete and most rigid in its requirements of knowledge on part of applicants for license of any I know of. New York City and Boston are very poor seconds.

I cannot spare space to comment on anything but the matter of the standard examination. Examin.tion of back files will show that I advocated something of this sort seven or eight years ago But I dropped it on account of the seeming insurmountable difficulties in the way, and the tremendous number of things that I could expend energy on and get results. I am, however, thoroughly in accord with the idea. It is a thing which most certainly ought to be, but I doubt its feasibility in so far as concerns the United States. This doubt is based on the fact that, so far as I know, there is no board in this country in a position to give an examination equal to yours. Some few of them might be able to do it if they had the equipment. As a rule the examinations are confined almost entirely to electric and things pertaining to fire hazard. In electric the examination is far from complete and the optical end is pretty nearly entirely ignored. Boston has long boasted of her wonderful examination, yet I will wager a goodly sum that I can stick her examiners half a dozen times in as many minutes on perfectly simple, but highly important questions relating to projection practice. I wonder what would happen to some men who pass the New York and Boston examinations if they walked confidently into your room, and were introduced to that very simple, but most excellent, knowledge-testing switchboard of yours, and were then presented that motor generator, in the condition in which you present it, and that mess of lenses, in the disassembled condition in which you submit them, and were told to get busy and get a good picture on the screen. Yea, verily, I do wonder. And mind you, gentlemen, when he has done this, the troubles of the applicant are but well begun. Guesswork most emphatically does not go in Vancouver. No need to tell the examiner you "don't necd to understand dat junk." You won't need to if you don't, because you wont have any occasion to use it. The examiners will see to that. But, mind you, the Boston and New York examiners are not to blame. They go as far as they are allowed, or as far as their equipment will permit. But to get back to our subject: I heartily favor your plan, but don't believe it feasible at this time. It would require legislation by hundreds of municipalities in this country, many of which have an "examination" consisting mainly in collecting the fee. If you have the money you are competent. The examiner himself could not distinguish the difference between a "back focus" and the North Star, because he could not find the latter in the heavens and never heard of the former. So far as I remember, only one state, Massachusetts, has a real state law covering the examination of projectionists. I think Pennsylvania also has one, but it is too crude in its operation to be considered. I shall be very glad indeed to hear from examiners and projectionists as to their views on this subject. In closing, let me say that my remarks as to the New York examination most emphatically are not directed at the examiners, both of whom are doing as well as any one could possibly do under the conditions. But the conditions are wrong. Equipment is inadequate, and they would not be permitted to give a real examination, such as the Vancouver one, because political pull would be immediately exercised when some "constituont" of a politician found that he could not get by without sufficient education to figure a simple problem in resistance or enough knowledge to distinguish a lens from a bar of soap.

Nice Kit of Tools.

The Fulco Products Company, Chicago, has forwarded sample of its "Fulco Four" for projectionists, consisting of the following four inplements in a neat canvas carrying case: First, a well-made, all-metal syringe, called an oil ejector. It is really a small hand force pump, designed to force oil or grease into the intermittent oil well or force a powerful, small stream of gasoline into bearings to clean them out. Second, a block of steel, 3½ inches long by ¾-inch square, with a deep hole one-half inch in diameter in one end and a slot, beveled at its ends, in the other. This really forms an anvil for removing and replacing pins in intermittent sprockets or other shafts; prevents springing them. Third, there are four tempered steel punches, designed to fit various pins used in projector construction. Fourth, there is a steel rod 7 inches long by three-sixteenth inch in diameter, knurled to afford grip, and split for 1¼ inches at one end. This end is finely tempered. By squeezing the ends together and thrusting them into the slot of a small screw it is held firmly, either in removal or for replacement. Altogether, it is a quite convenient lot of well-made tools, put up in convenient form.

Quite Ghostly.

J. B. Jenkins, U. S. Navy, writing from Cambridge, Mass., says:

"Will you be good enough to give me your opinion as to what is wrong. Following are details: Simplex projector; use 60 amperes; current, a. c., through Bell and Howell inductor-compensator. All electric wiring perfect and connections clean and tight. ¾-inch carbons. Don't think trouble is in lamp or lamphouse, as have tried lamp and carbons in every possible position. Have tried 6½, 7½ and 8½ condensers, using them in various combinations. Distance of projection, 104 feet; 6¾-inch objective. Condensers set apart as per instructions. We have a ghost across the screen. It is narrow at center of screen and wider at sides. Raising or lowering lamp raises and lowers ghost. From midway between condensers to film is 17 inches. With lamphouse closer we get a round ghost in center of screen; closer it is the larger the ghost. We are unable to get the ghost out by any adjustment of carbons, lamp or lamphouse."

Your ghost is most likely a photograph of your arc. That you have it in focus at film plain is proven by the fact that when you move lamphouse ahead ghost becomes round—you get into the center ghost area of the condenser beam. In my opinion your trouble lies in spacing of condensers, which should be set within one-sixteenth inch of each other, plus probably a too-short distance from condenser to film. Let us see what you really ought to have for 60 amperes a. c. According to the new charts, soon to be published, you should have two 6½ plano convex condenser lenses, set with their apexes not to exceed one-sixteenth inch apart, and it should be a trifle more than 18½ inches from center of condenser combination to film. If you use meniscus bi-convex, then you want one 6½ and one 8½ lens, with a trifle more than 21 inches from center of condenser to film. Mind you, this data is based on 60 amperes. It wont be correct for any other amperage, except that a reasonable variation either way won't seriously affect results, say from 57 to 63. I am of the opinion, judging from shape of ghost, that your lamp has not quite enough angle, or that your upper carbon has not quite enough advancement. In other words, your upper carbon crater is not facing the lens, as it should. Please advise me as to results. If you cannot get your lamphouse back far enough, then it is up to the Precision folks to supply you with longer rods. Distance from condenser to film is important.

Extremely Punk.

Recently the editor was summoned to a theatre in Greater New York by its manager and was engaged, in a professional capacity, to examine into the projection room and its equipment and see why faults in projection light were continually occurring. Here is, in part, what we found (A) both wires from main switch to machine and rheostats attached to switch binding post with lamphouse copper terminals of the sort you clamp down onto the wire ends with plyers. Pulled them both out easily with my fingers. Wire back as far as conduit burned until limp like a rag. Wire terminals at machine table switch the same. In lamphouse same, plus wires limp as a rag clear back to lamphouse wall. This is by no means all, but the projectionist, who loudly proclaimed that he had been in the business for years, with plain intimation that I could teach him absolutely nothing, had declared the trouble was "poor carbons." He admitted it "might be partly due to a ground, though he was unable to find any." And yet, if I were to say that this man has no more business in a projection room than the devil has in a church he would feel deeply aggrieved. Also, were I to suggest that the City of New York is in very small business allowing a license card to be issued to him from year to year, and that its Brooklyn inspection department must surely conduct its inspections by the "absent treatment," I would probably hurt some one's feelings, so I wont say, but merely think it. I have for years noticed that Brooklyn inspectors seem to mostly confine their efforts to compelling the theatre manager do some utterly useless things, calmly passing other things which cry to Heaven for remedying.

Reflection from Lens Barrel.

Recently Wallace M. Topping, Brooklyn, N. Y., wrote that he had a most puzzling thing for which he was unable to discover any reason. I visited his theatre, curiosity aroused by his description of the trouble. Found circle of light on front wall of auditorium, same surrounding picture completely. The circle did not show on fadeaways or when dark title was in, which proved it to be in the lens itself. Took lens apart. Found black coating of barrel pretty well worn off. Advised its repainting. Projectionists Topping did so next day and trouble was cured. I also advised other changes in the theatre, and both Topping and the manager were astonished that such comparativeiy slight alterations could work such (their own words) wonderful improvement. The theatre is on Atlantic avenue, about 100.

Rear Projection.

The Aetna Explosives Company asks information as to practicability of projection from the rear, through transparent screen.

Rear projection, through a properly made transparent screen is, from many points of view, ideal, provided the distance of projection is long enough, or the picture small enough that a projection lens of less than 4, or as an outside limit, 3½ inches E. F., will not be required. With conditions requiring a lens of shorter E. F. than that I would not advise the attempt.

Close Attention to Small Details Makes for Stronger Picture Presentation

LOOKING backward over the road traveled by the art of picture playing, we are surprised many times by the seeming indifference to detail which prevailed in the earlier days. We can hardly understand in our present enlightenment why we so foolishly fitted a valse to scenes showing Cairo and its Egyptian splendor. It seems impossible that we used "Hearts and Flowers" for every grievous movement in film-land, yet such was the case. Agitation of mind, matter or morals invariably called forth Agitato No. 1 from the top shelf of the library; speed of any kind was portrayed by the use of a hurry. We don't deny it, for only by our mistakes can we learn.

The rapid advancement in the profession of fitting the features has made careful discrimination an important factor in the portrayal of picture emotions. The general trend of photoplay plots are only held in mind in order that the musical setting may be closer knit together after the details have been considered.

Points arise regarding atmosphere, variety, tempi, and color that call for argument and accurate decision. No longer do we hear from the lips of good leaders the expression "good enough for our audience." "Does it fit the scene in every particular?" That is the paramount question. If it does, the audience will surely be pleased.

As long as the world lasts, dancing will play its part in the entertainment of the populace. The graceful undulations of the body to a rhythmic melody satisfies the fastidious fancies of eye and ear, if both be synchronously performed. Many dancing scenes occur in pictures and as there are diverse forms of the terpsichorean art, the music for the accompaniment must be carefully chosen. Should the dance be a Grecian classic, Apache music would never convey the proper rhythm—yet it has been attempted, either through ignorance or negligence—and vice versa, an Apache dance would be incongruous with any other music than that written for it. Spanish dances must have habanera style and a waltz will not fit a scene where people are fox-trotting. These may seem "mere details," but it is the attention to "mere details" that makes for proper presentation.

In the fitting of scenes depicting grief, "the old order changeth." There are degrees of sorrow, ranging from the sadness of a child who has lost her candy, to the anguish of a mother bereft of her only son. It seems hardly necessary to caution musical directors against the use of Godards' "Adagio Pathetique" to fit the former, but it has been done. In analyzing the situation, the only reason seems to have been the fondness of the musician for the piece and the fact that it seemed suitable for grief. Had he used it for the other instance, there might have been less censure, but still it would fall short of the mark of precise picture fitting. It is much too serious for the child and not "wailing" enough for the mother.

An arranger must be able to visualize himself in the emotion of sorrow to the degree depicted in the scene. When he feels as the actor feels, he will know the music that describes his sensation. Human nature is largely the same in the case of elemental emotions and what he gives forth will naturally be accepted by his auditors in the same spirit and to the same degree. This holds true not only in the emotion of sorrow, but in all primary emotions.

Atmospheric pictures call for much discrimination in their music selection. Heretofore, much Chinese music has been used for scenes or actions occurring in Japan. No longer is this permissible for the patrons know the difference. Many compositions written by those who have never studied the Chinese music, are used to convey atmosphere. If possible, it is wise to abstain from using anything that is not authentic or correct in its melody and harmonization.

Oriental music as a large class might be used in adapting situations found in New Hebrides, but, if care for detail be observed, search should be made for something less Eastern and more wierd. It is by no means splitting hairs to say that East Indian and American Indian music is entirely different in form and rhythm, yet it is difficult to scientifically explain those differences. Nevertheless, our ear is our guide and to set scenes in Bombay with "From an Indian Lodge" by MacDonald would result in a confusion of ideas in the minds of the "paid admissions."

Surface fitting is no longer tolerated by the educated picture fans, and the musicians must take more pains, give greater thought, and scrutinize more closely than ever before. Given a scene to portray, he must first determine its relation to those foregone. He must decide what dominant emotion prevails and fix the degree of that emotion by mental concentration and visualization. The atmosphere of "location" must be maintained at all times, lest through poor perspection he carry his people out of France and land them somewhere in Russia, among the Bolsheviki.

Pictures can no longer be fitted in a "general way" with good results, and the musical director who takes his work seriously readily understands the significance of close attention to detail.

Rialto Sets New Musical Standard.

We all have wished for riches; the reasons for our longing being manifold. Some want wealth to protect them from work, while others see all around them opportunities to lighten the load of their fellowmen. Our personal and particular reason for desiring money at this moment—and for the time being—is prompted by truly altruistic motives. We would like to invite and bring every exhibitor in America and his musical director to see and hear the Rialto performance of this week.

There is not a weak spot in the entire bill and the musical presentation is superb. The "Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody" by Liszt furnishes a wonderful overture. Conducted by Hugo Riesenfeld with the famous Bela Nyary playing the Czimbalom, no better rendition has ever been offered to the music loving public. The Rialto Symphony Orchestra is always at its best in works which call forth nuances of peculiar timbre.

Gladys Rice, soprano, sang in costume "Till I Wake," one of the well-known Indian Love Lyrics by Amy Woodford-Finden. It was pleasing. The orchestra was not restrained enough in volume and frequently overshadowed the singer.

Two important words in the musical lexicon of picture playing signify the success of the accompaniment used for the pictorial—Synchrony and Suitability. Mr. Rothapfel does not believe in playing the entire review by means of marches, and his staff of arrangers have given him many old and well-known songs, the significance of which is strong. He used "Billy Magee, McGaw," "The Soldier's Farewell," "The Stein Song" and "Land of Hope and Glory" by Elgar. Thus variety of color is maintained with additional piquancy.

Mr. Riesenfeld came back to conduct the "Credo" from "Otello" sung by Vincente Ballester. We know the aria well and have frequently heard it sung by eminent baritones under the baton of famous maestros, but never have we heard a rendition which excelled that offered at the Rialto. Mr. Ballester has a good voice, splendid appearance and knows what he is singing about. Not only that, but his portrayal of the part was conveyed unmistakably to his auditors. Mr. Riesenfeld was at home in the score and seemed to take keen enjoyment from his meritorious work.

The feature as usual received a carefully thought-out setting and the synchrony was perfect. From week to week, the theatres presided over by Mr. Rothapfel provide a standard form of entertainment unusurpassed anywhere in the country, and every producer, exchange manager, exhibitor and musical director should make it a point to visit these "temples of the motion picture."

"Rock Me to Sleep" Womanly in Tone.

"Backward, turn backward,
O, Time in your flight.
Make me a child again;
Just for to-night."

There comes a time in the life of each individual when cares and responsibilities assume such gigantic proportions that the weakness of the flesh becomes greater than the strength of the spirit. Then we long to shift the burden of life elsewhere, and the heart subconsciously echoes the sentiments of the above verse.

It chances that but a few of our characteristically American songs have been written by women. "Rock Me to Sleep" has been referred to again and again as distinctively feminine in its sentiment, and it chanced to be a member of that sex who was responsible for the words of the "homey" song.

Elizabeth Akers Allen, who long wrote under the nom de plume of Florence Percy, was born in Strong, Maine, in 1832. In early womanhood, she married Paul Akers, a sculptor, but he died within a year of their wedding. Later, she became the wife of E. M. Allen, of New York, but for many years she made her home in Portland, Maine.

While traveling in Italy, she wrote a little poem entitled "Rock Me to Sleep." This she sent to the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post. It was published, and became immensely popular. Indeed, it appealed so strongly to the public that, within the next six years, several persons, numbering among them persons of both sexes, so closely identified themselves with the poem that they succeeded in convincing even themselves, seemingly, that they had written the song. Some drew so largely upon their imaginations that they publicly vizualized the situation that had given rise to the inspiration.

Russell and Company, of Boston, who published it set to an air composed by Ernest Leslie, acknowledged that they had netted over $4,000 on it. They were naturally much pleased with the financial success of the little poem, and had the audacity to send a message to Mrs. Allen offering to pay her five dollars a piece for as many songs as she should write for them; providing, of course, that the said songs should prove as popular as the one already in their possession. So great was the vogue of the poem at the time that it was translated into practically all the modern languages. Mrs. Allen, however, never considered it her best work.

As might be supposed, just at the time, the absurd offer did not appeal very strongly to Mrs. Allen. But necessity does not permit one the privilege of insisting upon adequate return for service given, and the day came when the authoress found herself a homeless widow with two children to support. She recalled the offer of the publishers, and the paltry five dollars were magnified into a very desirable sum of money. She accordingly sent to the Russell Company a little song. It was promptly returned with the curt information that they could make nothing of it. One reads with an unholy joy the statement that the firm soon became bankrupt.

The poem, during the height of its popularity, was set to music by over thirty different composers. But Mrs. Allen always preferred the Leslie composition, which was the one sung in the camps and popular everywhere.

The music with which we are best acquainted at the present time is by J. Max Mueller. He came to the United States in his youth, and at the outbreak of the Civil War enlisted and served bravely through several battles in the Army of the Potomac. He wrote a surprisingly large number of pieces of music while in the field of action, and so closely identified himself with the American spirit of patriotism and progress that the fact of his foreign birth has been practically forgotten.

When one has read the life of Mrs. Allen at the time when her little poem was having such a vogue, a life so filled with care and sorrow and no monetary appreciation of her literary efforts—when a small and well-deserved return from her work was her unquestionable right—it was small wonder that her thoughts drifted back to her youth, and, in a moment when the burden of life became practically impossible to bear, she should long for the irresponsible joys of childhood, and she wrote:

"I have grown weary of dust and decay;
Weary of flinging my soul wealth away;
Weary of sowing for others to reap.
Rock me to sleep, mother! Rock me to sleep!"

Grand Opera Music at the Rivoli.

Lovers of grand opera music constituted the greater part of the audience at the Rivoli during the week beginning November 24. The feature was "My Cousin," Enrico Caruso's first screen production. The natural inference was that the bill would contain many grand opera numbers, and, in this respect, the audience was not disappointed.

The overture was "Fantasie," from I. Pagliacci, conducted by Erno Rapee. We have found by experience that the more familiar an orchestra is with a selection the more careless is its rendition. And the fantasie was no exception to the rule. Mr. Rapee labored hard enough, but his efforts were in vain. The orchestra simply would not or could not respond.

Miss Annie Rosner sang the "Bird Song," from I. Pagliacci, excellently, and the "Prologue" from the same opera was most artistically rendered by Vincente Ballester. Both singers were dressed in costume, and this fact helped to convey the Italian atmosphere desired. The artists received an ovation, and could have responded to an encore had the rules of the Rivoli permitted.

The musical setting for the Animated Pictorial was excellent and as inspiring as usual.

For the feature a number of Italian Folk Songs, Nevin's "A Day in Venice" and several selections from grand opera were used to fit the scenes. In this picture, Mr. Caruso is shown several times singing. The orchestra followed him in perfect synchrony, and the effect was so realistic that we had only to draw upon our imaginations a bit to hear the bell notes of this splendid tenor float from the screen to us in the audience. But there were times in the action of the picture when it was fortunate for the orchestra that Mr. Caruso could not become animated and step from the screen. He might do violence to someone for the careless mannes in which some of the big numbers were played.

As a breathing spell between the feature and the comedy the orchestra played Langey's "Selection of Italian Folk Songs." These characteristic songs were superbly rendered, but they lost much of their intrinsic value, as a number of them had been previously played on the program.

The comedy, "Whose Little Wife Are You," was fitted with popular music of the day, while the organ solo, always good, closed the bill.

Comparisons are odious, and it is beyond doubt wrong to contrast any orchestra with one at the Metropolitan. That is one danger in playing operatic music; the association of ideas in the minds of the audience. But for some reason the Rivoli orchestra did not do itself justice while playing this bill on the night we saw it. And we shall maintain until the last that it is a mistake for a conductor to turn and glower at any one in the audience even if some old lady does get a bit garulous and unthinkingly try to drown out the music. Of course, such a situation is trying on the nerves of the long-suffering musician, but if he rises above the annoyance someone sitting near the offender can be depended upon to quell the disturbance.

Music at Regent Theatre in Toronto.

As soon as we arrived in Toronto, our former home town, our natural inclinations impelled us to note the musical part of picture presentation. Being told that the Regent Theatre provided the best music for pictures, we paid it a visit, and were delightfully surprised at the program offered.

The overture rendered by a twenty-two-piece orchestra consisted of selections from the Hippodrome success of last season. Conducted by Mr. John Arthur, it was brilliantly executed. The orchestra plays well together, and the violin section proved specially strong both in technique and quality.

Followed then the feature, "Ruggles of Red Gap." This picture deals in dignified comedy, and the music fitted the scenes admirably. There was no test for atmosphere or synchrony, and the light intermezzos, waltzes and two-steps seemed appropriate.

Frank Bessenger, a tenor of pure lyric quality, sang some popular songs with much gusto. His choice of such songs as "Smiles" seemed to lower the dignity of the splendid music of the earlier portion of the program, and we question its wisdom if provided as a regular diet. The singing took up too much time because of the response to encores. In the best theatres no encores are permitted, as it throws out the time schedule and turns the house into a concert hall. Soloists are for the purpose of resting the eye and disconnecting the ideas between two pictures; therefore, their songs should be short and suggestive of the entree or appetizer to a feast.

The pictorial review was well fitted by the orchestra. Two or three Oriental scenes occurred, and the music was most appropriate. For almost a week the orchestra had played the review, yet no synchrony existed; phrases were broken and keys clashed much to the discomfort of the ear.

John Arthur, the genial musical director, has had full charge of the music for the Regent since its opening over two years ago, and has built for himself and his orchestra a reputation that is enviable. He firmly believes in the great art of picture playing and the responsibility involved therein.

"Picture playing is only in its early infancy," he said, "and we may look forward to some wonderful strides in raising the standard of its art. The day will come when music scores will accompany every picture and unimportant flashes will be eliminated for the musician's benefit by the close co-operation between picture directors and musical arrangers. These flash-backs break the continuity of the music, and a smooth performance becomes almost impossible."

Director Arthur will try to get together a Picture Playing Club in Toronto to keep pace with Cleveland and Toledo. Every city needs a fraternal association of this kind for mutual encouragement and protection, and, as usual, Toronto is close to the head of the procession.

W. H. Elliott, the managing director of this beautiful theatre, is confident of the efficacy of silence during the screening of pictures, and exhorts his audience by means of a traveling title that they should consider the pleasure of their neighbor and refrain from speaking the title or telling the story of the film plot. He has had the Regent tastefully decorated, and every comfort is provided for the patrons. It reflects the best theatres in many details, while in some it excels them.

David Mendoza, the brilliant violinist who occupied the chair of second concertmaster of the Rialto Orchestra during the past year, now heads the orchestra at the Rivoli as first concertmaster, taking the place made vacant by the resignation of Alberto Bachmann. Mr. Mendoza made many friends at the Rialto, and has proven worthy of the promotion accorded him.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. Will you please inform a picture "fan" through your columns if "Dawn," by Vannah, is a song or an instrumental composition? The organist in our local theatre used it as a theme in the showing of "The Doll's House," starring Elsie Ferguson. To me it made a very effective musical atmosphere. Although I am not connected with the moving picture business in any way, I have always taken an interest in them, especially the musical end. For that reason, I have subscribed to the Moving Picture World, and heartily endorse the plan of making the musical department larger. It is my opinion that the moving picture has fostered a love for good music in the people of America more than anything else has done before. In the leading theatre of our city we have a "Fotoplayer." To my mind this is the best organ for a small town theatre, as a small orchestra is worse than none at all. The attendance at this theatre is always capacity.

A. Your letter gave us much pleasure. We are always glad to hear from music lovers whether connected with the picture industry or not. And, of course, it encourages us to have the musical department of the Moving Picture World praised. We are extremely anxious to have this department of universal service and are happy when we hear that it is serving the ends for which it was created. The musical selection, "Dawn," by Vannah, is a piano solo called a "song without words," and can be obtained from the publishers, M. Witmark & Sons, or through the Music Service Exchange, 507 Fifth avenue.

Q. Can you tell me anything about an offer being made by a New York publication for a national hymn?

A. We understand that the New York American offers five thousand dollars in prizes for a new national song. We would suggest that you write them for details.

Q. I plead guilty to musical snobbery in that I have always regarded picture music as a prostitution of art. My views have changed, and I am anxious to learn how to fit pictures. Where can I procure a text-book?

A. At present there is no authentic text book on the subject, but we believe that one is being written and soon will be published. We shall keep your name and address before us and send you a notice immediately upon its publication.

Q. I find great difficulty in obtaining the music suggested in cue sheets for the reason no publishers are mentioned. Why could not this defect be remedied?

A. It is hardly possible to give the names of music publishers in the cue sheets, but by writing The Music Service Exchange, 507 Fifth Ave., New York, or Belwin, Inc., Columbia Theatre Building, New York, any music you need will be furnished. Just mention the name of the piece and its composer. They will do the rest for you.

Song Creates Sensation at Navy Yard.

One of the songs that just fits in with the spirit of the time is "You Can't Beat Us, if It Takes Ten Million More." The song is the work of J. Keirn Brennan and Ernest R. Ball and is published by M. Witmark & Sons. At the Navy Yard in Philadelphia this song made a great hit when a rally was held there. Judge Buffington, who was one of the speakers, asked for a copy of the words after it had been sung, and made it the subject of his address. Mrs. Stotesbury and three or four admirals, who were on the platform, were so carried away with the song that they all joined in lustily when the chorus was sung.

Morrie Ryskind's Rhymed Review.

Appurtainin' to "Tell That to the Marines."

Young Eliot Adam Brainard was a pacifistic lad;
No matter what you did to him, you couldn't make him mad.
When ruder men would challenge to come and have a fight,
Good Eliot Adam Brainard answered, "I don't think it right!"

Now Eliot Adam's sweetheart (Nancy Wolcott was her name)
Was just as keen for scrapping as her Eliot was tame.
And when we folks got in the war, Miss Nancy wasn't nervous
A bit. She said, "I'll get the Huns!"—and joined the Secret Service.

But Eliot Adam Brainard said he thought the war was stupid,
A statement that knocked all the hopes from Mr. John R. Cupid.
For Nancy overheard him and got mad as anything;
"Ring off!" she said—and gave him back his ex-engagement ring.

So Eliot said, "I'm going to the country; where it's quiet,
Where Nature's grand and everything—where war-talk's on a diet.
And there I won't he bothered by this military chatter;
There may be snakes and bugs and worms—but really, they won't matter."

Alas, alas; And woe is me! He rested not a bit. He Discovered that the country was as warlike as the city.
There was a German plotter who was plotting something awful,
And acting in a manner which is not described by "lawful."

Now, Secret Service Nancy was upon the plotter's trail,
And determined for to put him where he ought to be—in jail.
She sneaked up on that worthy, but the blighter overheard her,
And started in to play the gentle German game of murder.

Then Eliot Adam Brainard walked into this peaceful scene;
He kicked Fritz in the trousers, and he biffed him on the bean;
And when Fritz pulled a gun on him, intent upon a killin',
The erstwhile peaceful Brainard put a bullet through the villain.

And then he grabbed his lady fair and hugged her to his side,
And said, "You lucky girl, you! You will be my blushing bride!
I don't believe in killing, but that Hun somewhat upset me;
No Hun is going to get you, Hon! I do the getting, get me?"

And Eliot Adam Brainard is at present a Marine;
He gets a dozen Huns a day—some days he gets thirteen!
Each time that he "goes over," just a dozen Huns are missed;
And if he's short of bullets, why, he swings his paci-fist!

This tale has got a moral which we hasten to make clear.
We'll state it very simply, and we'll state it now and here
We'll state it very briefly, and we'll use no fancy phrases;
When a pacifist gets angry, he can fight like Helen Blazes!

The Cello an Exponent of the Voice.

As musicians know the cello is constructed practically from the same model as the violin, but with certain alterations. For instance, in relation to the pitch, it is smaller than the violin. Otherwise the cello would have a tremendous tone, and be so large that it would be impracticable.

It has a long and varied register, and these characteristics make the instrument invaluable as a medium for expressing the inflections of the human voice. In its lower register it has the richness and volume of a basso profundo, and its highest register is capable of interpreting the tones of the lyric soprano. These remarkable qualities make the instrument invaluable to composers.

Wagner, Verdi, and a host of other composers, appreciated the almost human qualities and possibilities of the cello, and their operas have many solo parts for this instrument. They realized that no other musical medium was so capable of expressing the emotions of romance and grief.

It is difficult to imagine what symphonies and chamber music would become without the elements of devotion and pathos conveyed by this splendid instrument.

When composers who do not play the cello or do not have a proper understanding of the instrument write exercises for it, it often happens that the cello is placed in an improper light. For, while it is capable of much technical exhibitions, composers are inclined to lose sight of the fact that it has many dissimilar voice qualities, and when quick register changes occur the instrument loses somewhat its tonal effect, as in each register the strength of the tone varies. In this way, especially in concertos, some of the most leading passages are covered by the orchestral accompaniment. Of course, in slow movements, this does not hold good, because the tones are carried above practically any accompaniment. Therefore, it is easy to comprehend that it is in the sustained melody that the cello is especially at home.

The cellist literature embraces many concertos written by such great musicians as Haydn, Dupont, Molique, Lindner, Davidoff, Saint-Saens and Dvorak. The cello sonatas by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, Chopin, Mozart and Rachmaninoff are all noted and require no comment.

Popper and Servais are two men who have such an intimate understandng of the cello that even where their compositions are complicated from a technical standpoint the individuality of the instrument is distinctive and the tonal effect is not permitted to deteriorate.

If all cellists would appreciate the fact that this instrument is like a voice and play upon it singable music practically without exception, they would create greater popularity for it and add to the wealth of delightful musical entertainment.

There is no question of the great office of the cello in the orchestra, but in a church service, with the organ, it is a worthy substitute for the human voice; also, it is a solo instrument of beauty and power, and its possibilities in this field are practically limitless.

William Seabury Talks of Clearing House Prospects

WILLIAM M. SEABURY, who organized the Film Clearing House and who recently became identified with the Independent Sales Corporation as its vice president, when asked his views of existing conditions in the industry said:

"In my judgment the most important thing that has happened in the film world in some years is the recent announcement that the Film Clearing House is open for business. The establishment of the Clearing House is the first important step toward the reconstruction of the industry which must inevitably take place. It is the first step toward economy in distribution. It is a means of vital importance to the industry, by which it can discharge its increasing obligations and burdens and live.

"Without it some are confronted with the painful alternatives of going out of business because they cannot pay their present charges; or of going out of business because they cannot survive if they do not pay them. So that on the present basis these unfortunates expire in either event, whether they pay or do not pay.

Involves Only Physical Handling.

"While I was trying to establish the Clearing House all sorts of doubts were expressed as to its practicability. Some feared one competitor would be favored over another if several competitors distributed through the same medium—forgetting apparently that the work of distribution involves only the physical handling of film and does not involve the sale of competing product.

"If the physical service rendered is not efficient it can be terminated, but there are no competitive features involved in the Clearing House plan of operation.

"There is no more reason why one producer should refuse to distribute through the Clearing House because its competitor distributes his product through it than there is sense or reason in one merchant refusing to use a certain express company or railroad because one of his competitors uses the same means of transportation."

What One Player Does in a Few Short Years

IT would be difficult to find, in looking over the list of motion picture stars, one that has had a more busy career than Carlyle Blackwell of World Pictures, who recently completed "Love in a Hurry," with Evelyn Greeley.

In the years that he appeared on the screen he has played in 170 pictures. In these there were 6,481 scenes in which he was picturized. He had to portray in these 32 dual roles. Two thousand seven hundred and twenty days were spent in the studio and 852 on outside locations. Mr. Blackwell spent on his wardrobe to properly dress the parts in these productions $18,700. There were 2,040 costume changes. The time he spent in the studio was 24,480 hours. The number of "stills" for which he had to pose totals 3,060. The amount of money which he has spent for photographs given to "fans" runs up to $2,775.38.

The number of actors associated with Mr. Blackwell in the making of these pictures is 15,950. He has had 47 directors and has been associated with fourteen picture companies. Of his leading women, twelve have become stars. Twenty-six different cameramen were employed in making his pictures. Slightly in excess of 6,800,000 feet of negative film were used. The footage of positive prints reaches the enormous sum of 25,508,379 feet. The number of days his pictures have been shown has been estimated to reach 606,900, or 1,662 years and 9 months. Allowing a conservative average of 400 people a day who see each of Mr. Blackwell's prints during the life of each picture, we have the enormous total of 242,760,000 people who have seen his pictures. This, too, is limiting his audiences to America and does not take into consideration the extensive foreign distribution of his pictures. The amount of money paid in the shape of admissions in this country alone at the average price of seven cents to see Blackwell totals the almost unbelievable sum of $16,993,200. The exhibitors paid the producers for the privilege of showing Blackwell pictures $3,855,200.

The lithographers furnished for these pictures 359 different kinds of one sheets, 326 kinds of three sheets and 270 kinds of six sheets. The manufacturer's cost of Mr. Blackwell's pictures has been $1,190,537. The number of scenario writers who furnished scripts were 142.

Will Renovate Big Films for Small Town Showmen

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has completed a new system of repair and renovation of films, which it is expected will take care of the problems particularly of the small town exhibitor. For some months a plan, which was conceived by Charles C. Burr, an assistant general manager, and is now in operation whereby exhibitors even in the smallest towns receive prints in first class condition. The direct supervision of the new system will fall to Mr. Burr, with Hector Streyckmans in charge of the technical workings of the plan.

In connection with this new work, Mr. Burr said: "Better service to the exhibitor in small as well as large communities is the constant objective of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Our new system of repair and renovation of film is unlike anything heretofore attempted in the motion picture industry.

"Since the beginning of the business, the small town exhibitor has been handicapped with films that were in poor condition. His patrons in many instances were of high class suburban sections and discriminating in the selection of their entertainment. Our national advertising campaign has reached every city and hamlet. The wise exhibitor knows he must adopt a policy of 'the public be pleased' all the time and yet, because Paramount and Artcraft pictures were in such great demand comparatively, heretofore when the prints worked down to towns of 3,000 population we were at a disadvantage because the revenue to be obtained would not pay the cost of a new print. With the new system in operation, including various mechanical innovations, we can repair and renovate, replacing parts, reissuing as it were, a print as good as new.

"A film that has never been seen is always 'new,' just as the book that has never been read. Hence the large percentage of the motion picture public in a small town should comprise the exhibitor's list of patrons provided an entertainment of suitable quality can be offered.

"Our new plan of renovating and repairing film is one of large proportions and involves plants two of which are already working in New York City, with extensive organizations. However, the return will more than warrant the trouble and expense, for small town exhibitors will now be able to tackle their prospects with an immediate asset which they never before could use in their advertising. Such a thing as a poor print, when our system is in full swing, will be unknown as far as Paramount and Artcraft pictures are concerned."

CHAPLIN ENTERTAINS ENGLISH BISHOP

Churchman Outlines His Views on Pictures for the Young and Advocates Morning Performances

THE motion picture exhibitor occupies a position in his community of an importance equal to that of the local board of education and the teachers in the public schools, in the estimation of the Bishop of Birmingham, England, who visited Charlie Chaplin recently and expressed his opinions and views while noting the comedian's work on his third First National Exhibitors' Circuit release.

The Bishop of Birmingham has been sent to America by the British Government to study, among other things, the motion picture industry here, particularly the producing branch, and analyze what the American manufacturers are doing for the attainment of better pictures for the future. He also will make an exhaustive investigation of available facts on the effects of motion pictures in the formation of character in children.

It was this latter subject which holds the greatest personal interest for the Bishop, and on which he expressed himself at length. As a representative of the British Government, whose reports upon his return to England will be the chief factor in determining the activities of a number of the largest of the British film manufacturers, his views and opinions possess an unusual value and interest for the American exhibitors and producers.

No Penalty Provided for Offenders.

If exhibitors permit their screens to be sullied by showing deep sex pictures, questionable problem plays and suggestive productions, which have no claim to existence and patronage excepting their appeal to the morbid and degenerate minds of the comparative few in the total number of patrons of motion picture theatres, they are, in the estimation of the Bishop, committing a crime against the rising generation, which has no penalty for the perpetrators, but which will result in extreme harm to the children. He contends that there is no excuse for risqué productions, because the people who will patronize them are just as much prospective patrons for the decent and clean in motion pictures as they are for the other type of screen material, and that because of this the exhibitor sacrifices no profits, which otherwise would be lost to him by refusing to show any subjects but those which contain no situations or scenes that could arouse questionable speculation in the minds of children.

He contends further that there is a great distinction between a story in printed form and a story in motion pictures. An author, writing a story, will use phrases written in French, or resort to long, difficult words in describing a risqué situation, whereas, in motion pictures the situations of that character cannot be provided with alternatives and retain their meaning.

Bishop Spends Day with Chaplin.

The Bishop spent a day as the guest of Charlie Chaplin, and was an interested spectator of several scenes in the comedy on which he is working.

He discussed with the comedian the great possibilities existent, in his estimation, for the use of motion pictures as the world's chief medium of education not only for children but for adults. In this connection he pointed out what he believes to be an opportunity for creating a so-called by-product, which exhibitors can use to a profit in cash and good-will. This is the arranging of special morning or matinee performances or programs made up of educational subjects being studied in the schools, or by the various local clubs and societies in almost every city and town.

The Bishop of Birmingham and Charlie Chaplin.
(The Bishop Is the Tall One.)

One specific suggestion that was made, as an illustration of this opportunity for new revenue to exhibitors, was the compiling of a five or six-reel show, composed of film industries and life in a given country, and presenting it as a special morning or matinee entertainment under the auspices of a local club or society interested in the subject. This, in the Bishop's opinion, would attract a high-class patronage and would stimulate interest in motion pictures as a general medium of entertainment among people who rarely patronize the theatres.

Look Out for This.

Some one representing himself as an agent of the Artcraft Press, variously located in Albany and New York City, is working the New England states with a ready print program proposition. From reports received, he makes a town, induces the local manager to sign a contract with him to use a certain number of programs weekly, then sells space to the local merchants on the strength of the contract. Letters sent to Albany are returned stamped "Not in directory." The solicitor leaves no forwarding address with the hotel clerk when he leaves town. Exhibitors generally should be careful in signing contracts with unknown persons. In this instance the exhibitor himself sustains no direct financial loss, but he is made the instrument whereby his local merchants are swindled, and it will not help his house any.

Jack Pickford Signs Up With the First National

THE First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., has signed a contract with Jack Pickford to distribute three special productions which he will make as an independent star and producer at the head of his own company.

Announcement of the contract was made last week. Jack Pickford and his mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, have left for Los Angeles, where they will join Mary Pickford, who, at the head of her own company, has already begun work on "Daddy Long Legs," her first production to be distributed by First National under the terms of the contract recently executed with that organization. The juvenile star will begin work immediately on his first release.

According to the statement by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the same general terms which are a part of its contract with Mary Pickford, governing the distributing arrangement, are the chief features of its contract with her brother.

He will have no time limit in which to complete each of the three pictures. He will be solely responsible for their quality, and his popularity through quality product will be his own responsibility.

It is understood that the story for his first release will give him a role which splendidly suits him.

"Jack Pickford has elected to adopt his sister's plan of personal responsibility for individual product," said an exhibitor-director of First National. "He is the fourth star to be directly allied with an independent, open booking system. Exhibitors who book his productions through First National exchanges will not be asked to rent any other releases."

To Make Film Record of Red Man.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, will begin recording by motion pictures the dances, games, sports, and all things possible to a complete pictorial history of the American Indian early next spring. The films will first be published as a super-feature. They will then be stored, especially for the use of students, in some building to be determined. Weather conditions will not be the only cause for the wait until spring, for Mr. Smith hopes by that time to include in his records the pictures of most of the Indians who volunteered for service and took part in the war. Accuracy will predominate in the picturization, and the spectacular, while not neglected, will be sacrificed for historical values.

Sedgewick Receives a Commission.

DRESSES LOBBY TO REPRESENT A TRENCH

Entrance to Old Mill Theatre, Dallas, Transformed Into a Dug-Out for Presentation of "Shoulder Arms"

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS people who attended the Old Mill Theatre during the last week in November to see Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," entered a replica of an American trench system on the western front and stepped into the entrance of a dug-out before they were shown to their seats by ushers in trim military kahki.

Manager Herschel Stuart transformed the front of his theatre into a representation of trench walls with a sandbag parapet. The dug-outs, which took the place of theatre doors, were labeled after the names of hotels and home scenes with quaint army humor. With the exception that there were no "cooties" or trench rats the display was most realistic. All house records were broken for a week's run.

Sunset Company Enlarging Its Quarters.

San Antonio, with its ideal climate and its picturesque surroundings of old Spanish missions and quaint countryside, is fast becoming a motion picture center of nationwide importance.

Out at Harlandale, a San Antonio suburb, the Sunset Corporation is rapidly enlarging its quarters. A new laboratory, a fireproof concrete building, has recently been added to the studio block, and further additions are promised, as the company is turning out big productions under Director Frank Powell.

The Sunset Corporation has its eyes on the foreign trade, which will put American pictures in great demand in Mexico and South America, now that the war has ceased. Conditions in Mexico are settling back rapidly and with the stabilizing of the national currency on a gold basis business there is rapidly begininng to pick up.

San Antonio is the logical point for a motion picture production center to cater to the great demand which will soon come from the Mexican Republic, a few miles south, and officials of the big company were not slow to realize it. Films particularly adaptable to Latin American ideas are being turned out with sub-titles in Spanish. Jane Miller and House Peters are to star in some most unusual Sunset features. The Forfeit featuring these two stars as filmed in San Antonio has proved a distinct success.

McTyer, General's District Manager, Dead.

Manager Jimmy Kelly, of General, and his entire staff, as well as other folks along Dallas film row, were saddened by news of the death of District Manager T. F. McTyer, of General, on November 19. H. D. Norville, western division manager for Vitagraph, who died at Omaha recently, had many friends along Dallas film row who mourn his loss. News of his death was received by J. B. Dugger, Dallas Vitagraph manager, and a close personal friend of Mr. Norville.

M. L. Levine Visits Dallas.

M. L. Levine, of Corsica, owner of the Ideal and Majestic theatres there, showed up on Dallas film row late in November, much to the astonishment of his friends, who had heard that he had died of Spanish influenza. Mr. Levine was on the point of death owing to a serious attack of the disease, but through his splendid constitution he rallied and recovered.

Larger Quarters for Pathe Exchange.

Manager Hill, of the Pathe Dallas branch, is having a busy time moving into his new quarters in the former Dallas Gas Company Building, on Commerce street. His firm has taken the entire three-story structure, completely remodeling it. Mahogany and plate glass fixtures are being installed, making the exchange a model one for the Southwest. W. S. Wessling, southern district manager for Pathe, was here to aid in the transfer. He has now left for the East.

Dutch Police Stop "America's Answer"

THE Committee on Public Information has just made public an interesting cablegram from the American Legation at The Hague which states that "The Dutch police were forced to stop the performance of 'America's Answer' one night this week owing to the great pro-American demonstrations which it aroused among the audience. It is also being received with great enthusiasm in Rotterdam, where it is being shown."

When this picture, issued by the Government, was shown in Washington by Crandall's, it also made quite a hit, the people being anxious to see official pictures of this nature.

Mettler Representing Kleine System.

Leo B. Mettler is in Washington, D. C., as the representative of the George Kleine System. He has secured desk room in the offices of the General Film Company.

E. A. Crane, representing Hodkinson's productions, has moved to the Pathe Exchange from the offices of the General Film Company. He will not be hard to locate, inasmuch as both exchanges are in the same building, at Sixth and F streets, Northwest.

Leader Theatre Hangs Effigy of Kaiser.

The hanging of an effigy of the Kaiser in front of the Leader Theatre as an incident of the exhibition of "The Kaiser's Finish," created a great deal of excitement on Ninth street at a time when a large crowd of theatre-goers were in the neighborhood. The photoplay is running a full week at this house.

SAN FRANCISCO THEATRES RAISE PRICES

Due to Steadily Advancing Cost of Operation—Most Increases in Round Figures, Obviating Penny Change

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

WITH the reopening of San Francisco theatres almost all of the large downtown houses have advanced their prices to meet in part the steady increase in operating costs. Several theatre managers have estimated that costs outside of house rentals have increased more than fifty per cent. during the past year and a half, but most of these have been charging former prices, with only the war tax added. The new rates in most houses are now in round figures, doing away with the annoyance of penny change. At the California minimum prices for the balcony are 11 cents for matinees and 17 cents for evening performances, these being the only prices requiring the use of pennies. Many theatres have enlarged their orchestras and added special attractions in connection with the new rate schedule.

Film Clearing House to Open Soon.

D. J. Chatkin, representing the Film Clearing House, Inc., arrived in San Francisco recently to open offices in the old George Kleine quarters, at 183 Golden Gate avenue, and after visiting other Pacific Coast points on a similar mission will return to make his headquarters in this city. He has appointed Hugh Rennie manager of the Denver office and the Los Angeles branch will be placed in charge of H. J. Roberts, who conferred with Mr. Chatkin during his stay in this city. Mr. Chatkin will go to Seattle shortly to get that branch in running order and will then return to take charge of the San Francisco headquarters.

Pathe Office a Busy Place.

The quarters of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the Easton Building, always noted for business activities, have taken on additional life of late now that the American Film Manufacturing Company and the Hodkinson Service have opened offices there. Ralph O. Proctor, the new district manager, paid this exchange an initial visit recently and complimented Manager E. O. Child highly on the efficiency of this branch. Mr. Proctor was formerly district manager for Pathe in the Central West, and is greatly pleased with the change to the Pacific Coast. He will establish his headquarters either in this city or in Los Angeles.

General Manager Goes to Los Angeles.

Harry Schmidt, for the past two years manager of the local branch of the General Film Company, and one of the most popular exchange men on Film Row, has been appointed manager of the Los Angeles office of this concern, and has been succeeded here by Meyer J. Cohen, former manager of the George Kleine System. He has already departed for the southern city and will take charge of that office before the general opening of the theatres in the southern part of the state.

Mr. Schmidt, while a young man, has been identified with the film exchange business in this city for many years. For the past eight years he has been with the concern with which he is still connected, having gradually worked his way through all of the departments to the position of manager. Before the advent of the General Film Company in this field he was connected for two years with the Novelty Exchange, which this concern succeeded.

In leaving San Francisco he carried with him the good will of both exhibitors and film exchange men. The office staff of the General remembered him with a handsome brief case, while the film exchange managers of the city surprised him with a splendid gift as a token of the esteem in which he has always been held.

General Film News.

Walter Rand, district manager for the General, arrived here recently from Chicago, and left for Los Angeles after making several changes in the local office. Arrangements were completed for the tansfer of Harry Schmidt to Los Angeles and the placing of Meyer J. Cohen in charge of the San Francisco branch. Mr. Cohen will continue to represent the George Kleine interests in this territory.

H. F. Moore, former local manager for the George Kleine System, is continuing in this capacity, and Miss Ruth Keller is also now in the General office as cashier of the George Kleine organization. Miss H. Weilheimer, formerly invoice clerk with George Kleine, is now filling a similar position with the General, while James Clark, formerly shipper with George Kleine, is now assistant to R. Holsell at the General.

Harry Hollandsworth, formerly booker for George Kleine, who enlisted in the merchant marine early in the war, has received his honorable discharge, and in keeping with his policy of caring for all employes who enlisted, Mr. Kleine has arranged to have the local man join the staff of the General.

All Star Activities.

Sol Lesser, head of the All Star Feature Distributors, is preparing to leave very shortly for New York to make additional film purchases. Mike Rosenberg, president of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, which handles most of Mr. Lesser's purchases in the Northwest, is expected here for a conference before the departure of the latter.

Elmer Benjamin has been made manager of the local office of the All Star, having been promoted from a road position. Four salesmen have been started out on the road and are doing well, despite the fact that many houses are still closed.

Peerless to Move.

E. H. Emmick, of the Peerless Film Service, has returned from an extended Eastern trip, and has completed arrangements for the removal of his exchange from 100 Golden Gate avenue to 94 Golden Gate avenue. The change is being made to secure additional space, the growth of the business having been such that the present quarters are entirely inadequate.

Oppenheimer Dies of Heart Failure.

I. Oppenheimer, for many years an exhibitor of this city, passed away suddenly of heart failure a short time ago. At one time he was interested in the Rex Theatre, at Polk and Clay streets, and the Sunset Theatre, at Haight and Cole streets. Later he and his associates opened the Royal, on Polk street, a highly attractive district theatre, and took over the Polk Theatre, a few blocks away. He is survived by his widow and a daughter.

World Representative Visits Dayton.

N. BREGSTEIN, of the Moving Picture World staff, spent several days in Dayton last week, acting as a special representative of "The Bible of the Industry," doing "missionary" work and things otherwise. Mr. Bregstein is making a tour of the country, and from his route sheet one would glean that he intended to do the job right. This humblest of scribes invited Mr. Bregstein to make his headquarters in his office in the Dayton Building and helped in every way to introduce him to the exhibitors of Dayton. While here Mr. Bregstein told of the many new features that the World had inaugurated in its endeavor to give service to the exhibitor.

Griffith Film Again at Memorial Hall.

On Sunday, November 24, announcement was made in the local dailies that "Hearts of the World," the big Griffith production, would hold over at the Memorial Hall, Dayton, for five more days. After playing Sunday, the 24th, the "Hearts" film stepped out for two days to make way for a concert attraction that was booked by the Civic Music League for Monday and Tuesday. The Griffith picture opened again on Wednesday through to Saturday, so states Fred Meeks, manager of the road show that is playing here. Business picked up somewhat during the end of the week's engagement, thus the extended time.

Business Good in Sydney.

BUSINESS in Sydney, C. B., is exceptionally good, the three houses being well attended. J. M. Franklin, owner of the Strand, Halifax, the Opera House, St. John, and the Strand, Sydney, says his expectations of the Sydney Theatre, under the management of Harry Beaman, have been far overpast. He is delighted with the success Mr. Beaman has made, and much praise is given the fine orchestra, which is said to be equal to any in this part of the country.

McKay Loses a Theatre by Fire.

D. M. McKay had one of his theatres in New Waterford, C. B., burned down lately. It was not a house which was open, but in a building which Mr. McKay owned and kept closed.

Interesting Short Items.

W. H. Cousiner, of Sydney Mines, is still operating his theatre in temporary quarters, but hopes to have his new house open the second or third week in December. It will be a credit to the town, and Mr. Coursiner deserves every credit for his enterprise and pluck.

Business in Moncton, N. B., is good. Messrs. Torry and Winters state that in spite of the influenza they have no reason to complain of conditions in that town.

Joe Lieberman has recently returned from a trip to Halifax, the Sydneys, New Glasgow and towns on the main line. He reports that the general outlook is none too good because of the influenza. Several towns have opened and kept open one week, only to have to close again.

NEW DE LUXE THEATRE, DETROIT, OPENS

Adam Period of Architecture Used—Seats Rise in Amphitheatre Style—Managed by A. J. Moeller

By Jacob Smith. 117 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

THE New De Luxe Theatre, Kercheval and Park View avenues, Detroit, was opened last week under the management of A. J. Meoller. The premier attraction was a Select picture, "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," as this house will show both Paramount, Artcraft and Select productions, first-run in the territory.

The DeLuxe seats about 1,800, of which 1,000 seats are on the main floor. A brief description of the theatre follows: The vestibule is carried out in ornamental terra cotta. Lobby and foyer conform to the general plan, carrying out the decorative lines of the entire design in ornamental plaster and marble. All floors are of silent, non-slipping tile. The auditorium is of hippodrome design, the tiers of seats sloping in one unbroken sweep, from first row to last, each seat affording an unobstructed view of the stage. The seats are reached both from the mezzanine and from the ground floor level by passageways through the floor.

Parking space for a large number of automobiles is available, the theatre abutting three newly-paved streets—Kercheval, Vincennes and Parkview avenues. The facade follows the design of the Adams period, interior decoration being carried out to conform. The Adams period of architecture is peculiarly adapted to this type of building. Construction is fireproof, with steel frame and reinforced concrete floors and roof. The exterior is faced with cream terra cotta and brick, trimmed with colored terra cotta in recessed panels of sufficient color to bring into prominence the finely worked detail. Mahogany-finished doors and box-office, marble trimmed, add to the rich appearance. The marquee projects well over the sidewalk, covering the entire entrance, and is ornamented with concealed lights recessed in glass panels.

The night illumination is made especially attractive by the use of concealed lights in the marquee flooding the building. This creates an effect that is pleasing to the eyes and yet displays prominently the beauty of design. Ample space for poster advertising is provided by stationary frames of mahogany set in flush panels. Ornate plaster decorations and harmonious hangings, including a beautiful stage setting, are embodied in the general plan. The De Luxe is equipped with the latest improved ventilating system, roomy upholstered chairs, latest devices in the projection room, including two Power's machines, and a Velvet Gold Fibre Screen on the stage.

Performances are given three times daily, except on Sundays and holidays, when they will be continuous. Prices are 15 and 20 cents, plus war tax.

Says Popularity of Miss Pickford Will Increase.

The Moving Picture World correspondent asked Harry Scott, the resident Detroit manager for the Madison Film Exchange, which is the distributor in Michigan for First National, what effect the new contract with Pickford would have on future prices for her pictures. Mr. Scott replied: "It is my opinion that Mary Pickford, under the banner of the First National, will increae sher popularity and drawing power at least 100 per cent—rather a strong assertion, but we must considered that she is now free to select her own stories regardless of cost, stories she knows are adaptable to her personality and style of acting; that she is no longer handicapped with a time limit for release; that in casting her productions it is not necessary on account of existing long term work or pay contracts to use players totally unsuited to parts assigned them; that the cost of her productions is not limited to a fixed amount.

"Several exhibitors with whom I have talked readily admit that they can well afford to pay at least three times as much for Pickford in specially selected productions as they have paid on the program basis. One exhibtor informs me that his books show that Pickford has carried all of the losing stars he was forced to take on the program with her, and, figuring the amount lost during the year on the stars referred to he could pay just five times as much for Pickford and make money, if relieved of the burden of carrying the dead times.

"A comparison of 'A Dog's Life' and 'Shoulder Arms' with Chaplin pictures, made prior to his contract with the First National, is the most convincing argument of what is to be expected of Pickford under her contract with the First National."

CINCINNATI NEWS.

Rob Cashier of Gifts Theatre.

Miss Marion Davis, the cashier at the main entrance of McMahan & Jackson's Gifts Theatre, at Sixth and Vine streets, Cincinnati, was made the victim of a bold holdup man a few evenings ago, and the house suffered the loss of $19. The man appeared at the window with a $20 bill, and while Miss Davis was counting out the change he grabbed the money and made away with it. In spite of the crowds around the theatre the marauder made his escape before anybody grasped the fact that anything was wrong.

Exhibitor Smith Sues Power Company.

Peter L. Smith, an exhibitor of Bellevue, Ky., across the river from Cincinnati, has filed suit against the Union Light, Heat & Power Company, which furnishes electric current for various purposes, for $12,480 damages. The suit grows out of an accident of last September when, Mr. Smith says, an electric service wire carrying a high voltage came in contact with a trolley wire in front of the theatre, resulting in the wires in the theatre being overcharged and ruining the projecting apparatus and other material, besides alarming the audience and damaging the exhibitor in that respect.

RECORD BUSINESS IN SEATTLE HOUSES

Theatres in Downtown Section Playing to Capacity —Influenza Depression Felt in Small Towns

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

THE downtown motion picture theatres of Seattle have been playing to record business all week. Sunday afternoon and evening it was impossible to get seats immediately on arrival at any of the larger theatres. At most of them the line extended out along the sidewalk. The crowds were particularly persistent at the Liberty, where Charlie Chaplin's new production, "Shoulder Arms," had just opened.

The depression caused by the Spanish influenza epidemic is showing more lasting effects in the small towns through the state. The cautiousness of the people after such dangerous times is more noticeable among the limited population from which the small town exhibitor draws. Another difficulty which several of the towns in the northwestern part of the state have had to confront is the changing minds of the health authorities. In several instances they have been allowed to open their houses, and a day or two later have been ordered to close them again. During the six weeks schools and theatres were closed in Snohomish, although the number of influenza cases was negligible; then as soon as Everett, the nearest large town, was opened, the epidemic began to spread in Snohomish. After the opening of their own theatres a week later the disease has been steadily gaining ground, and it is possible that they may have to close, after being open for about two weeks. In the meantime, people are giving the theatres a wide berth as a general rule.

There are at this writing only about thirty per cent. of the towns in Washington State open.

Robber Caught by Cashier.

What would have looked like a regular farce-comedy robbery had there been anyone to witness it except the deadly-in-earnest participants took place in front of the Mission Theatre recently. A respectable looking man walked up to the box office as if he were going to buy a ticket; but, instead of handing money to the cashier, he made a dive at the pile of silver on her counter, and grabbed a fist full in each hand. Instead of screaming, the plucky little cashier caught his hands and jerked them up against the glass opening, which cut them and made him stand still. In the meantime the doorman saw the struggle, and, walking calmly up to the would-be robber, poked his finger in his side and said:

"Don't move or I'll shoot."

The man stood perfectly still, and the doorman grabbed him, while the cashier called the police. The would-be robber pleaded guilty, saying that he was broke and needed the money. He got 130 days in jail.

Operators Get Increase.

It has just come out in film circles that the day before the opening of the theatres last week the operators' union struck for $1 an hour. They declared that they would not go to work unless granted the increase for their six-hour day, so the theatre managers held a meeting and agreed to give it to them.

Fear Samuelson Is Lost.

It is feared that Louis Samuelson, well known booker of Seattle, was one of those lost on the Steamship Dumaru, which was blown up in the Southern Pacific on October 16. The ship was loaded with gasoline and dynamite, and during a thunder storm was struck by lightening, igniting the gasoline on the decks. Realizing the danger the crew immediately took to their boats, but the explosion occurred before they had got very far away. Mr. Samuelson had been a booker for Pathe first in the Minneapolis office, then in Portland, then in Seattle. He shipped on the Dumaru in the engineer's department. No word has been received from Mr. Samuelson as yet either by his wife, who is now in Portland, or by the Seattle Pathe office.

Coliseum Installs Big Wurlitzer Organ.

The Greater Theatres Company held the grand opening of the new $30,000 Hope-Jones Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra recently, with George A. Malotte at the keyboard. A noon concert was given by Oliver G. Wallace, the Seattle favorite, who has made the Wurlitzer at the Liberty Theatre famous. The installation of the new Wurlitzer at the Coliseum does not mean the dismissal of the splendid thirty-piece symphony orchestra. The orchestra continues under the direction of Marius Brambilla.

Basom Doing Big Advertising.

C. V. Basom, who has just opened the new Sumner Theatre at Sumner, Wash., is carrying on the biggest advertising campaign of any small town exhibitor in the state. When Mr. Basom opened his new house, A. J. Kennedy, in charge of the service department of the Seattle Artcraft-Paramount office, went up and helped him get started, and suggested a course of advertising for him to follow. Mr. Basom accepted the suggestions, and is cashing in on them. He is using two 24-sheet boards, two 6 sheets, two 3 sheets and ten 1 sheets, and is changing the paper 3 times a week. Sumner has a population of a little over 1,000. Although Mr. Basom is a newcomer in the business he is showing an aptitude for it that is already gaining him the reputation of being a live wire.

Northwest Film Notes.

Ed. J. Fischer, of the Fischer Booking Agency, of Seattle, has taken up the running of motion picture theatres as a hobby. He opened the Rose in Everett some time ago, and with the lifting of the influenza ban in Seattle he opened the Bothell Rose Theatre in Botell, a suburb of Seattle. This house seats 250, and is equipped with the finest in projection apparatus and is well furnished with opera chairs.

Mr. Shaw, who operated the Liberty Theatre in Whitefish, Mont., died last week of pneumonia following influenza. Mrs. E. M. Shaw will continue the show.

Buhler, managing director of the above corporations. Capt. W. Arrangements have already been completed for the presentation of "Under Four Flags" at the Stanley Theatre during the week of December 16.

"Billie" Meck, who is a popular member of the Operators' Union, Local No. 307, and who has been acting in the capacity of manager at the Broadway Theatre, Fifty-second and Greenway avenue, received an appointment from the Community Motion Picture Corporation as supervisor of projection in France, where he will be stationed for two years. Employes in Service to Get Old Jobs Back.

THE Eastman Kodak Company has announced that all of its employes now in service will be welcomed back to their old jobs when they are discharged and arrive home. Where it is impossible to give a man the same job he formerly held he will be provided with one just as good. The company has considered men in the service as still being in its employ and merely away on a temporary leave of absence. For this reason the company has continued the usual employes' dividends to the dependents or next of kin of the men or who ever they designated to receive it.

A. N. Wolff, manager of the Colonial Theatre and president of the Rochester Exhibitors' League, is back on the job after being laid up with the influenza.

Ban on Outdoor Lighting Removed.

The removal of the ban on outdoor lighting is much appreciated by local theatre managers, who for long have wearied of the continual darkness which enshrouded their street fronts and buried the lobbies in gloom. The flashing signs have blazed forth again and some managers claim that the lights and more cheerful aspect of things materially increases their box-office receipts. Main street, Rochester, is supposed to be one of the best illuminated thoroughfares in the country and in comparison with a score of other cities, many of larger size, shows that it really has a real white way. The Main street theatres contribute considerably to the blaze of light.

Judge Wilson to Manage the Majestic.

JUDGE CHARLES WILSON, formerly manager of Fontaine Ferry Park, has taken over the active management of the Majestic Theatre, Louisville, during the enforced absence of Louis J. Dittmar, who is spending practically all of his time in the East. Mr. Dittmar is in Louisville for a few days, but expects to go right back to New York, where he is busy on his colored picture project, which he states will be on the market by January 1. Rettick Resigns from Anderson Theatre.

Carl F. Rettick, manager of the Mary Anderson Theatre, of Louisville, has resigned and become associated with a group of local capitalists who have a number of amusement plans under cover, which they expect to go after as soon as conditions are a little nearer normal. A short time ago Mr. Rettick refused the management of the Alhambra Theatre, New York, due principally to the illness of Mrs. Rettick, which is so serious that it would be impossible to move her, and he wishes to remain with her. For the present Mr. Rettick will assume certain work in connection with the management of the Ha-Wa-Ian Gardens, which he aided in promoting. H. S. Carter, who succeeded Mr. Rettick as manager at the National Theatre when Rettick went to the Mary Anderson, will for the present look after the management of both of the Keith houses. Mr. Rettick did much to popularize vaudeville while in Louisville, resulting in two good vaudeville houses having become well patronized. J. Harold Roswell, assistant manager of the National Theatre, is doing most of the active work at that house for the present. Roswell has broken in five managers at Keith theatres in Louisville at one time or another, and been acting manager on several occasions. G. E. Gerber will be retained as assistant manager at the Mary Anderson.

"Birth of a Nation" Film Barred.

Since last week, when it was announced that Mayor Smith, of Louisville, had requested that the "Birth of a Nation" no longer be shown in the city, it has been learned that the Republican Mayor, in answer to the negro element's call, had decided to close the showing of this film for all time to come in Louisville under a state law passed several years ago to prevent the showing of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Mayor Smith stated that while liberal-minded people would not take exceptions to the film, at the same time there was no reason for stirring up race prejudices. He stated that while the Griffith production was a wonderful one, he believed that the film had been shown as often in Louisville as there was any need or desire.

YAMADA AND KAITA OPEN THE ATLAS

Builds Picture House in Seattle's Japanese Business Section—Music Furnished by a Fotoplayer

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

THE finest motion picture theatre in the lower downtown section of Seattle was opened on November 12, the day of the lifting of the influenza ban in the city. The new house, the Atlas, situated at 412 Maynard avenue, was built, is owned and operated by Messrs. Yamada and Kaita, the former having been an exhibitor of Seattle for the last fifteen years, having owned and operated the Electric and later the Bison, in the same vicinity. The Atlas is built of brick, with a stucco finish on the front. There is a handsome marquee with a big electric sign over it.

A particular feature of the seating arrangement of this house is that there is no balcony, in spite of the fact that the theatre has 500 seats. The auditorium is wide for one of its capacity, though not too wide, the side seats furnishing a perfect view of the picture. The walls of the auditorium are simply but effectively decorated.

Projection Room Large.

The projection room is large and well ventilated, with all wiring concealed. The machines used are Powers 6B. The screen is a Minusa gold fibre. Music is furnished by a $4,500 Fotoplayer operated in shfits by two skillful musicians of the city. Artcraft-Paramount, Select, Fox, Vitagraph, Universal and Pathe service have been contracted for. Admission prices of 15 cents and 10 cents are charged. There are no loges.

In establishing the policy of their house the managers are taking into consideration not only the large transient patronage which other theatres in this vicinity rely on, but the family trade from the rooming houses and hotels in the immediate neighborhood and the near-by Japanese residence district. With this in view they have made the rule that no smoking will be permitted in the house. In all other theatres below Yesler Way smoking is permitted.

Many Floral Pieces Received.

The Atlas opened with Theda Bara in "Cleopatra." The opening was quite an event in the vicinity, which is the main Japanese business section, and the managers received a large number of handsome floral pieces expressing the good wishes of their various business friends. There were flowers from the H. A. Johnson Company, which sold them the equipment for the Atlas; from the North American Times, the Japanese newspaper of Seattle; from the Oriental American Bank; from the Japanese Commercial Bank; from the manager of the Pacific Hotel; from the owner of the ground on which the theatre is built, and many others.

Brentlinger's Employes Honor Him.

A. F. Brentlinger, general manager of the new Liberty Theatre, at Terre Haute, Ind., was the recipient of a number of beautiful presents last week from employes of his theatres as an expression of their appreciation of his generosity in paying them during the four weeks the theatres were closed as a result of the influenza. The employes of the Liberty presented him with a handsome burnished gold combination fountain pen and pencil with his name engraved on them. The employes of his theatre at Fort Wayne gave a banquet in his honor and presented him with an indirect lighting bronze table lamp. Employes of the theatre at Richmond gave him a beautiful engraved card case.

Attractive Lithos for Carlton Drama.

Unusually attractive one, three and six-sheets and twenty-four sheet stands are now being issued for Carle E. Carlton's "A Romance of the Air," featuring Lieutenant Bert Hall, the American ace, and Edith Day. The designs by Asa Cassidy are the composite results of a recent contest in which fifty members of the American Society of Illustrators at 215 West Fifty-seventh street competed. When Mr. Carlton announced the contest to the society a notice was sent to each and every member, and more than 200 sketches were submitted. From these the judges selected those most suitable for this thrilling picture, and Mr. Cassidy has made composite drawings.

HARDEN RESIGNS FROM THE EQUITABLE

Management of Kansas City Distributing Corporation Assumed by W. M. Bell—Policy of Company Unchanged

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

W. M. BELL vice-president, assumes the management and J. M. Campbell, president will be more active in the affairs of the Equitable Film Corporation, with the retirement of Charles W. Harden. Mr. Harden sold his interests recently, having been general manager since the organization of the corporation. Mr. Bell has the distinction of a broader acquaintance over the world than most Kansas citizens—and than most film men of other American cities. He was for three years in Australia with the J. D. Williams Enterprises, and had been made manager of International Pictures when the Williams organization grew to the need of that buying facility.

Returning to America five years ago, Mr Bell was district manager of the General Film Company. Three years ago he opened the Midwest Photoplay Corporation here, handling Selznick material, which organization was taken over by Selznick and later by Select Pictures Corporation, Mr. Bell continuing with the new organization some time. From Select, Mr. Bell went to St. Louis as manager of that office for Paramount-Artcraft. He came to Kansas City then, organized the Camp-Bell Company, which was later reorganized as the Equitable Film Corporation. This corporation distributes in Western Missouri and Kansas the following: Billy West comedies; Shorty Hamilton westerns; Jester two-reelers; Anna Little two-reelers, and in features, "Mothers of Liberty," "Cleopatra" (with Helen Gardner), "Who Shall Take My Life?" and "City of Purple Dreams." There is no change of policy with the change in management.

Mr. Harden has not announced his plans. While comparatively "idle," however, he is using time to good advantage for the industry by promoting the organization of the co-operative body of amusement interests. Mr. Harden is chairman of the committee appointed to work out organization plans. It is possible that he may refrain from making business connections until the new organization is established.

Foland Visits General's Chicago Branch.

J. E. Foland, manager of the General Film Company at Kansas City, recently made a trip to Chicago, where he had conferences with W. F. Rogers, sales manager of the General, and met other leaders in the film industry.

Feld Is Back in Sergeant's Uniform.

One of the first "returned officers" to be observed in Kansas City exchanges is Milton Feld. He is back again—wearing a sergeant's uniform and insignia—at his desk as manager of the Universal. He has been six months at Camp MacArthur. L. B. Douglas, who has been managing the Universal office in Mr. Feld's absence, resumes his position of office manager.

Universal Installs Publicity Department.

The Universal has installed a publicity department, with H. R. Kaull, formerly with the Kansas City Star, as manager. Mr. Kaull has for several months been writing the moving picture pages of the Star, which appear twice a week. He has many plans, now being developed, for helping the exhibitor.

Advertising "Wolves of Kultur."

The Empress Theatre, of Kansas City, a vaudeville and moving picture house, is pressing to the full its offering of "Wolves of Kultur," the Pathe serial. The theatre uses its normal space in the amusement column of the daily papers—among the speaking-stage advertisements—referring incidentally to the moving picture attraction and referring readers to the photoplay page for further particulars. On the photoplay page is another display advertisement of the same size as that on the amusement page emphasizing "Wolves of Kultur." This second advertisement has the startling headline, "Bolshevism in Kansas City," and refers to incidents here that might be attributed to Hun spies. Children especially are invited to see the picture and learn the methods of Hun propagandists.

Business Somewhat Light in Sedalia.

A. F. Brown, assistant to W. J. Brill in the management of the Lyra and Electric theatres at Sedalia, Mo., was a Kansas City visitor November 25. Mr. Brown reported that the theatres had been running two weeks since the lifting of the ban, but that the reappearance of influenza cases aroused the fear that the restrictions would be imposed again. Patronage had not been fully restored to pre-epidemic proportions.

Eddie Polo to Visit Kansas City.

Eddie Polo, the Universal serial star, will shortly be in Kansas City territory, and will spend three days here, with perhaps a day or so at St. Joseph. Exhibitors are already planning their use of the star's personal appearance to promote the popularity of the star himself and of their theatres as the places where his productions may be seen.

Fred Savage Back on Job Again.

Fred Savage, proprietor of the DeLuxe Theatre at Hutchinson, Kansas, who was ill for several weeks, is reported much improved. He is again at his post of business, and assisting in the promotion of plans for the meeting of the Kansas association.

Pre-Epidemic Business Restored.

The Pathe office in Kansas City is already back on its pre-influenza volume, rather to the surprise of J. E. Storey, manager, who feared it would take months to restore business. The thorough organization of the office enabled it to get on the job quickly. A. C. Shannon is handling Hodkinson and Paralta in the organization now, and Earl E. Reynolds has moved his headquarters, as manager for the American, into the Pathe quarters.

Lappe Representing Select.

H. B. Lappe, formerly of the Lappe-Tighe Amusement Company, of Kansas City, is now acting as city representative for Select Pictures Corporation. Mr. Lappe a few years ago was active as an exhibitor, his company operating the Tenth Street, the Palace, the Twelfth Street and the Wills Wood theatres all as picture houses. The firm performed a distinct service to the industry in its enterprise in connection with the management of the theatres.

Finishing Improvements in Apollo Theatre.

The Apollo Theatre will within a few days receive the last touches of improvements amounting to about $10,000 started during the period of the influenza bans. C. D. Rose, manager, and O. P. Rose, assistant manager, took immediate advantage of this idle time to install a foyer and to add numerous items such as tapestries, which the theatre had lacked. Messrs. Rose are planning further expenditures, concerning which definite announcement cannot now be made.

Green Buys Two Theatres.

A. Green, editor of the daily paper at Concordia, Kan., has bought the Brown-Grand and the Princess theatres. The Brown-Grand will be used for super-pictures and for occasional speaking stage productions that can be secured for the town. The Princess runs every day as a moving picture establishment.

Kansas City Brevities.

W. V. Goodwin, for more than a year booker for Triangle at Detroit, more recently Kansas representative for George Kleine, has been appointed booker for the General Film Company at Kansas City, assuming his new duties November 25.

D. H. Bergh, personal representative of George Kleine, was a visitor in Kansas City recently at the offices of C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager for George Kleine here.

Howard D. Jameyson, formerly with Pathe, now a cadet at Fort Sill, Okla., is expected in Kansas City within a few weeks. Mr. Jameyson has not yet had an opportunity to learn to fly. He will probably get back into the moving picture industry.

Frank M. Brown, formerly with William L. Sherry Service, has been appointed representative for General Film Company, with Southeast Kansas and Southwest Missouri territory.

E. H. Waehter is now located in Kansas City handling Fox Film Corporation service, for the district, including Salt Lake City, Dallas, Denver and Kansas City exchanges.

Harold Harden, newly appointed booker for Mutual at Kansas City, is installing new system in his department, which it is expected will greatly facilitate the handling of this feature of the business.

Cleveland News Letter

By M. A. Malaney.

Victory Singing at First-Run Houses.

VICTORY SINGING has been introduced in two first-run Cleveland theatres with great success, and it is likely to continue for a long time.

At the Alhambra, the management engaged Harper Garcia Smyth, a vocal specialist and high-priced man, who has been putting on patriotic singing pageants in the city's parks for the past year. From 2,000 to 4,000 people took part in the singing in the parks, and Smyth's name naturally was a signal for a big turnout. The Alhambra puts it on every week-day evening, Smyth singing the chorus, the words then being flashed upon the screen and the audience joining in. It makes a big hit. The program of songs is changed twice a week, and it is a mixture of patriotic and comic songs.

The Miles Theatre engaged Santry, a vocalist, to put on his stunt, and he also made a big hit. Santry also changes his program weekly, and the plan is likely to remain a part of this theatre's program for months.

New Manager for Oliver Supply Company.

Frank L. Smith, formerly with the Mutual Film Corporation, Cincinnati, has been engaged by E. E. Oliver to manage the Oliver Motion Picture Supply Company.

Mr. Smith has numerous friends throughout northern Ohio, and Mr. Oliver, looking for a very good man to relieve him, selected Mr. Smith. Mr. Oliver will now be free to give needed attention to his repair department, which is rushed with work, and this will also give him an opportunity to get out on the road.

Alhambra Signs for New V. Serial.

Manager Ed Smith gave his new Universal serial, "The Lure of the Circus," with Eddie Polo, a great start the week of November 17. He not only give it some clever advertising, but got a first-run house, the Alhambra, to use it. Smith also received word that Eddie Polo would be in Cleveland the week of December 1, and lost no time in getting it in the papers.

Hite to Open Cleveland Branch.

H. T. Snowden, of the C. C. Hite Attractions, Cincinnati, was in Cleveland, November 23, and announced that his company would soon establish a Cleveland branch. Mr. Snowden also stated that they were releasing a new picture, "Hearts of America," and that Mr. Hite had signed up for a series of reissues, including the Harold Lockwood Mutual pictures.

Houck New Manager of Liberty.

J. WILLIAM HOUCK, who has been field representative for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with headquarters in Seattle, has been appointed manager of the Liberty Theatre, and took charge of it November 18 just the day previous to the influenza ban being lifted. He had been familiarizing himself with the Liberty for several days previous to taking charge, and succeeds Sam W. B. Cohn, who resigned while the quarantine was on to enter the military service.

Mr. Houck has been in the picture business for the last five years, most of the time with the exchanges, and covered this territory quite regularly for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He has visited many of the moving picture studios in Los Angeles and vicinity in connection with his exchange work, and has a wide acquaintance among the stars, directors and producers. Mr. Houck is a cousin of Eugene O'Brien, one of the popular screen men. He was formerly a member of the Baker Stock Company, of Portland, had dramatic experience in New York, and was married several months ago to Miss Lila Barbour, of Spokane, a well known vocalist here, who has appeared on the Pantages Circuit and who sang at the opening of the Liberty, February 25, 1915.

Armistice Signing Leaves Cohn Without Position.

Three months ago Sam W. B. Cohn, then manager of the Liberty Theatre, applied for entrance to the officers' training corps, passed his physical examination, received a summons, November 7, to report at Camp Pike, Ark., at once, resigned as manager of the Liberty, arrived at Camp Pike. November 11, the day the armistice was signed, and this resulted in Mr. Cohn with twenty-five others in training being discharged just one week after the day he left Spokane.

In a telegram to Mrs. Cohn he said that the extent of his military training was a four-mile hike and the filling of a tick with straw preparatory to a three months' course of training. He started for home at once, and was expected here November 21, but in the meantime J. William Houck had been engaged as manager of the theatre. Mr. Cohn's plans are not known, but he has had a wide experience in theatrical ventures as manager, also a wide newspaper experience and had an offer from a film concern just before leaving for Camp Pike.

BUSINESS NORMAL IN NORTHWEST AGAIN

Capacity Houses Reported as Influenza Aftermath—"Shoulder Arms" Smashes Records at Minneapolis Strand

By William E. Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

THE moving picture industry in the Northwest is now back on its old basis, many exhibitors reporting a rush of business as an aftermath of the influenza epidemic.

In Minneapolis, "Shoulder Arms," Charlie Chaplin's latest production, was the big topic on all tongues. The picture began a week's run at the New Strand Theatre Sunday, November 17, playing to capacity audiences at every performance, and, according to Manager Charles Branham, smashing all records for attendance at that theatre during the present season.

Nearly all who have seen "Shoulder Arms" declare it Chaplin's greatest accomplishment, and great success for the picture seems assured in the Northwest.

"Salome" Is Opener at Shubert.

Theda Bara in "Salome" was the offering at the grand opening of the William Fox-Shubert Theatre in Minneapoils, Sunday, November 24.

The Shubert Theatre has been undergoing five weeks of redecorating and refurnishing. It has been improved in many different ways.

D. Leo Dennison, manager of Minneapolis Fox Exchange, and William Raynor have supervised the improvements at the Shubert. Mr. Raynor has been appointed house manager. John Zanft, personal representative of William Fox, was here for the opening.

Pathe Employes Thank Home Office.

As a mark of their appreciation of the Pathe policy of keeping all employes on the pay roll during the entire period of inactivity caused by the influenza ban, employes of the Minneapolis Pathe Exchange sent a telegram to the home office in New York on November 18 expressing their thanks. The telegram, which was addressed to the vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Corporation without the knowledge of the local manager, C. W. Stombaugh, follows: "We wish to extend our thanks for your generous consideration of our welfare during the epidemic of Spanish influenza here, and had it not been for your generous policy of keeping all help employed during these weeks of trial and hardship we would have found it difficult to weather the storm. Accept, gentlemen, our best wishes for your welfare and prosperity."

"The Spoilers" Comes Back to Minneapolis.

"The Spoilers," after an acid test, has come back to Minneapolis for another week's run. It was booked by Ruben & Finkelstein, of Minneapolis, for a showing of seven days at their New Garden Theatre, beginning Sunday, November 24.

Notwithstanding the fact that "The Spoilers" had long previous runs in the Twin Cities large audiences attended the picture, scores of persons seeing it for the second time.

The Friedman Film Corporation purchased two prints of the picture, and is now busy attending to a big demand for bookings.

"Flying Circus" Coming.

Sam Thompson, manager of the Feature Film Company, of St. Paul, announced that he had secured for release in this territory the big single reel feature, "The Flying Circus."

Tuchman Visits Minneapolis.

Albert Tuchman, manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's supply department, New York, was a visitor for a day in Minneapolis last week, conferring with L. H. Coen, manager of the local Universal Exchange. Mr. Tuchman was on the last lap of a tour of exchanges which had already taken him 10,000 miles. During his tour Mr. Tuchman has been studying conditions and demands for advertising items. He has been attempting to ascertain how the home office might better aid exchanges in providing exhibitors with what they need.

Managers Recover from Influenza.

E. S. Holmes, manager of the Minneapolis Vitagraph Exchange, and A. H. Fisher, manager of the Minneapolis Metro office, have recovered from attacks of Spanish influenza. Manager Holmes' condition was grave for a time, but he quickly passed the danger period, and is now back on the job. Manager Fisher had only a slight attack of the malady.

Publicity Conditions Studied.

John LeRoy Johnston, publicity artist for the Minneapolis Universal Exchange, attended a conference recently with Tarkington Baker, new Universal publicity director, at Chicago. Mr. Baker outlined a new publicity policy of the Universal organization, and listened to criticisms of the old system. He informed Mr. Johnston that sixty styles of new Universal star cuts and mats were ready for distribution to exchanges and exhibitors. He also announced that Universal had adopted the plan of making advertising cuts on special attractions so that in the future exhibitors can advertise cuts and mats on every release. Shortly after his return to Minneapolis from the Chicago conference, Mr. Johnston left for Des Moines, Omaha and Sioux Falls to investigate publicity conditions for the home office and to arrange to aid these exchanges directly from Minneapolis.

Willmar Exhibitor Dies.

Alton Crosby, exhibitor of Willmar, Minn., where he has operated a theatre since 1885, died in a Minneapolis hospital after undergoing an operation. He had been showing moving pictures since 1906. W. B Crosby, a son of the late exhibitor, is employed in Minneapolis, and is well known in local film circles.

Paul Mooney, the new district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, has arrived to take up his new duties, but the appointment of a local manager has not been announced.

J. L. Mulhauser, formerly with the George Kleine System, is now with the Fox Film Corporation as salesman.

The Liberty Theatre, at Camp Fremont, has been reopened under the direction of Charles P. Salisbury.

Charles I. Lutz, formerly manager of the Parex Exchange, is now filling a road position with the General Film Company selling Sherry productions, together with the regular General releases.

DUCHESS - DESMARTEAU SUIT DECIDED

Amusement Company Gets Judgment to Recover Rent of Family Theatre, Montreal—Court Also Quashes Lease

By W. M Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

THE prolonged fight between the Duchess Amusement Company on the one side and Edmond Desmarteau and others on the other for possession of the Family Theatre, Montreal, which was started in 1912, reached a decisive stage in the Superior Court at Montreal on November 20, when Justice Tellier gave judgment maintaining the company's action to recover $4,958.33 as rent for the theatre. By the same judgment, the lease held by Desmarteau was quashed, the Duchess company was upheld in its seizure of theatre furnishings and Desmarteau and his business associates were ordered to vacate the premises within forty-eight hours.

The defendants also entered a counterclaim for $37,500, but Justice Tellier held that the cross-claim was proved only to the extent of $877, and judgment was also given for this sum against the Duchess Amusement Company, leaving the sum of $4,081.33 due to the company.

It was a fight of many phases. The theatre was originally rented to the Mark-Brock Enterprises, Ltd., for a period of ten years, from October 1, 1912, at an annual rental of $10,500. Subsequently, Desmarteau succeeded to the rights under the lease, but the plaintiffs took action against the original tenants and obtained a judgment in the Superior Court which annulled the lease.

Desmarteau entered suit to revoke the decision, and he carried his claim from court to court until the decision above described was secured in the Superior Court. It is said that Desmarteau has paid no rent since April 10 last, and the amount of the judgment was for the rent for the period.

The counterclaim made by Desmarteau for $37,500 was for alleged loss of profits during the time that he was unable to use the theatre from August, 1917, on account of the alleged interference of the plaintiff company. Desmarteau presented his books in court as proof of this loss, but, according to the decision of Justice Tellier, these books "were found to be so incomplete and defective that the witness, Scott, an expert, declared that he could make little of them."

Montreal Sees "Where Are My Children?"

"Where Are My Children?", a feature that had been under the censors' ban in Quebec for practically two years, proved to be a sensational drawing card when it was released at the Holman Theatre for a week's run, starting Sunday, November 24. Although the feature was shown eight times each day, there was nearly always a crowd in line in front of the house. Manager Harry Pomeroy did some rather good newspaper advertising for the run. Prices for all performances were 15 cents and 25 cents. No children under sixteen years of ago were admitted.

Pictures Advertising Canada Shown.

Exchange Hall, the meeting place of the Montreal Board of Trade, was converted into a moving picture theatre on Friday, November 22, for the presentation of an address on "Canadian Trade and Industry After the War," by Watson Griffith, of the Commercial Branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa. The use of moving pictures in this connection was practically the first step on the part of the Dominion Government to advertise the home market and internal resources of Canada.

Regent Theatre Being Renovated.

The Regent Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, was not "refinished" in time for the general reopening of Calgary theatres on Wednesday, November 20, because of the extensive alterations in hand. The new structural features include a brand new balcony to accommodate 350 persons, several additional ventilators in the roof, a new gold fibre screen and latest design for a shadow box.

Another Calgary theatre also apparently expected to do exceptional business after the influenza epidemic because extensive alterations were also made is the Bijou Theatre, which was reopened, however, when the ban was lifted on November 20. This house had also been provided with a new heating and ventilating system.

"Commandeers" Services of Abbie Wright.

The services of Abbie Wright, manager of the Princess Theatre, Montreal, Quebec, were "commandeered" by the Canadian Department of Naval Service in November for the purpose of assisting in securing supplies of steel from leading steel corporations of the United States so that various Canadian shipyards may finish up a number of vessels quickly. Mr. Wright expects to be away from Montreal for four or five weeks, and during his absence the affairs of the theatre will be handled by the treasurer, Mr. Lapierre.

Unique "Ad" on Chaplin's Latest.

The management of the Loew Theatre in Hamilton, Ont., put over some rather clever advertising for the presentation of Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" during the week of November 25. One unique advertisement consisted of a single line right across the top of the back page of The Hamilton Herald as follows: "Charlie Chaplin in 'Shoulders Arms' at Loew's next week." It is seldom that a newspaper will permit its space to be used in this manner for advertising purposes when the size of the advertisement is quite small.

Later in the week, the Hamilton newspapers carried "news items" to the effect that Chaplin had fallen 1,000 feet from an aeroplane at Beamsville aviation camp, which is situated close to Hamilton. Upon reading the item it was found pictures of Chaplin were supposed to have fallen from the pocket of an aviator as he was making a flight.

Allen Theatre "a Healthy Spot."

J. F. Price, the new manager of the Allen Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, came out with an attractive advertisement in Calgary newspapers during the "dark days" in that city for the purpose of announcing that the Allen would be reopened as soon as possible and also to educate the people that the theatre would be a healthy spot for them when they could attend once more. The advertisement was written in a personal strain, the "copy" consisting of a salutation to the local medical health officer, Dr. Mahood.

"We're all ready, Doc!", the advertisement started off. "Just the minute Dr. Mahood and his hardworking colleagues say the word, the doors of the Allen will be open wide. Just as a starter there will be a big double attraction, etc."

At this point reference was made to the promised bill, which included Dorothy Dalton in "Green Eyes" and "Fatty" Arbuckle in "The Cook."

Announcement was also made that the theatre had been changed somewhat during the lay-off. The stage had been lowered and the position of the screen had been changed.

The advertisement concluded with the following: "There were no 'flu' bugs in the Allen when it closed—Dr. Mahood said so—and there is none now.

"You are hungry for shows—we are just as hungry to see you."

Under the name of the theatre appears the slogan, "The Healthiest Theatre in Town."

Ontario Picture Director Dead.

The death occurred on November 21, at Toronto, Ont., of Sidney C. Johnston, director of the Moving Picture Bureau of the Ontario Government for the past two years. While in charge of this bureau, which is a part of the Provincial Treasurer's department, the deceased had superintended the taking of pictures for agricultural and colonization purposes and had also taken views of the natural resources of Ontario.

The deceased, who was twenty-eight years of age, was born near Toronto. He was a graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph and was formerly a vegetable specialist in the Department of Agriculture. He leaves a widow and one child. The cause of his death was not announced. He passed away in the Wellesley Hospital, Toronto.

Banquet for Ferdinand Turner.

Ferdinand Turner, the first manager of Loew's Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, was tendered a banquet by the employes of the theatre on the stage of the house, immediately before his departure for New York on November 23 to assume the supervision of several theatres on the Loew circuit. Mr. Turner was presented with a handsomely fitted club bag, a gold pen knife and a cigarette case, the presentations being made by Miss Edith Wylie, Mr. Turner's secretary. A pocketbook was presented to Mrs. Turner. R. F. Northey, of Atlanta, Ga., the incoming manager, was also present, along with Mrs. Northey, both of whom made short speeches also.

Film Facts of Fictious Value
Gleaned from Many Mimeographs

STARTING January 1, 2916, the following changes, ordered by the Board of Picture Dictators, will become effective. Seven years and six months in the hence they will become operative. Thereafter, and starting almost immediately:

Exhibitors will return films to exchanges promptly on time and in better condition than they received them.

Exchanges will ship, ten days ahead of exhibition date, all the aids and advertising supplies they promise on the contract.

Film titles will be displayed in twelve languages, that all in the audience may read them aloud in their native tongue.

Statement will be issued by film magnates in effect that THE industry is old enough to ride the asphalt astride a "kiddie car."

Tradepapers will be supplied with non-duplicated publicity that will aid and abet the exhibition of moving and picture photodramas.

Producers of picture-plays, beside putting up the money, will have something to say as to what their directors will produce and film.

The Allied Council of Engineers will meet in executive session to decide as between the use of the term "Operator" or "Projectionist."

Publicists will sign their names to correspondence with a rubber stamp to let people know that they have come to a state of perpetual occupation.

Attendants in film exchanges will shout and swear at exhibitors who call in person for their shows to let them know how unnecessary they are to THE industry.

Showing for "crickets" on the tradepress assembled in projection rooms will start on time and the picture announced will actually be screened.

P. S.—We should like to come up from where we will be in a couple of hundred years to read the kind of "statements of policy" that magnates are then running in the tradepapers.

Here's a True Story Told by One of Our Best Producers

TO prove that this is not a "publicity yarn" we will omit the name of the producer who sat at his player-piano, with the soft pedal pressed down on a roll of rag-time and spoke as follows:

"We had gone to Staten Island for three hours' work on an expensive location. So carefully had we gone into the cost of production that we figured our production expenses down to the penny. Time was worth just eight dollars a minute," said Mr. Producer.

"There was one interior situation; a dinner scene. Essential to the plot was an old-fashioned red table-cloth. When we were ready to shoot, the director discovered that the necessary red table-cloth was not in the scene.

"The property man (who should have provided the cloth in advance) was sent scurrying around Staten Island to borrow or buy the needful. Hours passed; the light failed. Another trip was necessary, the next day, to get the scenes we needed. I took the cloth from my own breakfast table to supply the proper atmosphere."

As he switched to the forte thing-a-ma-jig to full speed, Mr. Producer shouted:

"There's lots of money put into pictures that never comes out."

P. S.—Is this yarn worth the space it takes?

Giebler Rubbernecks a Lion
Using Reporter's Note Book

THE seeker after news, both live and wild, walked into the Sunshine comedy lot in Hollywood, Cal., where Henry Lehrman was making Fox-Lehrman two-reel laugh-bringers. He spent two hours visiting the ducks, the chickens, the trained flies, the musical skunks, the acting crabs, and the other insects and animals used in the Fox-Lehrman comedies. Tired out, he walked into one of the offices and was greeted by a lion. He had closed the door behind him and was therefore in no position to retreat.

Giebler smiled. He doesn't know why he smiled. Yet he doesn't believe it was from any feeling of joy. He sat on the arm of a chair and, being well bred, he continually faced the lion. He took out his note book. The lion put his two paws on the vacant arm of the chair.

"What do you think of these comedies, Mr. Lion?" began the interviewer.

"Bar-r-r-ooph!" roared the shaggy one. "They give me a pain. They get under my epidermis. I don't see where the fun comes in. Why, when I'm on you couldn't make one of those comedians or directors laugh all day.

"One day I was doing some fine stuff, running around wild like, knocking over boxes, jumping over the comedian. And what do you think happened? The director and the camera man ran away. I supposed Lehrman called them.

"That made me sore. And when I stopped acting, the whole gang began to sneak back onto the set. If I had had a camera, believe me, I could have taken some fine comedy stuff of their return.

"I'm getting tired of sitting on a box roaring. I want to do action stuff. I want to hit it up with the comedian. Why should that fellow hog it all. He takes a pretty girl and hugs her. When I go near the girls they jab a fork into me.

"And that colored fellow. Why, he's no actor. He gets scared of me and shows it on the screen, and in that way gets by. Paid for looking naturally scared. I'm going to bite that fellow some day just to prove to him that lions are as bad as he thinks they are.

"You know I'm not complaining, but I think I ought to be starred. Let them turn me loose. I'll give 'em comedy—yes, and some tragedy too."

Giving Them the Gate.

THE gate that bars the entrance of the public to the World studio at Fort Lee is called "The Petain Gate." It was christened so because the famous French General was the author of the expression, "They shall not pass," which will go down in history with the famous "Don't give up the ship" uttered by our own Lawrence.

However, some soulless creature lifted the gate from its hinges and deposited it before the office of Bob MacIntyre, in the studio. MacIntyre, be it known, is the casting director of World pictures.

The Oath.

Through the courtesy of The Hardware Age, we reproduce from its columns this stirring poem by a grandson of the author of "Onward Christian Soldier." It appeared originally in that magazine under date of August 8:

I will not drink from a German cup,
Or eat from a German plate.
I will not deal with a German man
All foul with German hate.

I'll use no drug with a German name,
That's grown on German land.
I'll eat no food and drink no beer
If made by a German hand.

I will not use a German tool,
Razor, or knife, or saw.
I will not trade with a German shop
That lives by the German law.

I will not sail on a German ship,
Where German songs are sung.
I will not breathe where God's clean air
Is soiled by a German tongue.

I'll not forget those awful deeds,
To girls and little boys.
No more I'll hang on Christmas trees
Those blood-stained German toys.

I will not take a German's word,
He'll break it if he can.
There is no love in a German heart,
Or faith in a German man.

This is my oath, when war is done,
I'll swear to keep it true.
And since I know you feel the same,
I'll pass it on to you.

ARTHUR JAMES TALKS SALESMANSHIP

Metro Publicity Man Takes Ground That Proper Press Work Is Chief Selling Agent for Film

By Epes W. Sargent

ARTHUR JAMES, director of publicity for Metro Pictures Corporation, takes the ground that the pubilicity director is the chief salesman for the products of his company. Generally the press department and the sales force are more or less at odds, but there is much in what he has to offer.

"In the film business," he began, "the conditions are peculiar. You must not only sell film to the exhibitor, but you must sell it for him, if you would continue the volume of your sales, and I believe that publicity work, properly done, is the chief selling agent in any film campaign that is on a permanent basis.

"We do not, however, go to the public direct, through the medium of national advertising. I do not believe that the results gained by this method bring the fullest returns to the exhibitor. I do not believe, for that matter that it is possible successfully to advertise a brand of film, and for very simple reasons. If you advertise a brand of sugar or a certain make of automobile direct to the general public, you have just one sort of sugar or one certain type of automobile to sell to the dealer through reaching the public. One container of sugar is precisely like the sugar in all the similar containers. One automobile is a duplicate of all other cars of the same sort.

"It is different with film. You are not selling one film, but a brand of film. You cannot be specific. You might persuade a man that Metro makes the best films and he may seek a Metro subject at his local house and the particular subject he sees may not appeal to him, personally. It may be an excellent film, one winning the praise of the public generally. It may be the only film of the output that will not appeal to this particular man, but if he does not like that particular film—and a boorish usher, or a patron who reads the titles aloud may be the real cause of his dislike—he does not like the brand.

"That same man might be attracted by Metro pictures he sees upon the screen and form in his own mind the opinion that Metro pictures are worth while seeing. But he is not then judging Metro pictures, as such, but the ability of the theatre to entertain him.

"This is one angle of the situation. Another difficulty is the inability of the advertiser to offer more than a broad general appeal. I cannot, for example, take space in the national weeklies to advertise Nazimove in 'Eye for Eye' this week and expect the man who has the subject thirty days from now to appreciate my efforts. I am virtually advertising that the exhibitor is out of date, in the estimation of his patrons. They say to themselves that it is an old play, and pass it over.

"I think I can do the most good by using the money and effort I might give to national advertising to make Metro's aids to the exhibitor better and more effective. We aim to help the exhibitor sell Metro releases. We use every effort along these lines, knowing that the film which brings money into the box office is going to be a better selling force for future films than page spaces of glittering generalities in widely read publications. I feel that I am doing more for my own employers and more for the exhibitor—yes, and I'll add for the patron—if I help the exhibitor to make good with the story he has at the moment.

"To this end we work, not alone to devise the most striking advertisements and posters, but to induce the exhibitor to make the fullest use of the material at his command. We do not stop with making ready to help. We end only with the run of the film in that house.

"We do not spend hundreds of dollars on elaborate plan books, dressed out with colored covers, embossing and gilt. The plan sheet is a four-page broadside 16 by 22 inches. Take this one for Nazimova, for instance. The front page, you will notice, carries a type advertisement for the play. Ostensibly this is an advertisement to the manager, but as a matter of fact is can be used as the strip for a lobby frame, giving the star and title in 3½-inch letters. However, we do not expect this to be used since it backs on a full page of press work.

"We start off with a full suggestion for the advertising points. An exhibitor who reads this has the foundation on which he can build his own advertising if he so desires. We follow with the billing matter, cast and full synopsis. These synopses are shorter than they were because we found that the original form was too long for average use. There are, in addition, five general press stories, an opening story, including a brief synopsis, a criticism which is a criticism and not merely puffery which even a self-respecting country editor would not print; ten teasers, eighteen catchphrases, a program mention and a brief and a longer letter for those who like mail campaigns.

"But, mind you, this is all newspaper stuff. We know that the stuff can be printed because it is so generally used. We might use ten times as many superlatives, and if the stuff did get in it would be all right, but we aim to turn out press material that is more along the lines of what most editors will use. The press sheet goes to hundreds of dramatic and motion picture editors. The stories either have a news or a personality value. They are not glowing puffs for Metro and its stars. It is written for the manager to hand to his newspapers. It might please the stars more to play them up more strongly. It might be supposed to make more of a hit with the man higher up if it told how great Metro was, but we work along the lines that if we help the manager to sell the play to his public, the public will come to know Metro without this puffery. It has worked out that way. There is not a line printed that cannot be run by the city as well as the country newspaper.

"The Nazimova paper is a little more ample than the average, since this is a special, but it differs from the rest only in that there is a greater choice of subjects. We offer a twenty-four sheet, two sixes, three threes and three one-sheets. The twenty-four sheet is a portrait poster, with a striking picture of the star. The rest are all scene poses, and they are not merely poses. They are dramatic. They tell something of the story.

"The only exception to this rule is in the case of such pictures as 'Wilson or the Kaiser' in which the subject lends itself better to cartoon treatment. We try to get as far as possible from the 'clinch' style of pose, even if these do work up nicely in the three and six sheets. We aim to suggest the dramatic moments of the play.

"And we do not merely get out the paper. We try to persuade the managers to use it, not because we want to sell the paper, but because we want to sell other films to the same men and we know if we sell one subject to his public we can sell others to him. It has been something of a fight, but we are making great progress. We sold 75,000 one sheets of one subject alone and had to run off an additional 24,000. This was the paper for 'To Hell with the Kaiser,' showing a brawny American fist landing on the point of the Kaiser's jaw. It was so fully in accord with the public mood at the moment that it aided materially in selling the picture to the public, and its wide use brought in additional business.

"That is one of the points we urge. Pictorial paper does sell film just as it sells the circus and the stage offerings. We have passed the day when a single hired three-sheet in the lobby was conisdered poster advertising. That may help with the regular patrons, but the use of paper in locations about towns or around neighborhood theatres sells more seats than many managers realize even now. Pictorial paper catches the eye better than anything else, and it can be widely spread at a cost small when compared with the returns.

"In addition to posters we have six to eight cuts in one and two column widths suitable for newspaper work. These are both scene and portrait cuts.

"We also offer different designs in newspaper advertisements. Here we do not use halftones. All of our illustrative work is in line and mass. We find that advertisements print better if there is no half tone to clog up, and the designs are drawn so that the masses will not mud. The cheapest paper will take good impressions, and we get some pretty poor stock to be worked on in these days of paper famine. The cuts have all the suggestion of half tone, but they look better, and this, I believe, is a real aid. A poorly printed cut will suggest a poorly produced play in spite of the absurdity of supposing that the grade of country press work has any connection with the production efforts of a large company. The mental suggestion is there, and because it does exist, we exert ourselves to produce cuts that are bound to come up well even in the hands of inexperienced pressmen. It is a small point, but it is all a part of the selling campaign.

"Of course we offer the usual assortment of lobby displays, heralds and slides, but we believe that newspaper and pictorial advertising are the backbone of the theatre's selling system.

"And we don't stop with getting the stuff ready for distribution. Metro controls its exchanges and each exchange automatically receives its share of all accessories and is urged to dispose of the material to the theatres. Exchange managers are made to appreciate the fact that while there may be no direct monetary return in providing cuts to exhibitors, there is none the less a return from helping the managers to put their shows over. This end is so well taken care of by the exchange that there is a little need for a so-called service bureau at the home office. Each exchange renders this service as a part of its rental scheme. But if any request does come in to headquarters the material is shipped out at once, if the house is nearby, or a wire is sent to the exchange if they can reach the manager more quickly. We aim to give the service when the film is rented and without waiting for a special complaint.

"To my mind the publicity department should be the chief selling force. A salesman goes into a manager's office. He does not tell him what he can have in the way of aids. He shows him. And the manager knows that he will get what is promised. We see to that, for while the press department does not have any tangible connection with the selling end, we know that film cannot be sold to the managers unless we can show them that they will be given the fullest aid in retailing the amusement to the purchasing public.

"I think that if all press departments were run along these lines all salesmen would have an easier time. We do not waste effort here on general publicity. It is all directed to specific effort. A manager might be more impressed if he read a glowing press story for a film, but if he cannot induce his local paper to print these items bristling with 'superb,' 'greatest ever,' 'most massive and costly,' and the like, what good does it do him? Ten lines that any newspaper will print and any reader will run through are worth hundreds of lines that no one but the manager ever sees. We plan every line of our text, every poster and cut to go right through to the eventual purchaser of the film—the public, and I believe that we reach the public more surely through concentration of effort on the film being shown in his town at the moment than we could ever do with pages of general appeal. We have found that it works in our own case, and even in our trade paper advertising we use inserts more often than straight pages for the same reason, for many of the inserts work up well in lobby frames or even as the basis for special newspaper displays."

Universal in the Market for Big Plays and Stories

THE Universal has issued an announcement that it is in the market for big plays, old or new, from the spoken stage, or big novels or stories, old or new. The material is sought for adaptation to forthcoming super productions by this company.

In furtherance of the search a special request was issued to the heads of all departments personally to scour their memory and make efforts to discover film subjects in past or current literature.

"The greater and more famous the story is," said Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, "the better we will like it. Price will not be an obstacle. We are ready to pay a big figure for the material that meets our requirements."

It was stated that the Universal has adopted the policy of producing several big pictures whose names are from the store of literary treasure. The name of the story or play, of that of its author will be employed as the principal asset of the film in each case.

"The film industry has reached the stage now where its most responsible leaders are educated to the full value of the story as the chief ingredient of a production's success," said Mr. Laemmle. "Everyone is agreed that the public demands rich romance, strong, vital, human documents for its screen diversion. The Universal, therefore, intends to meet this fact in a definite, consistent way. We intend to review the whole market of classic literature and procure stories that have been tested and approved as gems. Then we intend to make pictures faithfully and vigorously portraying these gems."

It is understood forthcoming productions will be released through Jewel Productions, and in some cases as Special Attractions. Jewel already has prepared plans to govern the advertising and distribution of the subjects.

Meantime, at Universay City, five dramatic companies and the Lyons-Moran comedy troupe have resumed work.

Priscilla Dean, whose recent picture, "The Wildcat of Paris," is set for early release, was the first to begin under Tod Browning a new play, the temporary title of which is "The Gutter Rose." The scenario was written by Harvey Gates from an original story by Evelyn Campbell.

Carmel Myers has started work with Paul Powell as director in "The Wild Girl." The scenario was written by Waldemar Young from an original story by Frances Nimmo Greene.

Mary MacLaren is about to begin under Ida May Park's direction "Who's Widow?", a photoplay constructed by Miss Park from Eleanor Chipp's original story.

Monroe Salisbury's next starring vehicle will be "Pirate Gold." The story was written by Herbert Hall Winslow from a Hungarian drama by Emil Nyitray.

Mr. Young prepared the scenario for the last-named production and also worked on the continuity of "Cherries Are Ripe," a French farce by Maximilian Foster and Paul West. This is to be used to star Edith Roberts.

"You've Got It" is the comedy in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have returned to work. Mildred Moore has the leading feminine role.

Elaborate preparations are being made at Universal City for the filming of a new serial starring Marie Walcamp, the daredevil heroine. Douglas Grant's novel, "The Fifth Ace," was purchased by the Universal and is being prepared for serial presentation on the screen by Hope Loring. J. P. McGowan, who directed Eddie Polo in "The Lure of the Circus," has been selected to handle the megaphone. Pat O'Malley, who has been appearing in support of Bluebird dramatic stars recently, will have the masculine lead. Others in the cast include Alfred Allen, Tom Lingham, Andrew Waldron and Leon Kent.

Mildred Harris Close-Up Makes a Hit in Animated

FROM Minneapolis comes the report of a stunt by which an exhibitor was able to present a picture or Mildred Harris (Mrs. Charlie Chaplin) without booking any such subject. Manager Branham, of the Strand Theatre, was the author of the device. Jewel now is applying it broadcast.

The Jewel exchange manager in Minneapolis clipped out a small closeup of Mrs. Chaplin from her recent film, "The Price of a Good Time," and inserted it in the current Animated Weekly. Mr. Branham thereupon inserted an announcement in large black type in his quarter-page advertisement, proclaiming that Mrs. Charlie Chaplin was to be seen on his screen. A big feature picture from another company was the chief attraction, but the name of Mrs. Chaplin was as prominently displayed as the title of the feature, and tremendous interest was added to the advertisement.

So successful was the expedient that the Jewel exchange immediately obtained other close-up clippings of the player, and arranged to provide them for all the exhibitors who desired them in that territory. The idea traveled to other exchanges, and bids fair to become adopted throughout the country for theatres which do not happen just now to have an immediate booking of a Mildred Harris picture.

Will Release Outdoor Pictures.

Forthcoming short-reel subjects to be released by the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, under which name the reorganized Mutual Film Corporation will hereafter be known, include the Rothacker outdoor pictures.

"Bad Men and Good Scenery," the second in the series, is released November 24. It is a visit to the famous "Jackson Hole," notorious in the annals of the bad men of the West, who made it their rendezvous after a daring raid or hold-up.

"Peaks, Parks and Pines," released December 1, are scenes in the vicinity of Mount Ranier, Washington, jealously called Mount Tacoma by the inhabitants of Tacoma.

Producers' and Distributors' News

Red Cross Scores Beat With Paris Victory Film

HOW efficient and important a film organization exists in the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures is demonstrated by another news beat it has scored in securing and distributing the first news reel of the big victory celebration in Paris. So timely and exclusive was this film that it was taken by all the Keith Theatres in New York as an added special for their Thanksgiving Day programs, where it made a sensation before the big holiday audiences. On the same day dozens of prints of the Paris Victory Celebration were rushed to all parts of the country to be distributed as an American Red Cross release through the General Film Company exchanges.

Coming on the heels of a similar beat by the Red Cross when it went into the Rivoli Theatre with the first American-French Fourth of July celebration in Paris the present achievement demonstrates particular ability by the Bureau of Pictures to present live world events to the public of the United States through the medium of the screen.

The undeveloped negative of the Paris Victory Celebration was delivered at the New York office of the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures near midnight, Tuesday, November 26. By 2 o'clock the next morning the negative had been projected in negative form, and titles had been sketched out for it. By noon of the 27th the picture had been seen by John J. Murdock of the United Booking Offices and had been adopted as a special Thanksgiving Day release in all the New York Keith vaudeville houses. Not less than sixty prints of the picture had been started to General Film exchanges all over the United States by Thursday. The cameramen and agents of the Red Cross abroad are being kept in constant touch with all war area events and their work is beginning to make itself felt in the way of fine material coming back to this country.

Events from the London Victory celebration are also incorporated in the Paris film, but the scenes from the French capital predominate.

"The Girl of My Dreams" To Be Issued December 15

UNUSUAL significance is attached to the announcement that the Billie Rhodes De Luxe feature, "The Girl of My Dreams," will be released on December 15 by the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

A long-term contract was signed a few days ago between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, by which Robertson-Cole will furnish all pictures for the Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges. The first dramatic production to be distributed as a result of the aforementioned transaction will be "The Girl of My Dreams."

Not only is the Billie Rhodes picture the inaugural dramatic release of the new arrangement, but added interest is given through the fact that the photoplay marks the first appearance of Miss Rhodes as a feature star. The picture scored a success at a pre-view showing by T. L. Tally in Los Angeles a few weeks ago.

The Billie Rhodes pictures are being made by the National Film Corporation of America, the releasing rights for the entire world being under the control of the Robertson-Cole Company. Miss Rhodes has attained stardom after a career of nearly five years in one and two-reel subjects. Most of her success has been scored in the field of comedy, her charm, beauty and skill as a comedienne standing out.

"The Racing Strain" Looks Big.

"Another 'Polly of the Circus!'" That was the ejeculation of a New York exhibitor following a private screening of Mae Marsh's Goldwyn picture, "The Racing Strain." And Goldwyn is firm in the belief that those who liked Margaret Mayo's "classic of the big tops" will find the new Goldwyn Mae Marsh production no less appealing and entertaining.

"The Racing Strain," a romance of Kentucky and Saratoga, was written expressly to suit the peculiar talents of the star by Tex Charwate. A horse race exceeding in picturesqueness and thrills the stirring contest in "Polly of the Circus," is one of the glowing features in "The Racing Strain." The event was staged at Saratoga.

Maxwell Produces "The Married Virgin."

Joe Maxwell, known in theatrical circles as a prolific and successful author of vaudeville sketches, has turned photoplay producer and is launching his first picture under the brand of Maxwell Productions. He has elaborately staged a story by Hayden Talbot, which may be described as a society thriller, and which contains a unique domestic plot. The title, "The Married Virgin," applies to a complication which by an odd twist develops a happy ending for the drama. Mr. Maxwell made the picture in Los Angeles and believes he has a fine production. The principal characters are taken by Kathleen Kirkham, Vera Sisson, Rodolph Di Valentina, Edward Jobson and Frank Newkirk. "The Married Virgin," in seven reels, will be released through General Film Company.

Blackton Film Goes to First National.

Speculation as to the exploitation of J. Stuart Blackton's "Safe for Democracy" is set at rest by Commodore Blackton's announcement that he has entered into an agreement with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., whereby that organization will distribute the production.

While no date has been set for the First National's release of "Safe for Democracy," the negative has been turned over, and it is understood prints will be made up immediately and present this timely production throughout the country as soon as possible.

Semon Working on Thrilling Comedy.

Larry Semon, Vitagraph's comedy star, has started work on a new two-reel Big V special comedy written by himself, which he says will introduce to picture play audiences more thrills and story plot than has ever been attempted in screen farce comedy. The working title of the subject is "Traps and Tangles."

World Pictures Plans to Issue Special Releases

THE coming year will mark a big impetus to World picture activities. Plans under way will put this company in a foremost position among producing and distributing companies. Besides the regular program releases there will be from time to time a special release that will be all that the term "special" implies. So seldom has the World announced a special release that exhibitors are quick to appreciate the value of such a release as a box office magnet.

"America's Answer," which the World is distributing for the Division of Films, attained success as a moneymaker for managers of moving picture theatres, and was given to the exhibitors at a rental price that left a wide margin of profit. This was followed by the success, "Under Four Flags," and has created a most friendly feeling toward the World Corporation.

McClure Pictures, after a careful consideration of the claims of the different distributing companies, settled upon World Pictures as the best to handle "What Shall We Do With Him?"

This picture is not a war photoplay, nor does it deal with war conditions. Still further, it was not the outgrowth of hate or prejudice. Neither will it depend for popularity on arousing patriotic fervor. It makes its appeal on shaping public thought to the burning question of the hour—what should be done to the arch-criminal of the ages who must appear before the bar of justice created by public opinion and then and there answer for the ruin he has wrought.

"What Shall We Do With Him?" offers no advice or suggestion as to what form of treatment shall be accorded the man who plunged this world in what threatened for four years to be anarchy of the worst possible kind. It is in five reels and has been directed with a cast adequate to the greatness of the subject.

The picture will be released as a special on a date to be announced within a few days.

Interest in Robertson-Cole Deal.

A topic of conversation in motion picture quarters during the past week has been the arrangement between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, by which Robertson-Cole furnish all pictures for the Exhibitors' Mutual twenty-nine exchanges in the United States and Canada.

The Robertson-Cole Company stands in the position of banker or agent for a number of producers. The arrangement means that the pictures handled by Robertson-Cole, having passed through a business system covering every detail, will go to the Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges fully approved productions.

Stars releasing through Robertson-Cole will make no more than eight productions a year. This means that exhibitors will get the full value of these stars, that there will be no mad rush to provide vehicles, no frenzied pace of hurried filming.

Doris Kenyon's Company Leave for North Carolina

DORIS KENYON and a company of twenty-five players have left for Hendersonville, N. C., where the exteriors of "Twilight" will be made. The picture will be directed by J. Searle Dawley, with Ned Van Buren as chief cameraman and Thomas A. Persons, studio manager for De Luxe Pictures, Inc., in general charge of the production under Theodore C. Dietrich, president of the company.

Frank Mills, who did such splendid work as leading man in Miss Kenyon's last picture, "Wild Honey," which is now ready for release, will again be Miss Kenyon's leading man in "Twilight." Other principals in the cast will include Harry Lee, George A. Lessey, William Hartman, Sally Crute and Edith Warren. The company will remain in North Carolina about two weeks, after which the interiors will be made at the Biograph studio.

Director Dawley, Mr. Persons and Joseph I. Clement, technical director, preceded the company by two days and made arrangements for the construction of a complete lumber camp and sawmill at Hickory Nut Gap. The lumber camp and sawmill, together with a score of ox teams and several hundred native North Carolina mountaineers, will be used.

The story of "Twilight" was written by Vingie E. Roe and published in the October issue of Metropolitan. The screen adaptation was made by Louis Joseph Vance.

"Too Fat to Fight" a Hit with Y. M. C. A. Officials

REX BEACH'S drama of human emotions, "Too Fat to Fight," has been officially indorsed and given the highest possible recommendation by the Young Men's Christian Association. A committee of Y. M. C. A. officials attended a private showing of the picture and placed the stamp of the organization's approval on this new and virile Rex Beach story, which depicts the wonderful work of the Y. M. C. A., Y. M. H. A., Y. W. C. A. and Salvation Army in the interests of humanity.

Following the projection of the picture the officials and spectators were unanimous in their approval and recommendation of "Too Fat to Fight." The official "Y" verdict is expressed by Chairman William Sloane in a letter addressed to Mr. Beach. The tribute paid by the Y. M. C. A. insures the unparalleled success of this new Goldwyn release.

"I consider 'Too Fat to Fight' one of the most remarkable pictures I have ever seen," said Mr. Sloane, "It holds the interest from start to finish and cannot help impress every person who will see it."

Mr. Crowell, publicity director of the National Council, gave the following verdict: "'Too Fat to Fight' is undoubtedly the best picture depicting the work of the Y. M. C. A. It is first-class in every respect. The humanness of the story should insure its complete success everywhere."

The wealth of comedy which abounds throughout the six reels drew enthusiastic applause from the audience. The dramatic episodes also were warmly received.

The Y. M. C. A. board not only indorsed and praised the picture from a technical angle, but, in addition, the strength of the story and the rapidity of the action of the play were subjects for commendation.

Show Submarines in Metro Film.

Some thrilling submarine scenes are shown in "The Man Who Stayed at Home," a Screen Classics, Inc., picture version of the successful drama of the same name. Both interior and exterior views of a submarine are photographed in connection with the action. Depth bombs have their part to play in the story, and following their appearance the telltale traces of oil and wreckage are seen on the surface of the water.

In the making of these scenes, Director Herbert Blache sustained a painful injury to his hand. He was holding the "depth bomb," explaining the action of the scene to the players preparatory to releasing the explosive. Fortunately the bomb was one manufactured primarily for picture purposes, as the Government would not permit the use of a real death-dealing depth bomb in the production, and it had been filled with a powder that was comparatively harmless.

Chicago Showing for Perret Film.

"Lafayette, We Come," the big victory spectacle produced by the Affiliated and released through the Exhibitors-Mutual Distributing Corporation, was shown at the Ziegfeld, one of the prominent Michigan avenue houses in Chicago, the week of November 23-29. The subject is a dramatization of the speech of General Pershing at the tomb of Lafayette. The production was made under the direction of Leonce Perret, and features E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli.

Stanton to Direct Farnum.

Richard Stanton has been selected by William Fox to direct William Farnum in his next production. Mr. Stanton directed "The Spy," "Rough and Ready," "The Land of the Free" and "Why I Would Not Marry."

Johnson Cannibal Film Makes Hit in Toronto

MARTIN JOHNSON'S "Cannibals of the South Seas" had its Canadian premiere at Massey Hall, Toronto, November 23, scored a sensation.

The hall, which seats 2,950, was jammed for the opening of the thrilling adventure series. The premiere, arranged by the Robertson-Cole Company, which has the world rights, was a success in every way. The pictures were presented in practically the same manner that they were offered in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor in New York recently, a symphony orchestra in charge of George W. Beynon handling the special musical score.

The Toronto premiere brought out some unusual features of the "Cannibals of the South Seas." The audience went wild at the appearance of a British flag nailed to the masthead of a native boat in the lonely South Seas, and, later, when Johnson and his wife are taken prisoners by cannibals, only to be released after a hairbreadth escape at the timely appearance of a British warship, the whole auditorium shook with cheers and cries. The demonstration was remarkable in every way. The picture was shown all the week.

Betzwood Completes Four Bennison Films.

The four hundred acre plant of the Betzwood Film Company on the Schuykill, a few miles above Norristown, Pa., has been converted into a section of the wildest and wooliest of western localities. This intensive transformation of east into west cost the company $35,000 as a preliminary step in its plans for the series of six star feature pictures introducing the personality of Louis Bennison to followers of the screen. Four features have been completed, with work on the fifth now in progress.

These productions by the Betzwood Film Company are to be distributed through Goldwyn. Philadelphia is to have the distinction of the first Bennison release, "Oh, Johnny," which is to have its advance presentation at the Victoria in the week of December 23.

French Marine Seen in "Eye for Eye."

The occupation of a North African port by French marines, who proceed to quell a disturbance by hostile Arabian tribes, is depicted in "Eye for Eye," the seven-act production starring Mme. Nazimova.

In the making of these scenes actual marines from a French battleship were used. In the march of the landing party of 250 men and their subsequent scenes of hand-to-hand encounters with the Arabs, these French sailors acted as though they had been appearing before the camera all their lives. Director Albert Capellani insisted that it was a natural result of the excellence of the navy training. These scenes add to the beauty and value of the entire production.

"Eye for Eye" is a splendid picturization of the three-act drama, "L'Occident," by the Belgian dramatist, Henry Kistemaeckers. Nazimova has the role of Hassouna, "the flower of the desert," who typifies the desert law of "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth."

Fox Makes Directing Changes.

Several changes have been announced by William Fox in the assignments of his directors who are still in the East.

Richard Stanton will direct William Farnum in his next De Luxe production, which will be filmed in the East.

Charles J. Brabin will direct Evelyn Nesbit in her next picture. At present Miss Nesbit is being directed by Kenean Buel in "Woman, Woman!"

Edmund Lawrence, who has been ill, but now is fully recovered, again will direct Virginia Pearson.

Los Angeles Opening for Garson-Neilan Pictures

AT LAST the Garson-Neilan production, "The Unpardonable Sin," in which Blanche Sweet is the star, will be shown to the public for the first time. It has been known for some time that Mr. Garson's representatives in the East had been quietly looking around for a first-class theatre in New York to house this picture, as it was the original intention to give it a Broadway run previous to its being released elsewhere. In the meantime the Clune interests, nosing another big feature that would possibly duplicate the successful runs of some of those that their big theatre has housed in the past, made overtures to Mr. Garson, which finally decided him to launch the picture in Los Angeles.

The engagement, which is a significant one, not only for the fact that it is said to be about the best effort of Marshall Neilan, also serves to bring back to the screen Blanche Sweet, after a year and a half's absence.

"The Unpardonable Sin" has been nearly three months in the making, and while no serious delays occurred, at one time it looked as though production would be held up on account of the epidemic that prevailed in violent form in Los Angeles.

By hard work and the utilizing of many underground channels, Mr. Garson got the necessary permits from the authorities to take the big scenes, so in the midst of police, physicians, gasmasks and atomizers they were taken.

Much interest is attached to "The Unpardonable Sin," from the fact that there was quite a controversy over the book between the publishers and the New York Library, it first being rumored that the story was too strong or too anti-German. Anyway the controversy became of enough importance for the New York Times to come out in a strong editorial supporting the book.

The story originally ran as a serial in a magazine, and to the astonishment of the editors of the publication it almost completely sold off the newstands on the days of its appearance. Later, the story was published in book form. The story is also to be syndicated among the most important daily newspapers.

The picture is eight reels in length and contains many stirring scenes and situations. Immediately after the launching of the picture in Los Angeles, Mr. Garson will come East to arrange for a Broadway run.

Night Court Scenes in Wehlen Picture.

A graphic scene in a night court is one of the interesting incidents in "Sylvia on a Spree," the Metro screen romance to be released soon, with Emmy Wehlen as the star. Not only does Sylvia appear in the night court, but she has to ride there in a patrol wagon. This adventure is the outcome of the determination of a girl who has been closely sheltered to see a little "real life" before she settles down into humdrum domesticity. With the reluctant aid of her fiance, Sylvia has an evening in Bohemia—but she does not like it a bit. To make matters worse, the place is raided, and "the just and the unjust" are dragged away together to court. The judge is an old friend of the family. Fortunately, he is gifted with a sense of humor, and gives the adventurous youngster a good scare before he sends her home to her mother.

The romance was scenarioized by June Mathis from the original story by E. Forst, and directed by Harry L. Franklin. W. I. Percival, Peggy Parr, Eugene Acker, Isabel O'Madigan and Frank Currier are included in Miss Wehlen's supporting cast.

Madge Kennedy Is Seen as Dancer.

In Madge Kennedy's recent Goldwyn successes the star proved her ability as a diver, swimmer and all-around athlete. Stage dancing is shown to be one of her accomplishments in "A Perfect Lady," from Rose Stahl's stage play by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. Here she has the role of Lucille Le Jambon, featured performer of the Merry Models Burlesquers. The comedienne demonstrates in several scenes that there is much of the art terpsichorean with which she is familiar.

The star is first seen in a solo dance, and the applause that followed from the 400 extras, engaged as an audience, was genuine. Though her dancing in no way borders on the vulgar, the morals committee of Sycamore orders the constable to stop the proceedings. The audience, eager to see more of the star's exhibition, files out dejectedly.

In "Lady's Name" Constance Talmadge Plays Writer

CONSTANCE TALMADGE'S next Select picture will be "A Lady's Name." This is taken from the stage play of the same name by Cyril Harcourt, that accomplished weaver of light comedy situations who has given the public "A Pair of Silk Stockings," another stage play in which Constance starred in the screen version; "A Pair of Petticoats," "A Place in the Sun," and many others.

In "A Lady's Name" Miss Talmadge will play a young and fascinating woman novelist who is looking for local color. She isn't the short-haired, bespectacled type of writer, but a buoyant, whimsical young woman whose search for literary material leads her to advertise for a husband. The young woman played by Constance is Mabel Vere.

Applicants come thick and fast, and, according to reports, the comedy angle develops at a rapid rate, but at last one of the suitors is accepted for further examination. Finally, after she has gleaned all of the information necessary for her book, she discovers that she is really in love with the supposed candidate for her hand and the man who has been her fiance ungraciously withdraws.

Miss Talmadge is directed by Walter Edward for this attraction, while Harrison Ford, who has done such successful work in several of her recent pictures, is her leading man. The scenario was written by Julia Crawford Ivers.

Getting Real Chinese Atmosphere.

William Duncan and members of his company, including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, have recently been "on location" in San Francisco's Chinatown, making scenes for the next Vitagraph serial, "The Man of Might." As is usual, Duncan insisted on having the real thing in his picture. Up to date he has used Mexicans, Yaqui Indians, Japanese, Chinese, and a few other types in his serial.

"Just Rambling Along."

Stan Laurel, the English comedian, who was signed for a series of one-reel stories by the Rolin Company during his recent vacation, has, in "Rambling Along," probably the best of the lot, it is said. With a proper appreciation he has characterized it as "Hoover hilarity," which, though it has to do with food, is nevertheless entirely unstinted. Pathe releases this comedy the week of December 8.

Doris Kenyon Comes Out for Wholesome Productions

DORIS KENYON is one of the screen actresses who have no desire to shine in vampire parts. In "Wild Honey," which was released December 9, she is obliged to portray a western concert hall girl who was the vampire of her day, but the parisitical portion of the portrayal is not to Miss Kenyon's liking, except as it may be of benefit in truly reflecting the sinfulness of such a life.

"I am for clean pictures, all the time," said Miss Kenyon recently at the De Luxe studios in Mt. Vernon, where her pictures are made. "Surely there is no end of beautiful stories to put on the screen. Therefore why defile such a perfect medium as the motion picture with unclean or unwholesome material? Fortunately, I happen to be one of the limited number of actresses who have a deciding voice in the selection of their stories, and I intend always to pick out the good from the bad. Never will I play a vampire for the mere joy of 'vamping.'

"It is true that in 'Wild Honey' I play the part of a wtesrn dance hall couquette, but behind it all there is a noble purpose. With all its roughness and wild action, it is a sweet story, written by a most charming woman, Vingie E. Roe, and it appeared not long ago in a woman's magazine. My real reason for deciding to play 'Wild Honey' was, of course, because of the opportunity it gave me to ride and shoot and do other stunts. You see, I am fearfully fond of athletics and outdoor sports. In society plays there is not much chance to be athletic, so every once in a while I find that I simply must do a western as a relief from the inanity of society plays.

"After getting into the part of 'Wild Honey,' I began to take an interest in the character of a concert hall charmer. I was brought face to face with the real wretchedness of the life of such a woman. Such parts must be played sometime by every actress, I suppose. But when I play them to bring out all the good I can, and I would never have played this part had Wild Honey at last not seen the light through love and suffered herself to be led back to righteousness through becoming the wife of a decent, upright man."

Post Travel Shows Odd Spot.

That "Celebes, Malay Archipelago," is one of the oddest spots in the world, so far as the people and the customs go, is entertainingly shown in No. 22 of the Post Travel Series, released the week of December 8 by Pathe. Macassar, on the southern coast, is one of the greatest ports and has a population of 27,000, all of whom, with the exception of 5,000 Chinese and 1,000 Europeans, are native and resemble the Japanese in face and figure, but who are much less polite and agreeable.

"The Racing Strain" Has Strong Support for Star

MAE MARSH is accorded strong support in her newest Goldwyn picture, "The Racing Strain," by Tex Charwate. For her leading man Miss Marsh has Clarence Oliver, whose work opposite Madge Kennedy in her patriotic Goldwyn picture, "The Service Star," brought him marked praise. Oliver also gave a noteworthy performance in the successful Rex Beach production, "Laughing Bill Hyde." Before his advent in pictures Oliver was a favorite on the musical comedy and vaudeville stage.

Prominent on the stage and screen, but new to Goldwyn pictures, is Clifford Bruce, who plays the part of the heavy. On the speaking stage Bruce was widely known as leading man with Charles Frohman's all-star company. He entered the cinema field four years ago and was successful from the start.

W. T. Carleton, singer and actor of "Floradora" fame, who more than a decade ago was a featured player in many successful musical comedies and light operas, is seen in the role of Colonel Cameron, a Kentucky horseman. Since his entry on the screen three years ago Carleton has been seen to good advantage in important parts.

Another part of highest dramatic order is intrusted to Edwin Sturgis, who has been in several Goldwyn productions. Sturgis gave a finished performance in the comedy role of Detective Chase with Tom Moore in "Just for Tonight." Tammany Young, who showed his mettle as Blinky in "The Service Star," starring Madge Kennedy, completes the cast of "The Racing Strain." Since his last Goldwyn appearance Young gave a striking performance in an important role in "Hit the Trail Holliday." Previous to his advent on the screen Young was a popular vaudeville favorite.

Roy Stewart Rides for Triangle.

A picture that is said to feature the expert horsemanship of Triangle's favorite Western star is "The Silent Rider." Roy Stewart is the starred player, and the picture is scheduled for release on the program of December 8. The story, described as a vigorous narrative of the great ranch dealing with rangers, rustlers and round-ups, was written with scenario by C. M. Clarke. Ethel Flemming is again leading woman after her recent appearance in several William Desmond productions. Cliff Smith directed, with Steve Rounds at the camera. L. S. McKee and Leo Willis are members of the supporting cast.

"High Pockets" Will Be Second Bennison Picture

WHEN Louis Bennison makes his debut in a fortnight in the lively dramatic romance, "Oh, Johnny!" he can, as a new star, afford to be very thankful that his way has fallen among producers like the Betzwood Film Company, a Philadelphia. organization comprising Senator Clarence Wolf, Ira M. Lowry and their associates.

Before the public has seen the first Bennison star series release, before the public has seen his screen personality, the Betzwood Company, with a huge faith in his coming success, has completed four Louis Bennison productions.

Mr. Bennison has enjoyed a most unusual and spontaneous success in the theatre, and through the medium of a single play, "Johnny, Get Your Gun," focused the attention of amusement lovers. Those who have seen his screen productions can foretell his popularity with the American public.

"Following "Oh, Johnny!" his first production, which is the work of Wilson Bayley, directed by Ira M. Lowry, will come "High Pockets," from a featured novel by William Patterson White in a recent number of "Adventure." Screen rights to this fast-moving story of love and luck were purchased within twenty-four hours of the time copies of the magazine made their appearance on the news stands of Philadelphia.

Bennison will have for his leading woman in "High Pockets" Katherine MacDonald, celebrated for her work opposite William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe" and "Riddle Gawne." Those who have seen this second Bennison production declare that the combination of star and leading woman promises much.

The third Bennison picture is "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U," a romance of the Western plains, in which Bennison is given an opportunity to display his skill as rider and roper, and which affords full scope for his breezy and unusual personality.

Problem of Kaiser Arouses Interest in Metro Features

CURIOSITY in regard to the disposition to be made of Wilhelm Hohenzollern, former Kaiser of Germany, has served to arouse new interest in "To Hell with the Kaiser," the seven-act patriotic Screen Classics, Inc., superfeature. This picture is one instance of a production in which the interest is cumulative, and this has been due partly to the fact that this picture did not merely chronicle past events, but foreshadowed coming ones as well. The query is becoming insistent in motion picture circles. "Who is the Screen Classics, Inc., prophet?" Metro, who is distributing the picture is in receipt of hundreds of letters from exhibitors who wish to play it again or use it for special runs.

This prophetic quality is seen not only in "To Hell with the Kaiser," but also in the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., super-feature, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns." Events forecasted in this production had been acted before the camera by the Screen Classics, Inc., players as written by Maxwell Karger and directed by Charles Miller before they actually had historic being. Moreover, some of the pictured events have not happened yet. But they exist at this moment on the film in the safe where the Screen Classics, Inc., celluloid is kept.

"To Hell with the Kaiser" is as timely right now as it was when it was produced several months ago, because it has anticipated history. That anticipation was built on a logical interpretation of the trend of events, and the same is true of "The Great Victory."

Novel Support for Norma Talmadge.

With Thomas Meighan as her leading man, Gladden James and several full-blooded Comanche Indians in the supporting cast, Norma Talmadge has one of the most exceptional and novel companies on record for the presentation of her forthcoming Select picture, "The Heart of Wetona." The screen version of "The Heart of Wetona," which was a famous David Belasco stage success of two seasons ago, was written by Mary Murillo, while the direction was in the capable hands of Sidney A. Franklin.

"The Heart of Wetona" cast includes one genuine Indian princess and three full-blooded chiefs, White Eagle, Black Wolf and Black Lizard; the latter, until a few years ago, one of the most ferocious redskins on the reservation. The princess is Uwane Yea.

The cast also includes Fred Huntley, Fred Turner, Charles Edler and a score of gorgeously dressed Indians and squaws.

Pathe to Push "The Lightning Raider."

In an effort to make its forthcoming Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," the most successful in its long list of serial releases, Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that it will start on December 28 an extensive national advertising campaign. The first advertisement will precede the release of the first episode by about a week. Pathe executives hope by this campaign to increase the enormous army of serial fans throughout the country.

In addition to this campaign the new Pearl White serial will be backed by a wide billposting campaign.

Lee Children Start Picture.

The Lee children, Jane and Katherine, who are on the West Coast for the first time, have started work under the direction of Arvid Gillstrom. This newest Lee vehicle, entitled "Smiles," is from a story by Ralph H. Spence. In the cast assisting the Lee children are Ethel Fleming, Val Paul, Carmen Phillips, Charles Arling and Katherine Griffith.

Anna May.

Recovers from Injuries Only to Face Hospital Set

IN the filming of the new Frank Keeney production, "The Family Honor," which is being produced under Sidney Olcott's direction, a unique coincidence occurred. Ann May, who portrays the role of Barbara Rand, upon returning to the studio after being confined to her bed for some time as the result of an accident in taking some of the earlier scenes, found that the next scene she was called on to portray was laid in a hospital.

It happened this way. Miss May was told by Director Olcott to drop from a window into a net, and, while not a "stunt" actress, the plucky girl essayed the feat successfully, although she fainted. Next, clad in a vivandierre costume with wooden shoes which made progress difficult, she was being assisted in climbing a hillside, when she stumbled and did a backward fall which was not in the picture. She picked herself up and started on the next stunt called for, that is, to roll down an embankment.

Miss May woke up in her own bed suffering from slight concussions of the neck and spine. After a few weeks in the sick room she was able to resume work, only to find that the vivandierre whom she portrayed in the story was supposed to be so upset by her adventures that it was necessary for her to go to a hospital.

Thrills in Official No. 24.

"The Path to Victory," No. 24 of Official War Review, released by Pathe December 9, is one of the most thrilling and instructive instalments of this great patriotic and educational series. It shows how, day by day and night by night, the Allies beat back the foes' shattered armies. It is full of dramatic movement and comprehensive change of scene.

Accompanied by the camera, Italian skirmishers dash through shell-shattered villages in pursuit of the fleeing Austrians.

Wherever the French Poilu pursued the Boche he found his once pretty towns and villages razed to shattered brick and dust.

A tense, deeply impressive spectacle caught by the camera shows Britain's battalions face to face with a keystone of the Hindenburg line, waiting for the signal to go "over the top."

The record also shows some of the happenings on one gray morning, when Pershing's crusaders cleaned up the St. Mihiel salient.

Kenyon Company Spends Thanksgiving in South

DORIS KENYON and her company spent Thanksgiving Day in the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains in North Carolina, where the exteriors of "Twilight" are being made. J. Searle Dawley, the director, declared a holiday, and Thomas A. Persons, studio manager, who is also with the party, provided a most bountiful repast, which was served at Esmeralda Inn, twenty-five miles from Asheville, N. C., where the company is stopping.

Although handicapped by bad weather, some wonderful exteriors are being made. Mr. Dawley is most enthusiastic over the story of "Twilight." Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., declares that Mr. Dawley is making the best picture in which Miss Kenyon has ever appeared.

The company expects to remain in North Carolina about two weeks more. In the party are Doris Kenyon and her mother, Mrs. James B. Kenyon; J. Searle Dawley and Mrs. Dawley; Theodore C. Deitrich and Mrs. Deitrich; Thomas A. Persons and Mrs. Persons; Frank Mills, Harry Lee, Sally Crute, Edith Warren, Grif W. Davis, Ned Van Buren, Hugh Rice, George Lessey, William Hartman and Joseph Clement, technical director.

Edythe Chapman in Lytell Support.

Edythe Chapman, who will have a role of genuine interest and importance in Bert Lytell's Metro photodrama, "Faith," is one of the best equipped actresses on the American stage. Miss Chapman has been seen in a number of Metro features, notably in "The Only Road" and "Weaver of Dreams," both starring Viola Dana. She has that rare combination, understanding of a role, and humor in handling it. She excels in sympathetic treatment, but it is a sympathy that does not become mawkish or oversentimental.

Miss Chapman has appeared in leading parts with many of the larger producing companies, and has also headed her own stock company. Among her greatest successes have been "Lady Windermere's Fan," "Divoroons" and "Diplomacy." She has also appeared in the leading feminine Shakespearean and other classical parts. Previous to her dramatic experience she studied voice culture, and fitted herself with operatic roles.

To Burlesque "Flu" Epidemic.

Mildred Moore has been engaged as the new leading woman of Lyons-Moran comedies, taking the place of Dorothy DeVere. Miss Moore has previously played many light comedy roles in Universal and Bluebird productions. She is expected to make a strong foil for the two Universal funmakers.

The forthcoming production by this troupe is entitled "You've Got It." The scenario was written by J. Grubb Alexander. The subject takes its fun through a burlesque of the recent "flu" epidemic. Mr. Alexander, the author, was a sufferer from the dread disease himself, and obtained from his experience some very lucid facts to work with.

McCutcheon Story for Alice Brady.

While Alice Brady's Select picture, "Her Great Chance," is being shown in first-run houses, announcement is made by Select that her next attraction will be "In the Hollow of Her Hand," a story by George Barr McCutcheon.

Charles Maigne wrote the scenario and also directed, thus making the second picture for Alice Brady for which he has written the scenario and directed. The picture is neither comedy nor melodrama, and still the story has both of these qualities in it; yet withal, there is an intensely absorbing background in which fate, with its usual abandon, has given us a story that can only be characterized as "a different kind."

Four Big Selects for Release in December

ONE of the most alluring arrays of box-office attractions ever assembled by Select for one month's output is the group offered for the month of December. The stars, the subjects, and the order in which they will be distributed are: Constance Talmadge, in "A Lady's Name," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick; Mitchell Lewis, Select's newest star, in "Code of the Yukon"; Norma Talmadge, in "The Heart of Wetona," and Alice Brady in "In the Hollow of Her Hand."

Constance Talmadge's picture is a screen version of the famous stage success of the same name by Cyril Harcourt. The scenario is by Julia Crawford Ivers, and the direction is by Walter Edwards.

Mitchell Lewis' vehicle is a story of the Northwestern gold fields. It was written by Anthony Paul Kelly. The scenario and direction of "Code of the Yukon" are by Bertram Bracken. In this picture Mr. Lewis is seen as a French-Canadian. There is a fight, a plunge through darkness, and —the light. The other principal in this spectacular battle is Tom Santschi.

In her latest Select picture, Norma Talmadge is a sloe-eyed Indian maid. "The Heart of Wetona" is no less appealing than David Belasco's famous stage success of the same name. The story is from the play by George Scarborough. Mary Murillo wrote the scenario, and it was directed by Sidney A. Franklin.

Last in Select's December attractions is Alice Brady, whose forthcoming picture is from a story by George Barr McCutcheon. It has a "different" theme. A woman tries to protect the woman who kills her husband, and Alice Brady is the one who is held in the hollow of the other woman's hand. Charles Maigne wrote the scenario and also directed the production.

Priscilla Dean's Bluebird Praised.

Glowing tales are reported from the Coast in reference to Priscilla Dean's latest Bluebird, which is temporarily entitled "Miss Doris—Safe Cracker." This subject will be released in February. Meantime the young star has reached New York through the channel of a big film, entitled "She Hired a Husband," which is looked upon as a subject that will keep exhibitors talking for some time.

Miss Dean in her next picture is cast as an underworld crook. In the supporting company two interesting names appear. Lon Chaney, the clever character actor, who some time back was in the Bluebird fold, has returned after an absence. Another newcomer is Spottiswood Aitken.

Wellington Playter is Miss Dean's leading man. This will be his first appearance in support of the Bluebird star.

Miss Dean's picture, "She Hired a Husband," is set for release December 16. Previously it was announced for December 30, but has been transferred to take the place of "The Cabaret Girl."

Gladys Leslie in a Quaint Drama.

Gladys Leslie is presented in the second of her nine star series releases in "The Beloved Imposter," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature scheduled for release the week of December 16. In this quaint little drama, beautiful in story and setting, adapted from "Betty's House Party," by Mrs. Elizabeth J. Mariana, Miss Leslie has a spirited role in which her vivacious and lovable personality are seen to splendid advantage.

The locale of the picture is the South, and Director Joseph Gleason took his entire company below the Mason-Dixon Line, where most of the scenes were filmed. Huntley Gordon plays opposite Miss Leslie, and others in the supporting cast are Denton Vane, Mrs. Hurley, Frances Grant and Gwen Williams.

Billie Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams" (Affiliated Release-Robertson-Cole).

Paramount Releases Five Comedies for December

WITH the war over, the amusement-seeking public is more desirous of having a hearty laugh than ever before, and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has prepared to give exhibitors the opportunity of supplying this demand. The Paramount comedies which have just been listed for release are said to present one of the most notable schedules yet offered. There will be three Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies and two Paramount-James Montgomery Flagg subjects for December.

The first comedy is "Her First Mistake," from the Mack Sennett studios, and which will be released December 1. The picture is said to be a decided novelty, and an unusually humorous story makes this one of the finest laughmakers yet released by this producer.

On December 8 there will be released a Paramount-Flagg comedy, entitled "Independence, B'Gosh." The story deals with the woes of the Whiffles, a country couple who inherit a fortune of $89,000,000. Olin Howland and Florence Dixon are starred.

"Hide and Seek, Detectives," is another Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy for December, to be released on the 15th. As the title implies, there is much of the Sherlock Holmes travesty in this two-reeler, with Ben Turpin and Charles Lynn playing the title characters and Marie Prevost in another important part.

James Montgomery Flagg himself plays the star part in his comedy to be released December 22, and named "Perfectly Fiendish Flanagan" or "The Hart of the Dreadful West." Supporting him in the cast are Olin Howland, Ruby DeRemer and Sally Long. Mr. Flagg is a great admirer of William S. Hart, the Artcraft star, and his new comedy is a travesty written around the Hart type of pictures. The resemblance of Mr. Flagg is this film to "Big Bill" is said to be remarkable.

Th final comedy release of the month will be "The Village Chestnut," another Paramount-Mack Sennett offering and, although there is no further information available, it is promised that this picture, now in the making, will more than rank favorably with the quality of the others on December's schedule.

Smith Tries His Hand at Acting.

W. S. Smith, manager of the West Coast studio of the Vitagraph, took a hand at the acting art when he donned the grease paint for a few minutes and played a "bit" in the Bessie Love picture being directed by David Smith. Miss Love, who watched the scene intently, declares that W. S. Smith is overlooking a good bet in not signing himself on a long time contract.

Earle Williams in Secret Service Play.

In "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, scheduled for release the week of December 9, Vitagraph presents Earle Williams in the second of his eight star series releases under the new rotary Star Series releasing plan and booking policy. He has the role of a British secret service man in this country at the entrance of the United States in the World War and on a mission that makes impossible any explanation to the girl he loves of the apparent inaction which makes him appear a slacker.

The play is written by Bess Meredyth, and is described as swift of action and with unusual mystery element, the plot centering about the activities of two Germans, posing as pro-Americans, and who finally are unmasked. Mr. Williams is finely suited to this forceful role and is supported by Grace Darmond, Charles Spear and Edward Cecil. The picture was filmed on the Pacific Coast under direction of James Young.

Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince star, is at work at the Ince studios in Hollywood under the direction of Jerome Storm on a baseball picture for Paramount, which is as yet unnamed. This will be welcome to exhibitors and the picture and baseball fans throughout the country who recall how Ray jumped into popularity in the early Triangle days with his delineation of the college baseball hero in "The Pinch Hitter."

Ray is an enthusiast on the great American game, beside being a pretty good pitcher himself, so he is right in his element in the new picture. There are a lot of professional ball players among the cast and extras, and the games were played at Washington Park, Los Angeles. Jane Novak is leading woman.

Losanco Super-Plays Begins Work in California

A PRODUCING company known as Losanco Super-Plays, Inc., has been organized in Los Angeles for the purpose of producing picture plays based upon the policy that "The Story's the Thing." J. W. Early, one of the pioneer producers in the industry, is the director general of the new organization, and its policies have been largely dictated by the fruits of his experience.

The Losanco Super-Plays, Inc., plans to partly supply the insistent public demand for better and better pictures by featuring all members of its casts instead of the star alone, by selecting its stories with the greatest care, and insisting that they carry a message and be free from disagreeable "suggestions"; by casting in each part actors and actresses of proved ability who are naturally the exact type for the part, by sparing neither time nor expense to make each production superior, and by working in close touch with the associated exhibitors to keep in touch with the public's wishes.

Production has already been started upon a satirical two-reel comedy, and the Losanco banner will include the products of two five-reel dramatic companies, two two-reel comedy companies, and one one-reel comedy company.

H. M. Gilliam is business manager of the new firm. Everett C. Maxwell, short-story writer and photo-dramatist, heads the scenario department. Carl Stearns Clancy is writing the continuity for the first "super-drama." Clyde McCoy will direct under Mr. Early's supervision. Earl McInroy will produce a series of one-reel comedies. Robert Phelan is head cameraman. Theodore Kleine is technical director and Clarence W. Fry the location man.

Lillian Hackett, of New York, will have the leading role in the first five-reeler. Miss Crete Carton, formerly with the Rolin Studio, will be the headliner in the two-reelers, and Miss Glory Raye, a clever ingenue actress, who came to this country after playing Wendy in Peter Pan for two seasons in London, will be the most important member of the one-reel comedy company.

The general offices of Losanco Super-Plays, Inc., are at 901-6 Citizens' National Bank Building, Los Angeles. Plans for a new studio are being drawn up. The company is temporarily operating under its first corporate name—The Pekin Feature Film Company.

Will Help Finance Producers.

While the operations of the Independent Sales Corporation are definitely limited to the maintaining of a large force of film salesmen throughout the country for the sole purpose of booking pictures, and it will not be concerned in the producing of pictures or in the physical distribution of productions, it recently became known that an important part of its functions is the financing of producers in so far as a cash advance on finished negatives is concerned, and also the financing of prints and advertising.

This places the Independent Sales Corporation in a position where it can close with producers, or groups of producers, immediately to take full charge of the advertising and marketing of their pictures, while at the same time sharing with them the burden of the cost of production. The physical distribution of the pictures, which is a thing apart from the activities of the company, is taken care of by a special arrangement between this company and the Film Clearing House, which specializes in that branch of the exchange business.

Special Company Presents "The Turn of the Road"

SINCE no two persons can, in the nature of things, form identical conceptions of the same story, the ideal condition would seem to be that in which the author of a really strong story should also direct its picturization. Also that this author-director should have high casting ability, thorough directing experience, and not be bound by too many restrictions on the part of the producing company.

This is the condition obtaining in the filming of "The Turn in the Road," which was written, cast and directed by King W. Vidor for the Brentwood Film Corporation, and which is expected to be ready for release shortly.

"This picture demanded the extreme of realism and naturalness in its treatment," says S. P. Trodd, publicity director, "for it deals with the life of today as it is known and lived by the average American. Its humor, pathos, suspense and climax are drawn from everyday life. Overaction or overcharacterization would ruin it. It called for the utmost naturalness in the portrayal of every main part. And this has been provided through an exceptionally well fitting and happy cast.

"It would be hard indeed to find better suited people than Helen Jerome Eddy for the part of a serious, self-sacrificing and unselfish daughter; Pauline Curley for that of her sister of lighter vein; Winter Hall for that of their dignified clergyman-father torn between pulpit ambitions and loyalty to his faith; George Nichols for the part of a hard-fisted business man, the dominating power of the city, whose main interests he controls, or little Ben Alexander, the happy, natural boy whose brightness, love and fearlessness are used in this story as the influences which turn the other characters on to smoother paths. Were it not for the lighting demands of the screen most of these people could play their parts without the least touch of make-up."

First Walthall Release Is Set for December 22

HENRY B. WALTHALL will be the Christmas star of the new Exhibitors' Mutual releases. By the terms of the contract between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation all pictures for the twenty-nine Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges in the United States and Canada are being supplied by Robertson-Cole. Mr. Walthall's first appearance on the releasing program will be on December 22, when his first vehicle, "And a Still Small Voice," will appear.

Mr. Walthall is at work at the National Film Corporation of America studios on the Coast in "Lives for Sale," described as an original powerful story. His next production will be a play founded on Hallie Erminie Rives' popular novel, "The Long Lane's Turning." This will be produced as a super-feature.

Mr. Walthall's first release was made before the star signed his long term contract with the National Corporation to make a series of eight features a year. It will serve as an excellent introduction of Mr. Walthall to the Exhibitors' Mutual schedule of releases.

"And a Still Small Voice" is described as a photodrama of unusual novelty and strength, with Mr. Walthall at his very best.

Notable Cast Selected for Initial S-L Picture

FOR the initial Ralph Ince Film Attraction now being produced for S-L Pictures, Arthur S. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin announce an all-star cast has been engaged. The feminine contingent will be headed by two stars recruited from the stage and screen respectively; namely, Grace Darling and Clara Joel.

Miss Darling is known to motion picture audiences by reason of her appearance in feature productions, and also as the recipient of unique publicity through the medium of a chain of daily newspapers, while Clara Joel, who will also enact an important role in this production, has starred in the dramatic successes, "Common Clay," "Kick In" and "Business Before Pleasure," and she is said to have turned down many previous offers from producers to appear in motion pictures.

Among the male members of the cast who will appear in support of the star, E. K. Lincoln, is W. B. Mack, who has appeared with such celebrities as Wilton Lackaye, John Drew and Julia Marlowe in stage productions. Another well known stage player is Irving Brooks, who has appeared with Madame Modjeska, William Faversham and others, and has also appeared in screen productions, including a recent Blackton feature. Another prominent player is John P. Wade, who has been fitted with a congenial role.

In addition to the foregoing the cast includes Leo Delaney, the favorite of early Vitagraph days, who has since been seen in a number of features, and is known to nearly every patron of motion pictures; and Corporal Darby Holmes, a returned war hero, author of "A Yankee in the Trenches," who is also an excellent actor.

Actual Scene of Exploits Used in Dalton Production

EMMETT DALTON, general manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, announces that the initial production of this company, "Beyond the Law," is now ready for disposition to state rights and foreign buyers.

Regarding the reception accorded this picture at its premiere at Wurlitzer Hall on November 26, where the audience was composed of state rights and foreign buyers, representatives of trade journals and other members of the motion picture industry, Mr. Dalton expressed himself in glowing terms: "After it had been shown a number of the audience told me I had a production which was destined to create a furore in the industry. Of course, my picture will not create a furore, but it will serve the exhibitor's purpose to satisfy his patrons and his box office. That in the final analysis is the test of a picture, and I am certain that 'Beyond the Law' can stand that test.

"Once again do I want to impress upon buyers that my picture is in no way a story founded on fiction, but on fact. As the sole survivor of the Dalton boys, I am in position to state the story is a historical one, and the picture enhances the value of the story by the fact that it was taken on the actual prairies on which the original story was enacted in real life. My brothers and myself lived the life of the picture several years ago."

At Wurlitzer Hall, "Beyond the Law" was shown to the accompaniment of appropriate music, and many favorable comments were made on the effective Western atmosphere of the production.

The cast, headed by Emmett Dalton, also includes Bobby Connelly, Ida Pardee, William Dunn and others.

S. Jay Kaufman Author of "Wanted for Murder"

S JAY KAUFMAN, known as a severe critic of motion pictures, has himself at last written a picture. It is called "Wanted for Murder," and has just been completed by Harry Rapf. Mr. Kaufman is the author of several one-act plays, and conducts the "Round the Town" column in the New York Evening Globe.

S. Jay Kaufman.

Mr. Kaufman made the following statement:

"I am not opposed to moving pictures. I never have been. As to the picture, 'Wanted for Murder,' which I wrote, it is in the nature of a coincidence that the picture was written about five months ago, and now our title seems to be on the lips of everyone.

"It is the idea that the Kaiser is responsible for millions of murders. I wrote the story because I thought it was good propaganda, and in addition it told some other things in which the public would be interested.

"This quality of simplicity convinces me that greater subjects can be filmed because the greater the subject, the simpler the story. 'Wanted for Murder' is a timely story, but the other things I want to do are rather more unconventional and startling."

"Kaiser's Finish" Arouses Enthusiasm.

Warner Brothers, who are disposing of "The Kaiser's Finish" on state rights basis, report that it was accorded an enthusiastic reception at the Bluebird Theatre in Richmond, Va., where it has been booked for a return engagement, according to a telegram received from Mrs. A. E. Thorpe, the house manager, reading: "Tremendous business on four days' engagement. Patrons voice one hundred per cent. Congratulate you on same. Have booked return engagement." The First National Exhibitors' Circuit, of Richmond, which is handling this picture in that territory, also reports enthusiastically on the showing at the Bluebird, which was the first run in that section; advising there was a long line waiting for the opening of the house and everyone was pleased.

J. L. Kempner Handling "The Better 'Ole" Film

J. L. KEMPNER, who has been engaged in the exploitation of "The Manxman" and "Lest We Forget," is at the present time attending to the preliminary details of the domestic operations of "The Better 'Ole," adapted from the stage comedy based on Captain Bruce Bairnsfather's cartoons, which is enjoying a prosperous run at the Cort Theatre, New York, to which it was transferred from the Greenwich Village Theatre.

From the Famous Players Film Service, Toronto, controlling the Canadian rights, Mr. Kempner has received the following wire: "'Better 'Ole' opens Toronto next week under auspices local newspaper with big advertising campaign."

A unique booking for a special production is the showing of "The Manxman" at the Electric Theatre, Rudd, Iowa, a town of only 296 inhabitants. Mr. Kempner advises that as this town is not in opposition to any of the larger cities thereabouts that this picture had not played they found no reason against accepting the booking gladly.

False Impression Created By Snakes in Keane's Ad

It has just been brought to the notice of James Keane, producer of "The Spreading Evil," that his recent advertising in the trade journals designed in the form of snakes reading, "The Spreading Evil," has created the impression throughout that this photodrama deals with prohibition.

As "snakes" have generally been accepted as the logical sequence to "booze" it is not surprising that Mr. Keane should receive the following from an old friend, an exhibitor: "Have lost track of your address, which you evidently forgot to put in your trade ad in last issue of the Moving Picture World advertising your new 'booze' picture. Please drop me a line giving me your address and some information as to how 'The Spreading Evil' will be released. If this reaches you, please answer quick."

As "The Spreading Evil" in no way deals with prohibition, Mr. Keane has immediately changed the snake design, substituting a lothsome creature represented as crawling over the world.

"Wanted for Murder" Rich with Exploitation Ideas

HARRY RAPF, who is producing the feature, "Wanted for Murder," starring Elaine Hammerstein, calls attention to the many opportunities afforded exhibitors for exploitation possibilities in connection with this feature. The title lends itself to advertising stunts, while the theme will be a live one after peace talk subsides, as several of the Allies are reported as taking steps to extradite William Hohenzollern and try him for the murder of helpless women and children.

In addition, five hundred soldiers assisted the well known vaudeville artists, Irene Franklin and Burt Green, in some of the scenes showing how the boys are entertained on the other side, and the names of these boys can be secured for local exploitation. The Y. M. C. A. hut offers an opportunity for the principals to develop an acquaintance which is followed by romance and adventure, and the Salvation Army lassies come in for their bit of fame, while the Motor Corps of America is shown searching for the sick and wounded.

For thrills there is the bombarding of Berlin with peace propaganda by American aviators followed by the rise of Bolshevism and disorder in Germany. It is also announced that many novel stunts are in preparation for the Broadway showing of this picture, and they will be furnished to exhibitors.

Serial Starring Maciste Filmed Under Difficulties

HARRY RAVER, who is in charge of the distribution of the twenty-four-reel serial, "The Liberator," starring Maciste, the giant of "Cabiria" and the hero of "The Warrior," furnishes some interesting side-lights on the actual production of this picture.

It was begun in August, 1917, but was not completed until September, 1918. Due to the difficulties experienced in keeping the cast intact because of the military demands affecting the male members who were in the Italian Army, work on the production was abandoned no less than four times, and it was only through the influence of Gabriele D'Anunzio that periodical leaves of absence were obtained.

Many of the male artists may be observed wearing the army identification tags. Pastroni, the director, who also staged "Cabiria," was injured in action twice, and directed a portion of "The Liberator" while seated in a wheel-chair. Miss Manzini, who portrays Donna Violante, lost both her father and brother just after the picture went into production. "Bianca" of the story lost her husband in battle, and the child around whom the action develops is her own.

All of the principals of this picture were also members of the "Cabiria" cast.

Grace Darling to Support Lincoln in S-L Pictures

ONE of the best known personalities of the motion picture screen has been engaged for a leading role of the first Ralph Ince film attraction in the person of Grace Darling. Miss Darling has been chosen by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin as one of the chief supports for E. K. Lincoln, who will be seen in the stellar role of the S- L production now in work under the direction of Ralph Ince. Her appealing blond beauty, together with marked ability in the matter of ingenue and leading parts requiring intelligence and brilliancy of execution, influenced the organizers of the new company in making their choice.

Grace Darling possesses youth in abundant form, and has been acclaimed on various occasions as one of the leading beauties of the silent drama. Her career in the movies, with its consequent rise to world-wide fame, has been meteoric in the rapidity of its flight.

Upon her was bestowed the biggest campaign of publicity ever devised by the most powerful chain of daily newspapers in the United States when Miss Darling made a continental trip from New York to California, ending this momentous journey with an inspection of that wonderful feat of engineering, the Panama Canal. As the star of the Hearst-Selig Pictorial News, the leading lady of the first S-L production was photographed more actual times than any individual in the world. Stops were made in every important city, the leading officials visited and celebration held in honor of Miss Darling's arrival. An ovation was accorded her at every station, and she met innumerable celebrities of every station in life. Bearing letters from Governor Whitman and the late Mayor Mitchell, Miss Darling was received by Mayor Rudolph, of San Francisco, to whom she presented the transcontinental messages. Following her return to New York, the much-photographed young lady appeard in several successful productions, thereby more firmly establishing her country-wide popularity.

She bears the unique distinction of being the only individual in the world to protect her features by patent. Because of various attempts to imitate her likeness in the movies by the use of make-up, Miss Darling made application to the Patent Office to have her features duly registered. A replica of her face, done by a well known sculptor, was placed on file at Washington.

In appearing as one of the leading supports to E. K. Lincoln in the inaugural Ralph Ince film attraction, Miss Darling has a role especially suited to her beauty and ability.

Bert Hall Picture Booked for Run at Tremont Temple

FOLLOWING the announcement that "A Romance of the Air," the seven-reel production featuring Lieutenant Bert Hall, the American Ace, and Edith Day, would begin a series of special engagements in the large cities of the country, Carl E. Carlton, president of the Crest Pictures, the organization handling this picture, announces that beginning December 30 it will be shown for four weeks, and possibly longer, at the Tremont Temple Theatre, Boston.

Mr. Carlton recently returned from Boston after completing the negotiations, and is now arranging for showing in Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago either simoultaneously or following the Boston engagement.

Lieutenant Hall had three years active service at the front, first in the Foreign Legion, then as an aviator. He brought down eight Boches, and participated in some of the most thrilling air battles on three fronts, having received high English, French and Russian decorations.

The story of "Romance of the Air" is by Franklin B. Coates, and is founded on Lieutenant Hall's book, "En l'air," which has gone through three editions and been syndicated serially in a number of large newspapers. The air battles in the picture are said to be authentic reproductions of actual occurrences, and interwoven with the lieutenant's adventures is an appealing story of an American girl who was in Germany when the war broke out, and her unique romance and escape with the aviator.

Pioneer to State Right "Little Orphant Annie"

NATHAN HIRSH, president of the Pioneer Film Corporation, who has recently successfully exploited on the independent market two feature productions, "The Still Alarm" and "Wives of Men," has secured "Little Orphant Annie," the six-reel picturization of James Whitcomb Riley's immortal poem of the same title, and will release this picture on state rights basis.

This well known masterpiece of the Hoosier poet is one of the most widely read pieces of American literature, and has gained fame far and wide. Its homely pathos and universal appeal have made it dear to thousands of families not only in the cities, but in the smallest towns and villages.

The photo-drama is said to be full of pathos. It pictures in detail the life of poor "Little Orphant Annie," her trials, the happy days with Squire Goode and his wife, and finally her beautiful death when she goes to meet her darling mother. It is said that every bit of the poet's work has been transferred to the screen in an effective way.

A stage adaptation of James Whitcomb Riley's poems, under the title "Home Again," at William A. Brady's Playhouse, New York, is one of the season's successes, and many persons throughout the country will welcome the opportunity to see these characters, depicted on the screen, as both the old and young will recognize the title and recall the poem.

The feature members of the cast are Colleen Moore, who plays the title role, and Tom Santschi. The late James Whitcomb Riley also appears in the picture.

In speaking of this production, an official of the Pioneer says, "There have been war features, dramatic features, propaganda pictures and films of all kinds offered on state rights, but this is a story of real home folks, the kind you and I knew in our young days, the sort of a real homely story that will get right under the skin of those who see it and appeal to everyone, especially the women and children. "Little Orphant Annie" is a distinctly different style of picture, a real out-of-the-ordinary attraction. It should prove a particularly strong attraction for the neighborhood theatre, as it can be played up so strongly. The poem from which it is adapted is so well known and the picture so clean and wholesome that it should do good business and stand an advanced scale of admission prices.

Moore Uses Gerard Picture for Second Run at Strand

FOR what is said to be the first time in its history, Tom Moore's Strand Theatre, Washington, D. C., a first-run theatre, has played a second run on a production after it had been the featured attraction several weeks before at a competing theatre.

The production was "My Four Years in Germany," a First National attraction. It was booked at the Strand for a week's run beginning on Sunday, November 10. The first run was at the Poli Theatre, the local Shubert house, where it played for a week at advanced prices to excellent business.

In speaking of the engagement, Mr. Moore said:

"The most interesting part of the peculiar situation involving 'My Four Years in Germany' is that when it was shown at Poli's Theatre the public generally was at a tension. There were few individuals who did not have a relative or intimate friend in the service. The result was that they were keyed up every moment, because the picture visualized the events directly responsible for the part their relatives or friends were playing in the world war. We played the production at the Strand after the war had ended. Then the people were relaxed. The danger for their relatives or friends was passed. They were composed, and, with minds freed from strain and anxiety, they sat back and enjoyed this pictorial presentation of the facts leading up to our declaration of war against Germany with all of the interest that existed before peace was declared, but without the mental strain.

"This production is big enough as an attraction to stand a repeat booking or a second-run showing with all of the prestige that usually goes to a first-run engagement."

The quickest route to a market for used films is via The World's Classified Advertising. A trial will prove this assertion.

Big Battery of Cameras for Ralph Ince Feature

In accordance with their policy of loaning to the inaugural Ralph Ince Film Attraction every possible aid to insure perfection of the mechanical and technical details, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have scoured the field of cinematographers and picked William Black and Charles Fishback to photograph the various scenes. Both of these men are experts. William Black has been responsible for several recent Metro features, while Fishback has turned the crank for a large number of the leading companies. Both have introduced novelties and innovations in the matters of side lighting, stereoscopic effects, and impressionistic night scenes, and surprises are said to be in store for those who witness the Ince production on the screen.

Capable assistants have been provided in the persons of Charles Nelson and Harry Thomas, who will have charge of a battery of motion picture and still cameras, ten in all. This multiplicity of photographic apparatus has been provided in order to secure scenes from every possible angle. The work of the photographic division will be under the direct charge of William Cohill, working under the supervision of Ralph Ince. Mr. Cohill is thoroughly familiar with this branch of the business due to several years' experience in the leading studios of the West Coast and New York.

All cameras, both still and motion, have been provided with the most modern appliances in order to permit of the greatest latitude in securing original effects.

This is an example of the careful attention the sponsors of Ralph Ince Film Attractions are giving to every detail of the first production presenting E. K. Lincoln in order that it may meet the expectations of the leading exhibitors of the United States.

Lieutenant Bert Hall Speaks of Aviation

Lieutenant Bert Hall, the American Ace, who has taken active part in over one hundred aerial battles, and who is featured in Carle E. Carlton's production, "A Romance of the Air," says the average life of an aviator is about twenty years.

"However," adds Hall, "this does not mean they all die. Some are prisoners, some wounded and many are physical breakdowns. Most of these men suffer from heart and nerve trouble, and generally come back after being treated. In France we had about 2,000 men in training constantly, and in the schools there are about 1,000 machines. The daily breakage is about 25 machines. The life of a machine in a school is rarely more than thirty hours in the air. In France our output was about seventy machines per day—consumption about forty-five. There are no special physical requirements in France. The only examinations are of the eyes and heart. We had men fifty-two years old who made good flyers."

Gersten Secures "Woman" for Northern New Jersey

NORTHERN New Jersey rights for the Maurice Tourneur production, "Woman," have just been sold to Frank Gersten, 130 West 46th street, New York City, who is well known as a distributor for unusual features in Northern New Jersey.

Hiller & Wilk, who are offering this production on state rights basis, announce that strong interest has been manifested in "Woman" since the premiere at the New York Rivoli Theatre, when it was pronounced by critics to be an unusual and remarkable production.

With the announcement of the open market plan for "Woman," wires and letters began coming from exhibitors and exchange men in all sections of the country. Allotments are being made rapidly, and sale of a number of other territories will be published within a few days.

Maurice Tourneur Productions commissioned Burton Rice, the well known artist, to design the lithographs for "Woman," and the Rice posters are said to be strikingly beautiful. "Woman" admits of unusual billboard and poster display, and Mr. Rice has taken full advantage of his opportunities.

Stoermer Offers "The Tidal Wave."

All speculations are wasted energy, according to William Stoermer, producer, author of "The Honor System," and now author, producer and purveyor of "The Tidal Wave," which he is preparing to circulate immediately. There are certain angles of mob psychology that may be predetermined accurately, according to the Stoermer manual of film tactics. In his preparations for "The Tidal Wave" the producer goes back to July, 1917, almost a year and a half ago. At that time, the owner of "The Tidal Wave" decided that he would have in negative form on the shelves ready to be finally cut and subtitled a picture big in drama and timely in subject, just suited to what popular desire should approximately be when the war was over and peace declared.

"'The Tidal Wave' is not a war play. 'The Tidal Wave' is not in the limitations of its definitions a romance. Another fact for record is that 'The Tidal Wave' is not a suspense detective story. But, 'The Tidal Wave' possesses the salient and atmospheres of all three of those kind of dramas," said Mr. Stoermer. "I am testing my judgment to parallel public inclination at an hour commonly supposed to be the most difficult to gauge by filmmakers and exhibitors, and, for that matter, authors. And I do not think that I am going to be mistaken in believing more than a year ago that I could call the turn on public desire in film plays after peace had been finally tagged to the great red bowl that has convulsed the world for the past four years. In 'The Tidal Wave' I think I have the kind of play that nine-tenths of playgoers want at this time."

"Sins of the Children" Now Ready.

"The Sins of the Children," recently made, but held up through the influenza ban, was released on December 1 by Harry Rapf. This picture is founded on one of Cosmo Hamilton's widely read novels. It is claimed to be a tremendous box office attractions, as it portrays human emotions carrying in detail the same vein that the Cosmo Hamilton books are so well known for. The cast includes such stars as Alma Hanlon, Stuart Holmes and Mahlon Hamilton. The settings and productions are of high standard.

Perret Completes "Stars of Glory."

Leonce Perret's victory film, "Stars of Glory," is now ready. Mr. Perret announces that work on this production was started on April 16, immediately after the appointment of General Foch as Marshal in charge of the Allied armies, and now, within a few days after the signing of the armistice, the production is complete.

Mr. Perret further announces that out of gratitude to General Pershing for having brought victory and peace to France, he has decided to dedicate this picture, which he considers his masterpiece, to him, and has cabled him requesting permission to do so.

"THE SILENT RIDER"

Five-Reel Triangle-Kaybee Presents Roy Stewart in Fine Western Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN this five-reel subject, "The Silent Rider," written by C. M. Clark and directed by Cliff Smith, Triangle-Kaybee has turned out a Western number of great merit. It represents a high point of development for this type of offering, in scenic investiture, in appropriate plot and characters, and in its magnificent and sweeping photographic effects. The action is leisurely at the beginning, but comes up gradually to a gripping climax.

Roy Stewart, who is cast in the role of the hero, Bob Gideon, once more proves himself a performer to be reckoned with in the delineation of Western character parts. He is not the typical "bad man" or half-bandit portrayed by William S. Hart and other capable players. He is rather the antithesis of this type—the jovial, good-natured cowboy of Western fiction, always ready for a "fight or a frolic" and also to fall speedily in love with the heroine of the story. There is perhaps no one in the films who visualizes this class of hero more effectively than Mr. Stewart.

The setting for this particular tale is an attractive one. It is a prosperous ranch set in the heart of a rolling mountain country, which lends itself admirably to the purposes of such a story. The hero arrives in search of a job at a time when two of the ranch employes have been killed by cattle rustlers. The plot concerns his work of locating and rounding up the rustlers, who are represented by the foreman of the ranch and his followers. In the course of the yarn Bob falls in love with the daughter of the ranch owner and wins her hand.

Ethel Fleming is capable and attractive in the role of the heroine. Leo Willis does good work as the rascally foreman, and L. D. McKee plays the owner, Jim Carson. The excellent photography was the work of Steve Rounds.

Bronco busting and excellent riding scenes are a feature of this desirable offering.

"BEYOND THE LAW"

Southern Feature Film Corporation Presents Emmett Dalton in Own Life Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

JUST as the youth of a few years ago devoured the stories of the Wild West, as told by William F. Cody and others, so will the lovers of adventure and realism to-day greet the thrilling story of the Daltons, Kansas outlaws of the latter days of the nineteenth century, as presented in six reels by the Southern Feature Film Corporation. Emmett Dalton, the sole survivor of a family of sons the last two but one of whom are killed off in their final foolish attempt to get even with their persecutors, is featured in the story.

The production is not one which we will criticise as a bit of dramatic fiction, nor as a film intended to meet the highest standards of artistic picture craft. On the contrary, we view each scene of the pictured narrative with the same eager anticipation of coming events as the small boy feels for his story-book heroes. And at the same time there are no glaring miscalculations evident in the making of the picture, and in the picturization of the serial story of his life as written by himself for the Wide World Magazine. The author moves easily and without any evident effort on his part to drive home facts which stand for themselves in the dramatic situations which naturally evolve from the chain of thrilling events subscribed.

The story opens with the appointment to the office of United States deputy marshal of Frank Dalton, who later loses his life in the rounding up of lawbreakers. At their brother's death Bob and Grat Dalton are appointed deputies, and their younger brother, Emmett, anxious to be in the game also, follows in their wake whenever he can.

Discovering that the United States marshal under whom they worked was appropriating fees intended for the deputies they resigned their offices and started off for New Mexico along with a couple of pals. Here the men separated, Bob and a couple of the others striking off farther west. The act which branded them as outlaws occurred in one of the gambling dens of the west where Bob, discovering himself being fleeced by a crooked game at the roulette wheel, takes all the gamblers' money at a revolver's point and departs with his companions.

Later a train robbery in California is attributed to the Daltons, who are at the time hundreds of miles away, and goaded by the injustice of wrong accusation they decide to live up to their reputation. The robbery of an express train carrying a shipment of gold marks the gang's first real crime, and in connection with which Bob's sweetheart is killed. Becoming hardened he plots with his companions the robbery by daylight of two banks in Coffeyville, Kan., at the same time. Here three minutes required for the time clock on one of the safes to strike brings the Government officers at their heels and all are killed but Emmett, who is sentenced to prison for a long term. A pardon granted him for good conduct and obedience to the stipulations of a three months' parole releases him to begin life over again as a law-abiding citizen.

"THE TESTING OF MILDRED VANE"

Metro Features May Allison in Five-Reel Subject of Unusual Story Interest.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

COMPLETE novelty of plot is a thing so rarely encountered that it brings an additional thrill when it does come along. This five-reel subject, "The Testing of Mildred Vane," cannot be given credit for entire originality, but it has a great deal of this desirable commodity and at least turns up a story of remarkable quality. There is some of the most fascinating villainy that has been shown on the screen for some time in the machinations of Dr. Hernandez, and we have seldom seen a persecuted heroine placed in a more awkward predicament than is Mildred Vane.

Mildred is the daughter of Matthew Vane, or at least she is presumed to be when the story opens. But Matthew's friend, Dr. Hernandez, a Spanish physician, once loved the girl's mother, and is determined to have revenge upon both father and daughter because of his old disappointment in love. He persuades Matthew Vane, through some old letters, that his wife was once untrue to him and that Mildred is not in fact his daughter. The father, shocked and with his reason almost gone, leaves Mildred in the care of the doctor while he goes on a trip. While he is away the doctor discharges the family servants, makes a practical prisoner of the girl and finally tries to wed her to an unwelcome suitor. But the girl's lover, a young professor of Greek, comes to the rescue and finally brings out the truth.

This makes a compact and enjoyable feature and has few shortcomings of any sort. The cast includes May Allison, George Field, Niguel De Brullier, Darrell Foss and Fred Goodwins.

"INFATUATION"

Six-Reel Pathe Special Feature Presents Gaby Deslys in French Adaptation.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is a great deal of pictorial charm in this six-reel production, made by the Eclipse Film Company, and released by Pathe. It is adapted from a story by Marcel L'Herbier, and the scenes are laid in Paris. The story itself is one of general appeal and contains timely Christmas settings in both the opening and closing reels.

Gaby Deslys, the widely advertised French dancer, is cast in the role of Flora

Nys, a girl of the streets, who becomes a great actress as the story proceeds. Her personal charms, which once created great excitement in European court circles, suffer no diminution under the searching lens of the camera. Her acting is proficient though in no way notable. The story, however, is one of the sentimental, heart-interest type and gets over well. There are also some good dramatic moments, particularly during the interrupted performance of the musical comedy. Theatrical performances have been frequently pictured in film stories, but this one is exceptionally attractive and very elaborately staged.

M. Signoret appears as Paul Bernard, a French gentleman, who first meets Gaby on Christmas Eve at his own celebration for the poor. She is fleeing from justice and he rescues her. Later they are married and she stars in his productions. Harry Pilcer plays the "other man," a wealthy young fellow who lures the young wife away from her husband. M. Maxadian also has an important part as Le Baron, the money lender and villain of the piece.

The production as a whole may be recommended for its general entertainment values and brilliant pictorial effects. Louis Mercanton directed.

"BUCHANAN'S WIFE"

Virginia Pearson Star of Fox Film in Which Marc MacDermott Is Conspicuously Artistic.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE presentation of "Buchanan's Wife" proves that a good story may be screened by a few players and turned to splendid amusement value—if even one of the cast is as clever as Marc MacDermott. The title role is played by Virginia Pearson, star of the occasion, but the greatest interest and importance is attached to the role of Buchanan, played with conspicuous artistry by Mr. MacDermott. Victor Sutherland, Ned Finley and a woman who is unmentioned in the cast complete a five-player organization that gives "Buchanan's Wife" an effective presentation.

The woman in the case married the wrong man. When her husband discovers this fact he causes the man whom his wife really loves to be invited to the Buchanan home, and there, before their dinner guest, Buchanan insults his wife by accusing her of entertaining her lover. Late that same night Buchanan is in his library, easing his conscience by copious libations from his favorite bottle. "Kansas," a burglar, enters, and is soon cowering before the muzzle of Buchanan's gun.

Then a strange compact goes into effect. Buchanan declares that he will give "Kansas" a thousand dollars if he may disappear with the tramp and share the life of a nomad. Buchanan's wife goes to Europe after setting every agency at work to discover her husband. In this task Harry Faring, the man she loves, gives his aid. Finally Mrs. Buchanan is called back from Europe to identify a corpse that is supposed to be the remains of her husband. This identification she gives and soon thereafter becomes Mrs. Faring.

In the early months of her new happiness all goes well until Buchanan, guided by "Kansas," turns up an emaciated, mental and physical derelict. "Kansas" uses Buchanan as a means to blackmail and is well on the way to fortune when Buchanan dies and frees the Farings from the menace to their happiness. That's a short cut through the story. The picture was made from a novel by Justus Miles Forman.

There is an exacting role for Miss Pearson and she plays it well.

Mr. MacDermott, however, attracts to himself the principal interest. Despite a role that is disagreeable in its conception this fine actor makes Buchanan a subject of sympathy and concern. In the transition from a well-bred (although distasteful) gentleman to the human wreck he becomes through the brutal conduct of his traveling companion, the art of make-up is expounded to the last degree. Two entirely different types of men are played by Mr. MacDermott—each as separate and distinct as though they were each carried by individual players.

"Buchanan's Wife" is a drama of tense interest and will give complete satisfaction to the more intelligent class of "fans," and for the others there is enough of keen force and genuine drama in the presentation to make the release a most desirable attraction for practically all audiences.

"INDEPENDENCE B'GOSH"

Paramount-Flagg Comedy Starring Olin Howland and Florence Dixon Has Abundant Humor.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

JAMES MONTGOMERY FLAGG calls his latest Paramount-Flagg two-reel picture a satirical comedy. Its plot is simple, but effective, and it is capitally acted by Olin Howard, Florence Dixon, Joseph Burke and Florida Kingsley. Horatio Whiffle, a hard-working farmer in Maine, is left an enormous fortune by an uncle. Horatio and his wife determine to see the world and spend the money. The neighbors all storm the house and offer advice. It is then that Horatio uses the expression that gives the story its title. From then on he and his wife are going to be independent of everything—especially work.

As the first move in this direction, Horatio hires Sam Jenkins, the village cute chap, as his valet, and engages Lily Bascomb, a pretty young girl, to wait on his wife. He next invests in one of Hen Ford's old reliables, and the party starts for a swell summer hotel.

The landlord does not like the looks of Horatio and his ensemble, so the new millionaire buys the hotel and takes possession. The doings of the Whiffle party have a regular George Ade flavor. They all get inside of stylish clothes and go in strong for the social fling. Sam and Lily enjoy themselves hugely, but the old couple find that a steady round of pleasure in tight shoes is all fired wearin' on their nerves as well as on their feet.

Driven to desert the whole thing, Horatio starts quietly for home and his old feed bag. As he enters the front door his wife sneaks in quietly by way of the kitchen. Both heave a sigh of relief, pull off their tight shoes and settle down to their brand of enjoyment. Sam and Lily are given a check for $50,000, and spend a dollar of it for a marriage license.

"TWO-GUN BETTY"

Bessie Barriscale in Well-Made Comedy Produced by Robert Brunton and Distributed by W. W. Hodkinson.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT ISN'T so much what you do, it's the way you do it, is exemplified in "Two-Gun Betty," a five-part picture written and directed by Howard Hickman and presented by Robert Brunton, with Bessie Barriscale as its lively and attractive heroine. The story is frankly farcical, and no one is going to believe anything like it ever happened. Taken at its real worth, it affords an hour and a quarter of clean fun, and there is just enough of the spirit of romance in the air to satisfy the young at heart. Once satisfied to settle back in his seat and see how the author works out his plot, the spectator will discover that careful direction, a capable cast and the humorous acting of the star carry the story over the doubtful places and supply him with many hearty laughs.

The scene where Bessie Barriscale hotfoots it around and around a barnyard at the end of a rope which is attached to the neck of a young gentleman cow is right comic an' powerful amusin', as the gifted young men who write the western story subtitles might say. Bessie is also as cute and cunning a cowboy as ever sat up all night trying to learn how to roll a cigarette.

The why and wherefor of Betty Craig, in the person of Bessie Barriscale, and her right to wearing sheepskin bloomers, is set forth in this wise: Betty has a chum whose brother owns a ranch out West. Learning that he is short of cow punchers, Betty makes a wager that she can pass as a man and land a job. She buys a complete cowboy outfit, and the party start for Jack Kennedy's place. All are made welcome, but Bessie loses her bet. One glance at the pocket-edition cowboy's plump and pleasing person, and Jack and his ranch hands know that the proper way to address the new recruit is "Yes, miss."

With true western chivalry, they allow the little chap to think he, or she, is fooling them. Jack then lays out a line of experience for the new hand that will make things pleasant, but strenuous, for some time to come. Betty sets in at a poker game, but turns the tables on the old-timers by having a large streak of beginner's luck. A wild night at a previously staged bar-room free-for-all fight and a real adventure with cattle thieves winds up Betty's masquerade. She is finally persuaded by Jack to stay at the ranch as its mistress.

L. C. Shumway, Catherine Van Buren and Albert Cody are the leading members of the supporting company.

"LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE"

Pioneer Presents Six-Reel Selig Production of Riley's Great Child Poem.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT would be hard to think of a stronger subject of juvenile appeal than the immortal child-poem of "Little Orphan Annie," by James Whitcomb Riley, but it startled even a case-hardened critic to see what could be made of such material in a moving picture. It is all there, the delicate sentiment, the smiles and tears, and the whimsical dream child, Annie, herself. Even the good poet, Riley, is included. He leads off the film, reciting a few lines of the poem, and is then pictured surrounded by a group of children he loved so well. The poem, as it is recited in subtitles throughout the production, comes from the lips of Riley.

Little Orphan Annie is portrayed by Colleen Moore, who has previously appeared in pictures of this type with success. Her rendition of this role is thoroughly delightful, and the elves and "Bobbluns" and witches and fairies seem to come at her bidding. Thomas Santchi appears as the hero, Dave, who goes to war and is killed at the close.

The production not only tells the story of Annie herself, but also pictures many of the tales she tells the children. This has been accomplished by a liberal use of visions and trick photography. Everything has been done with a view to delighting childish observers, and the number will undoubtedly prove a big hit at matinees especially. There are many juveniles in the story, both at the Orphan asylum where Annie was reared and later in the home of Squire Goode and his wife.

The offering as a whole is one that should have universal appeal among women and children, and we think men will like it as well.

"HYDE & SEEK DETECTIVES"

A Paramount-Mack Sennett Farce.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT IS not to be expected that the ingenuity and fun-making ability of Sennett will always flow in a torrent, though the font has seemed inexhaustible at times, but he manages to introduce some new features in each release, even if compelled to rely on older situations for his rough and tumble style of production. Turpin and Lynn have the title role in this parody on the detective story, but the big part in action goes to strong Tom Kennedy, whose feats constitute the amazing part of the farce. Exaggeration that it is, there is some humor, and it is to be hoped that the human element, that of characterization, will broaden in future releases. There is not enough of it, and almost too much activity by trick work with the camera for a modern audience. There is, however, plenty of material in the farce for good laughs.

"TOO FAT TO FIGHT"

Goldwyn Releases a Bright and Humanizing Comedy of War Service by Rex Beach.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

LIKE other Rex Beach productions, "Too Fat to Fight" is admirably typed, each role gaining significance from its interpreter, the leads by Frank McIntyre and Florence Dixon being particularly fortuitous in this respect; the subject matter is vital and the material finely constructed, but audience interest is most stimulated by some of the brightest and most effective subtitles ever shown on the screen, and by a tender and humanizing spirit which pervades the production. The latter is felt deeply at intervals. The soul of the story is unmistakably manly, humorous and kindly, typically American, without theatricalism, affecting to those hearts are really and wholly American.

The story contrasts our first easy-going indifference to world events with the splendid spirit which gradually grew in our hearts, even in cold hearts and base ones, under the inspiring influence of nobly conceived ideals and their application to common suffering, yet this is skillfully masked beneath the comical adventures of a very fat patriot who wanted to get into the fight and could not do so, who was even rejected by the "Y" on account of uncertain morals until he utilized a pull to enter war service. That he displayed heroism is not astonishing, but the story does not furnish him with advantageous opportunity to show it—a weakness which makes the ending rather commonplace—but interest in its career is of minor importance where there is an evident intention to show the big and broadening effect of war upon those leading idle, aimless and almost useless lives. The author strives for this effect above all things, and he gets it. His sincerity compels it.

A large audience at the Rialto enjoyed the comedy throughout, and other audiences will do the same in spite of its many technical mistakes and the absence as to the outcome. It is heart-warming, kindly, sympathetic and humorous, the latter in a high degree—an American story.

"FUSS AND FEATHERS"

Enid Bennett In Thomas H. Ince Supervised Paramount Picture of Regulation Standard.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

YOUTHFUL charm and the change from life in a humble shack to the fuss and feathers of affluence, are conditions that always attract the public. The girlishness of Enid Bennett and her experiences as the heroine of the Paramount production, "Fuss and Feathers," give the picture a firm hold on the approbation of the followers of this pretty young actress. Written by Julien Josephson and directed by Fred Niblo, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, the story is of the comedy-drama variety that is intended only to entertain. Much of its material is conventional, but the director has helped it out by sound judgment. The acting of the star and her support is also in its favor. The women and children will vote it pleasing and find the fortunes of Susie Baldwin uncommonly engaging romance.

When Peter Baldwin strikes it rich, after prospecting for gold all his life, he locks up the old shack and Susie and starts for San Francisco. The man who takes his "find" off his hands for two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is Martin Ledyard, a wealthy mining investor. Robert Ledyard, his son, having just been expelled from college, returns home to be coddled by his mother and be told by the elder Ledyard to go out and earn his own living or go hungry. Robert accepts the situation, but doesn't make good. A large roll of bills, given to him secretly by his mother, starts him off on another turn at gay living.

Sue and her father are partners. By the girl's advice they hire a pair of teachers of fancy manners as soon as she realizes the limited supply of the article possessed by both. The new teachers are crooks. Pete resents the male crook's treatment of him and throws him and his female accomplice out of the house. Stanton, the crook, robs and beats young Ledyard and leaves him on the road. He is rescued by Susie and taken to her home. Pete hires the boy as Susie's etiquette teacher after he recovers, and the young people fall in love. The parental Ledyards object to Susie, but change their minds when they learn she saved their son's life during an attempt by Stanton to rob the Baldwin house.

Enid Bennett is cleverly supported by Douglas MacLean as Robert, John P. Lockney as Pete Baldwin, Charles French as Martin Ledyard, Sylvia Ashton as Mrs. Ledyard, and Robert McKim as J. Wells Stanton.

"A PAIR OF RAINBOWS"

Two Comedies Produced by the United States Motion Picture Corporation Are Fairly Amusing.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE titles of two Rainbow comedies just released by the United States Motion Picture Corporation are "Some Judge" and "Nearly a Slacker." Lilian Vera and Eddie Bouldon are the leading players in both pictures, which are one reel in length and were directed by Joseph Richmond. The stories are straight comedy, the subjects are clean and their entertaining qualities, while not at all remarkable, will appeal to the not overcritical.

"Some Judge" relates to the private trials of a young chap who has managed to have himself elected or appointed a judge and who uses his position to make his future father-in-law listen to reason after the old gentleman has refused to let his daughter marry the man of her choice. Father-in-law breaks the liquor law in company with a bunch of chorus girls. The judge finds it out and has him brought into court. When he realizes the situation, the prisoner is ready to say "Heaven bless you, my children."

"Nearly a Slacker" concerns a young chap who is kept under his mother-in-law's thumb until he joins the army. The sight of him in uniform works a welcome change in his domestic arrangements, both his wife and her mother being eager to wait upon the coming hero. The entire cast of both pictures apply themselves earnestly to their tasks. General Film Company distributes the subjects.

"WIVES AND OTHER WIVES"

Five-Reel American-Pathe Subject Presents Fairly Strong Farce Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel offering, "Wives and Other Wives," begins with the matrimonial affairs of Geoffrey and Robin Challoner, a temperamental pair of newlyweds who reside in an apartment house. The wife and husband get into a quarrel over some mysterious letters and the young husband leaves in high dudgeon. Later Mr. Craig, another young married man, enters the Challoner apartments by mistake, and Mrs. Challoner, thinking him a burglar, shoots at him. Mr. Craig faints from fright, but is unhurt. His wife, however, searches for him and finds him in the Challoner rooms.

The opening situations are attractively pictured and done in the manner of light comedy. Later developments, however, take a farcical turn. The scene changes to a country house, where a friend of all parties is entertaining. The developments are those usually found in farce-comedies. Jealousy crops out between the Challoners and Craigs, and there is a general mixup in the rooms. This would have been more amusing if there had been more suspense. The fake theft of jewels planned by Doubleday and his wife might have been handled to better advantage, it seemed. There are a number of incidents that will provoke laughter, but the effect of the whole is not particularly strong.

Mary Miles Minter is very charming in the leading role, and the cast is generally agreeable, though stronger character touches here and there would have helped the story. In the supporting cast are Colin Chase, George Periolat, William Garwood and Margaret Shelby.

The story was written by Stephen Fox and directed by Lloyd Ingraham. The settings are generally attractive.

"THE ZERO HOUR"

Five-Reel World Picture Features June Elvidge In Entertaining Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel World picture, "The Zero Hour," written by the late Paul West, and directed by Travers Vale, tells a bright, entertaining story. It deals with fake spiritualism, the hero being a prosecuting attorney interested in bringing the bogus practitioners to justice. The plot is quite novel and holds the attention closely. The close is not as strong as the action in the first four reels, but this will not seriously impair the value of the subject.

June Elvidge plays a double role, that of two sisters, Fanny and Evelyn Craig, stepdaughters of a believer in spiritualism named Micah Parrish. Miss Elvidge differentiates the two girls in good fashion, portraying admirably the light, frivolous character of Evelyn and the thoughtful, serious ways of Fanny. There is never a moment when the two sisters become confused in the minds of the observer, and this aids immensely in the plot interest.

The villain of the story is Esau Brand, well presented by Armand Kalisz. Brand is an out-and-out fake clairvoyant, and he induces the stepfather of the two girls to appear at a seance as the deceased husband of Mrs. Taunton, mother of the hero, Bruce Taunton. The shock of seeing what she thinks is the spirit of her husband is so great that Mrs. Taunton dies at the seance. Bruce then vows to clean out the fakers. He afterward falls in love with Fanny Craig, who becomes his secretary after quarreling with her sister and stepfather over their spiritualistic practices.

Frank Mayo is cast in the role of the hero. Others appearing are Henry Warwick, Grace Henderson, Clio Ayers, Nora Cecil, Dorothy Walters and Reginald Carrington.

"THE DAWN OF UNDERSTANDING"

Bessie Love Scores in Vitagraph Production of '49 Story by Bret Harte.

THERE are a number of original twists to the Bret Harte story, "The Dawn of Understanding," produced by the Vitagraph Company, with Bessie Love as a forlorn little heroine who creates happiness for others and for herself in spite of her lowly position in life. In most particulars the production is a good one, and this tale of the West in '49 will prove reasonably entertaining to the average picture patron.

Bret Harte's ability to reproduce the life of the frontier in the days when the prairie-schooners were headed for California, guarantees the spectator correctly drawn characters and a well-devised plot. Dave Smith, the director of the picture, has handled the scenes with considerable skill, and the cast does its allotment cleverly. Bessie Love, whose style of acting is mostly her own and whose personality is nicely adapted to the unpolished gems of girlhood, plays Sue Prescott excellently and adds a humorous strain at every possible opportunity.

Sue is traveling west in her father's prairie-schooner at the opening of the story. Her mother dies when they are near the ranch of Ira Beasley, and Sue refuses to leave the grave. The schooner goes on and the girl becomc a member of Ira's household. The young fellow is a silent, brooding sort of chap, but he soon falls in love with Sue. She does not really understand her feelings toward him until a series of accidents puts Ira's life in danger

Jim Wynd, a handsome circus performer whose vices are only limited by his inclinations, kills the proprietor of the circus in a brawl over a card game, and makes his escape. He reaches the Beasley ranch and Sue hides him when the sheriff follows the murderer. As a consequence, Jim shoots the officer, and Ira is convicted of the crime He is about to be lynched when Sue's testimony saves him. Sue goes back to the ranch as Ira's promised wife. Jack Gilbert, Frank Glendon and George A. Williams lead the support.

"A PERFECT LADY"

Goldwyn Picture Starring Madge Kennedy an Amusing Story of a Burlesque Queen.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ANOTHER union of the church and the stage takes place in the Goldwyn picture, "A Perfect Lady," adapted from a stage play by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, the star being Madge Kennedy. The story does not contain any surprises for the moving picture fan, but it is capitally acted, and the director, Clarence G. Badger, has introduced considerable extra clever comedy business. The authors call it a satirical comedy, and have shot their arrows of ridicule at small town narrow-mindedness.

The heroine is a burlesque queen of such excellent habits that she has every right to call herself a perfect lady. Left stranded in the town of Sycamore, Lucille LeJambon, whose real name is Lucy Higgins, opens an ice cream parlor and dance hall combined. Here she teaches the young people the latest dances until a church committee headed by Deacon John Griswold descends upon the place and denounces Lucille and all her works.

The Rev. David Grayling, pastor of the church, has already made Lucille's acquaintance and satisfied himself that her character is all any prospective lover could ask. He also learns that she joined the burlesque troupe and opened the dance hall so that she might earn the money to educate her younger sister. The minister, therefore, refuses to back up his church members, and they are terribly shocked when he is discovered making love to the girl.

Her sister, Claire, arrives on the scene with more trouble for the deacon. His son, Bob, is engaged to Claire. The elder Griswold storms and rages, and casts off the boy, but is brought to terms when Lucille obtains a film showing the old fraud on a gay lark with a Chicago burlesque lady and exhibits it before tho minister and the leading citizens of Sycamore.

The boy and Claire get a marriage license that very day, and Lucille and tho minister admit that they intend to follow the other couple's example. Madge Kennedy makes Lucille possible, and it is easy to understand why the minister proposed to her while they sat on the bank of the river and half of the congregation peeped through the fence. Jere Austin as the Rev. David Grayling, Walter Law as John Griswold, Rod Laiock as Bob, Ben Hendricks, Sr., as Sam Lipman, Harry Spingler as Bert Snyder, Agnes Mare as Flossie Day, and Mae McAdoy as Claire complete the excellent supporting cast. Photographed skillfully by Marcel A. Le Picarde.

"REBUILDING BROKEN LIVES"

America's Red Cross War Work Film Illustrates a Marvelous Achievement.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A ONE-REEL picture, entitled "Rebuilding Broken Lives," and showing how wounded soldiers in France are prepared to renew the battles of life, has been completed by the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures, W. E. Waddell, director, and is being distributed by the General Film Company. It constitutes the first episode of a series of films on the war and its aftermath. Last week the episode was shown at the Palace Theatre, New York City. Aside from being wonderfully instructive, it was among the most entertaining features of the program.

Everyone is familiar with the determination of the Red Cross to supply, in all possible cases, the maimed soldiers of France and her Allies with artificial arms and legs of so efficient a pattern that the brave men need not be dependent on the charity of their governments, but could earn their own living. "Rebuilding Broken Lives" is a fitting title for the work the organization is accomplishing. To see men with both arms cut off at the shoulder doing various kinds of farm work or engaged in some mechanical pursuit, after being supplied with artificial members, and showing surprising quickness and skill, is to commence to appreciate the importance of the efforts of the Red Cross in this branch of their noble activities.

Dozens of different cases are shown and explained with perfect clearness. An artificial hand with fingers that are opened and closed by the muscles of the wearer's back is one of the almost unbelievable inventions. It is evident that some of the finest inventive minds in the world have been engaged in helping the crippled heroes to become useful and happy, and to look the future in the face as bravely as they marched up to the German battle-line.

"THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS"

Billie Rhodes Shines as Star of Mountain Story Released by Exhibitors' Mutual.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

FOR its initial release on the program of the Exhibitor's Mutual Distributing Corporation, the Robertson-Cole Company offers "The Girl of My Dreams." This is also the initial starring appearance of Billie Rhodes in a feature, although she is well and favorably known for her work in short comedies.

It is an entertaining production, founded on a play by Wilbur Nesbit, and tells a pretty little story of a mountain girl raised by adopted parents, her father having deserted her mother many years before the story opens. The girl meets a young man, a victim of an automobile accident, and seeks to comfort him. Later she visits him and in his delirium he calls for her. After recovering, he finally locates the girl, who has been adopted by a wealthy old grouch who turns out to be her grandfather.

Billie Rhodes is delightful as the girl. Not only has she an attractive personality, but her work throughout the production should mark her as a popular favorite. There are many beautiful and artistic scenes throughout the picture, several of which, in two different reels, show the star clad in nature's garb bathing in a mountain stream. However, they have been delicately handled and should not prove offensive to a majority of the spectators.

One feature which many may not like is where the "villain," ignorant of the fact that he is the girl's father, sneaks a snapshot of her while she is in bathing, enlarges and presents it to his club during a boisterous banquet, and, on returning home, attempts to enter the girl's room. The facts concerning the girl's parentage have, however, already been revealed to the audience.

William Chaudet, who directed the production for the National Film Corporation of America, has provided some particularly good scenes of a storm in the mountains, including a landslide which buries the cabin in which the girl lives. Revealing the fact of the girl's parentage early in the picture, however, adversely affects the dramatic quality, and the hero is shown as suffering very slight injuries considering the terrible roll down the hillside in an auto. Taking it as a whole, notwithstanding the lack of suspense, this production will no doubt prove a pleasing attraction for the average house.

The remainder of the cast, including Leo Pierson as the hero, Frank MacQuarrie as the adopted father, Lamar Johnston as the real father and Golda Mawden as his sister, with Jack MacDonald as the grouch, softened by the star's affection, all acquit themselves creditably. The photographic work of Walter Griffin and the work of Art Director Martin Donor are well up to standard.

THREE RED CROSS PICTURES.

They Are Interesting, Patriotic and Highly Instructive Releases.

"Kiddies of No Man's Land."

THIS one-reel subject is a revelation of what is being done in the way of caring for French orphans, but it is far more than that in its suggestion of Government parenthood, and it has the merit of presenting the subject matter delightfully, both as to actors and settings. Most happily chosen and diversified are backgrounds of magnificent chateaux and ancient convents, in addition to the inevitable ruins, the latter too much of an eyesore from monotonous repetition and devoid of artistic charm. The best of these views of the future manhood and womanhood of France, now rescued from the horrors of war and easily reverting to the play instinct of childhood, are scenes of happiness, not those which wring the heart, but they are nevertheless impressive, especially when one glimpes the enormous number of little ones brought back to normal health and happiness through magnificent humanitarion work done by the American Red Cross workers. These are pictures which women and children may enjoy, cheering evidences of our own warm-heartedness, and to the wisest of either sex they suggest the possibility of giving such intelligent care to children of overburdened poor in our own land. They rank high in entertainment, instruction and inspiration.

"Serbia Victorious."

Though less inspiring and more conventional, this one-reel release contains some remarkable views of a little-known people and country, especially those picturesque ones taken from an airplane. Camera work in latter case is exceptionally fine, giving the spectator a first glimpse ever shown on the screen of the Serbian country and of famed Mount Olympus, home of the Gods, just now without a tenant. There is also a lot of adventurous work done by the cameraman in picturing scenes of battle and the Bulgarian trenches. For the rest, the views of military action and transport afford little variety. They are instructive in that they are characteristically Serbian and accurately done. To them are added some informing subtitles, and the release, as a whole, constitutes a contribution to worth-while and vital history. Two Americans from Chicago undertook this work as war service and donated the film to the Red Cross Society.

"The Greatest Gift."

This is a three-reel subject contributed to the Red Cross War Bureau by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It is a figurative treatment of the Good Samaritan idea in a series of episodes beginning with the compassion of a great Egyptian ruler, followed by one of Hindu origin, and tho Parable of the Good Samaritan as taken from the Bible. These are followed by an allegory of the "Gifts of God," and then some modern scenes, "The Belgian Village," "Christmas in the Tenement" and "Christmas in the Base Hospital," an ambitious attempt to enforce the beauty and nobility of human compassion. The allegory is remarkable chiefly for the pains taken to set forth these disconnected episodes convincingly and to unite them in what is little less than an illustrated sermon, but it is lacking in originality of conception and artistry of treatment, least convincing where it is most theatrical. The purpose, however, is manifestly one of kindness, and there are touches of warmth in the purely human picture of Christmas in the Tenement. Its weakest spot is the attempt to enforce modern enlightenment by ancient example, especially in those dark periods whose brutality overwhelmed occasional spurts of progress. The greatest mobility of character ever known in all the ages is that of the Twentieth Century, shown in war service by the Red Cross since 1914.

"THE COMMON CAUSE"

J. Stuart Blackton's War Drama Has Many Entertaining Qualities.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FASHIONED after the J. Hartley Manners and Ian Hay Beith stage play, "Getting Together," J. Stuart Blackton's war drama, "The Common Cause," brings to the screen a picture in which the thrills are often expertly devised and the laughs never miss fire. The story has many entertaining qualities, abundant vitality being one of its prominent merits. Its complications are few and easily followed, and the serious motives are offset by a number of comic scenes that will start a barrage of chuckles every time one of them is shown. To-morrow, next year or ten years from now the humor of Tommy Atkins and his French chum will still be fresh and appetizing. The mass of moving picture patrons who go to the theatre solely to be entertained and amused have a treat in store.

After opening with the most impressive prologue—impressive both by its significance and its artistic excellence—ever given a war drama, "The Common Cause" gets down to brass tacks, as the saying has it, and scorns no means, however lowly, to build up its dramatic situations and add to its always honest if obvious merriment.

At times some of the business smacks of the overdone melodrama of the old popular priced theatre, and a more direct method of arriving at the climaxes of several of the big scenes would tighten up the suspense. There is an evident determination, however, on the part of the producer to employ every means in his power to insure correct atmosphere and adequate portrayal of the men and women of the story. The scenes of soldiers in battle are simulated with convincing realism, and the reproduction of comparatively normal life in a French village before and after an attack is equally well done.

The hand of the experienced dramatist is shown in the directness of the story and the effective intermingling of its comic relief. Orrin Palmer and his wife have drifted apart before the picture begins, and Mrs. Palmer is carrying on a flirtation with Edward Wadsworth. This episode is only slightly developed, but both Palmer and his wife seem to sensible not to have adjusted matters before they had gone too far. A separation follows, just before the United States enters the war. Mrs. Palmer is among the first to offer her services, and her husband and Wadsworth secure commissions in regiments that reach the front at about the same time. New thoughts and aspirations are born in them, the baptism of fire that all three pass through drives out every unworthy desire, and, after deeds of heroism are performed by the trio, husband and wife are reunited by the man who once sought to part them forever.

The comedy plot deserves a paragraph by itself. It is another case of the eternal triangle. The three persons that compose it are a British Tommy, a poilu and a saucy tavern maid. Lawrence Grossmith, who plays the British soldier, is the biggest individual factor in the story's popular appeal. He is so human and likeable, and his humor is so unforced and rich, there is no resisting him. Philip Van Loan and Mlle. Marcel give the stamp of authentic characterization to the remaining sides of the triangle.

Herbert Rawlinson as Orrin Palmer, Sylvia Breamer as his wife and Huntley Gordon as Edward Wadsworth maintain their places firmly at the head of the cast. Charles and Violet Blackton are interesting as little refugees, and Louis Dean is sufficiently repulsive as one of the worst type of German general.

The characters in the prologue and epilogue are taken by Effie Shannon, Irene Castle, Violet Heming, Julia Arthur and Marjorie Rambeau. It is hardly necessary to add that the high standard reached by the opening and closing incidents of the story could not have been accomplished without the measure of these distinguished players' well tried art.

"DANGER—GO SLOW!"

Mae Murray Featured in Five-Reel Universal Special Subject of Amusing Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MAE MURRAY has never done anything better or more interesting in moving picture than her work in this subject, "Danger—Go Slow." Her creation of the character of Muggsy is a human and fascinating bit of work; seldom has a girl in boys' clothes carried off the deception so well. Later, when she assumes her character as a girl, the interest is well sustained, though the plot developments are of an improbable sort. Even with a pronounced lack of plausibility in the later incidents, however, the story may be put down as abundantly entertaining. It has humor and pathos and some excellent character work, and should have very general appeal.

The opening scenes depict a raid of the police on a gang of New York crooks, of which Muggsy and the hero, known as "Jimmy-the-Eel," are members. Jimmy is captured, but Muggsy escapes, and rides in a box car to the village of Cottonville. Here she falls in with typical village life, and in due time meets the mother of Jimmy, who keeps a light burning every night for her wandering boy. There is a genuine heart interest in this portion of the story. The later events are of a more humorous character, and at times border on burlesque. Muggsy's blackmailing of the grasping Judge Cotton is excellently staged, and the manner in which she buncos Bud, the village Adonis, is very funny, though incredible. The story as a whole is structurally faulty, but put over by excellent acting.

Robert Leonard wrote and produced the story, assisted by Mae Murray. Others in the cast are Jack Mulhall, Joseph Girard and Lon Chaney.

"SET FREE"

Edith Roberts Featured in Five-Reel Bluebird Offering of Delicate Comedy Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

EDITH ROBERTS plays with animation the principal role in this five-reel Bluebird subject entitled "Set Free." She has the part of a girl named Roma, who conceives the idea that she has gypsy blood in her veins, and sets out upon the open road to take her chances with life.

The conception as a whole is one of delicate humor of the best sort, though it cannot be called a big story in any sense of the word, as there are few plot complications and but little drama. It carries the interest along from scene to scene in a pleasant sort of way. The plot, which was devised by James P. Poland, is too incredible in spots to carry the illusion of reality, though it serves to amuse in its way.

The story opens on some pleasing home scenes, with Roma and her aunt living in an aristocratic old house. The girl is just at the age when romance begins to beckon and time hangs heavily on her hands. Her aunt is unexperienced in the world, and inclined to be too careful with the girl, whose romping ways annoy her. She finally tells Roma she is convinced her grandmother had gypsy blood in her veins. This sets the girl to thinking, and she finally runs away, attired in highly colored clothing, with a scarf about her head. Her journey takes her to the city, where she is accused of being Gypsy Nan, a badly wanted thief. A Mrs. Roberts and her son, John, befriend the girl, and take her to their home. The son, who is a book worm, falls in love with Roma, and her desire for adventure finally awakens similar feelings in himself. The organization of a gypsy band and the subsequent bank robbery bring the story to a close.

Harry Hilliard plays the role of the lover, and others in the cast are Harold Goodwin, Molly McConnel and Blanche Gray. The scenario was written by Rex Taylor, and Tod Browning directed.

"GOOD-BYE, BILL"

John Emerson-Anita Loos Production Starring Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT IS a trifle difficult to classify "Good-Bye, Bill." This John Emerson-Anita Loos production is a novelty on the Paramount program. The story contains two distinct plots, one being written and acted in the spirit of frank burlesque. The other plot has to do with the love affair of the hero and heroine, and is handled in all seriousness. The burlesque has William Hohenzollern, before he stubbed his toe and fell off his throne, as its principal character, and it may be said of Bill that he dominates the picture. Even Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex are overshadowed by him.

The ordinary standards of measurement cannot be applied to "Good-Bye, Bill." Its humor is often of the Keystone Comedy variety, and Anita Loos has turned all her powers of ridicule on the unwelcome guest now being entertained by Holland. Both in subject-matter and titles she has employed her keen wit to show the hollowness and sham of the German court. There are many laughs in the picture, but all the serious moments seem out of place. Admirers of Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex will wonder at their lack of opportunities, and contrast the picture with "Come On In."

A "Mustache Fixer," invented by Herr Dresser, of West Hoboken, starts all the trouble. Dresser is taken to Berlin to show his wonderful discovery to the Kaiser, and his daughter Elsie goes with him. Teddy Swift, her young man, left in New Jersey, tries every means to earn the money to take him to Germany. When the United States takes a hand, Teddy enlists at once and is among the first of the troops to get into Berlin. According to history, as written by Anita, before the Kaiser had time to sneak away Teddy and a squad of Uncle Sam's doughboys called upon Wilhelm in his palace and ran him out of the place. "Good-Bye, Bill" is well produced.

"HITTING THE HIGH SPOTS"

Bert Lytell, Star of Stirring Metro, Mixing Oil and Love in Equal Parts.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE film fan who likes happy endings following the obvious outcome of a predestined plot will have in "Hitting the High Spots" a picture that will delight them. From start to finish there is no likelihood of the hero marrying any girl but the fair heroine; and by that same token the girl could make no other choice of a husband.

Good entertainment comes from the showing of this latest Bert Lytell offering. The star plays a clean-cut role and does it well. His supporting company is well selected, and the picture has the benefit of excellent direction. When the story runs into Mexico, where an American capitalist has a make-or-break investment in an oil concession, stirring action keeps the spectator tensely interested. Here excellent "types" predominate, and the illusion of strife and combat is well sustained.

Mr. Lytell does what he sets forth to do —sticks on the job until the father of the girl he loves gains the desired patent to his oil concession. Then the hero returns to the girl who loves him, and the much-desired "happy ending" is accomplished. "Hitting the High Spots" will satisfy completely the great majority of photoplay enthusiasts. It is one of a class of pictures that may be fully accepted on the distributor's recommendation. Its exhibition will benefit the showmen because it will please most of its audiences.

"THE MAN WHO WOULDN'T TELL"

Earle Williams and Grace Darmond in Vitagraph Romance of Love and War.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ECHOES from the world conflict occur in "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," a five-part Vitagraph picture directed by James Young, and featuring Earle Williams and Grace Darmond. The author of the story is Bess Meredyth. Her hero is Hawtrey Burke, a young Englishman on a visit to this country, whose only apparent occupation is attempting to make love to Elinor Warden, a countrywoman of his who has been a nurse in Belgium and looks upon Burke as a slacker. In reality the Englishman is on secret service for his Government, and Elinor's brother, Dudley, is under his command. They are engaged in watching a German spy named Eric Werner, who is paying them the same compliment.

Young Warden, while obeying Burke's instructions, becomes involved in the murder of Joseph Fuhrmann, a shipping agent who was secretly working against the Allies. The boy is arrested and put on trial, and Burke dare not testify in his defense. Fearing that Dudley will disclose damaging evidence against his cause, Werner has the electric light shut off in the courtroom and shoots the prisoner. This novel bit of invention creates considerable excitement, and Werner takes advantage of the confusion to try to fasten the shooting on the hero. A revolver is found on the floor, and everyone in the room is finger-printed. Burke's fingermarks correspond to those on the revolver, but it is shown that he did not fire the shot.

After the United States enters the war, the arrival in this country of a British High Commission permits Burke to attend a reception attired in a Colonel's uniform, the Victoria Cross among his other medals, and to have himself announced as a peer of England. Elinor's happiness commences at once.

The picture measures up to the sort of story Earle Williams does best. Grace Darmond, Charles Speer and Edward Cecil create a favorable impression.

COMMENTS

General Film Company.

REBUILDING BROKEN LIVES (Red Cross).—First episode of American Red Cross series, showing the work of supplying crippled soldiers with remarkable artificial limbs, this one-reel picture is absorbingly instructive. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Argosy Film Company.

AFTER THE WAR (Argosy).—Grace Cunard is starred in a drama of force and action, presenting a problem resulting from the war. There is a child born of brute force who lives to try its mother's soul and to finally cause the death of its father at the hands of a vengeful wife. The cast of players is of unusual excellence, including Edward Cecil, Herbert Pryor, Harry Carter, Dora Rogers, Gretchen Leaderer, Gertrude Aster—all names familiar to screen fans who have admired them in many films.

Educational Films Corporation.

A WEE BIT ODD (Educational Films Corporation).—A Robert C. Bruce scenic study of some unusual views of nature and of the interesting part played by living creatures in odd phases of existence.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

MY COUSIN (Paramount).—Enrico Caruso is shown in dual roles, one a great opera singer, the other his poor cousin, both parts played with masterly skill. In the matter of characterization alone, this release will hold intelligent audiences, and the view given by the great artist of his own nature is fascinating enough to carry the release to high popularity. Reviewed in last week's issue.

WHOSE LITTLE WIFE ARE YOU (Paramount-Mack Sennett).—A farce on familiar Sennett lines, with some amusing performances of domesticated animals.

HYDE & SEEK, DETECTIVES (Paramount-Mack Sennett).—A farcical presentation of Turpin and Lynn in the roles of detectives, very swift in action, but lacking in true humorous situations. Plenty of rough and tumble action and some laughs.

FUSS AND FEATHERS (Paramount-Ince).—Enid Bennett is the star of this five-part comedy-drama, directed by Fred Niblo. It tells the story of the heroine's sudden rise from poverty to riches, and is on a level with the other Bennett releases. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

INDEPENDENT, B'GOSH (Paramount-Flagg).—James Montgomery Flagg is the author of this two-reel comedy starring Olin Howland and Florence Dixon. Its humor is continuous and full-flavored, and it is excellently played. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

BUCHANAN'S WIFE (Fox).—Virginia Pearson is the star, but Marc McDermott as the prime mover in an unfolding drama of tense interest. Exhibitors will have in this attraction a play that will suit a vast majority of "fans" and serve to strengthen a theatre in the esteem of its patrons. The Fox press-work gives everything to the star (probably a matter of business policy), but the wise exhibitor will feature Marc McDermott and capitalize a fine reputation gained through many years of prominence on the screen.

Frohman Amusement Corporation.

ONCE TO EVERY MAN (Sherrill).—Jack Sherrill and Mabel Withee are starred by William L. Sherrill, of the Frohman Amusement Company, in a rugged drama of human interest in which a young man makes a fight against appetite and wins, not alone his personal fight, but wins the girl he loves through his victory in the prize ring. Jack Sherrill and Mabel Withee are co-stars in a photodrama that T. Hayes Hunter has directed to the best possible advantage. Strong, rugged entertainment is sure to follow presentations of this interesting picture. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

THE HELL CAT (Goldwyn).—Geraldine Farrar acts a new type of western heroine in this intensely dramatic five-part picture. It was written by Willard Mack, and has been artistically produced under the direction of Reginald Barker. A longer review was published in last week's issue.

TOO FAT TO FIGHT (Goldwyn).—A Rex Beach comedy of war service, very bright and humorous in subtitles and action, with notes of pathos and a deep, humanizing spirit, thoroughly American, pervading it all.

A PERFECT LADY (Goldwyn).—Madge Kennedy fits in perfectly as the heroine of this five-part comedy-drama with a burlesque queen and a country minister for its leading characters. The story is amusing. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE DAWN OF UNDERSTANDING (Vitagraph).—Adapted from a story by Bret Harte and featuring Bessie Love, this five-reel picture is well produced and acted. It is a tale of the days of '49. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

FIERY FATE (Vitagraph).—The sixth episode of the Vitagraph serial of circus life shows Bert's and Edith's escape from being drowned by the rising tide. They are freed by three outlaws and taken to a deserted island and held for ransom. After some startling adventures in an airplane, the two manage to get back to the circus. Live action is still the pacemaker of the story. Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway are as effective as ever.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

TWO-GUN BETTY (Brunton).—Written and directed by Howard Hickman, and starring Bessie Barriscale, this five-reel picture is good romance and better fun. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE TESTING OF MILDRED VANE (Metro).—A strong five-reel subject, adapted by George D. Baker from a story by Charles T. Dazey, and directed by Wilfred Lucas. The cast includes May Allison, George Field, Niguel De Brullier, and others. This tells a fascinating story of a villainous physician who tries to revenge himself upon the husband and daughter of the woman who refused his love. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

FIVE THOUSAND AN HOUR (Metro).—This interesting and entertaining five-reeler serves to introduce Hale Hamilton as a film star. There is plenty of humor and the action moves forward at a rapid pace, but there is very little suspense. It is founded on one of George Randolph Chester's stories and has been well directed by Ralph Ince. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

WIVES AND OTHER WIVES (American-Pathe).—A five-reel farce-comedy, written by Stephen Fox and directed by Lloyd Ingraham, with Mary Miles Minter in the leading role. This subject is attractive in cast and settings, but does not develop many plot complications. Such humor as it brings out is very good, but the subject on the whole is only fairly strong. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

INFATUATION (Eclipe-Pathe).—A six-reel subject, based on a story by Marcel L'Herbier, and directed by Louis Mercanton. Gaby Deslys, M. Signoret, Harry Pilcer and M. Maxadian are in the cast. The story is one of the heart-interest type, with Christmas sets at the beginning and close. It is well acted and full of attractive scenes. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE NARROW PATH (Astra-Pathe).—A five-reel dramatic number, adapted by Ouida Bergere and Jack Cunningham from a play by the same name. Fannie Ward heads a well-balanced cast. The number has a strong sex interest, but is entirely acceptable and much stronger in development than the average offering. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

THE CELESTIAL MESSENGER (Pathe).—The fifteenth and closing episode of "Hands Up!" Some interesting developments occur in this number. Prince Pampas returns, and the Incas are about to wed him to Echo, against her will, when a bolt from heaven sets fire to the temple and destroys it. This serial has contained many picturesque and imaginative situations. Its principal weakness has been too much melodramatic treatment at the expense of credibility; nevertheless, it has retained a strong grip on the interest.

THE PRECIPICE OF DEATH (Pathe).—Episode No. 9 of "The Wolves of Kultur." Zaremba meets a well-deserved fate in this number. The opening scenes picture the way in which Alice turns tables on him in the struggle on the cliff and sends him over the edge. Fresh complications then arise for herself and the others at Water Edge, where the torpedo has been taken. The trip made by Tom on top of the auto is an interesting one.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, NO. 23 (Pathe).—One of the most interesting and instructive of this series, dealing with army life on the various fronts. This shows the British Tommies entering Jerusalem, a gunboat in action on the Tigris, and gives a picture of General Allenby. Scenes from the Italian front and with Pershing's men are also included.

JUST RAMBLING ALONG (Rolin-Pathe).—This is a comic of the knockabout type, with Stanley Laurel as the hero. He appears as a young man at a summer beach, where he flirts with a pretty girl and eats a meal at a cafeteria without paying for it. This contains considerable amusement of the nonsensical sort.

SUMATRA (Post-Pathe).—An exceptionally good travel number picturing the town of Palemburg, a Dutch colony on the Malay Archipelago. This town of 60,000 inhabitants is known as the Venice of its locality, as the houses rest on piles and the streets are of water. The number is wonderfully picturesque throughout.

Pioneer Film Corporation.

LITTLE ORPHANT ANNIE (Pioneer-Selig).—A splendid six-reel production, illustrating the poem of James Whitcomb Riley, with the poet himself reciting the lines. Colleen Moore appears as Orphant Annie and visualizes the part perfectly. The subject is one that will have tremendous appeal for women and children, and is exceptionally well made. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Select Pictures Corporation.

THE ONE WOMAN (Select).—Story by Thomas Dixon and Harry Chandlee, this five-part picture is finely acted and produced, and will prove interesting to many moving picture patrons. It is intended as an argument against Socialism. Lawson Butt, Clara Williams, Herschel Mayall, Adda Gleason and Thurston Hall are members of the cast. A longer review was published in last week's issue.

Southern Film Corporation.

BEYOND THE LAW (Southern Feature Film Corporation).—A six-reel feature, telling the story of the Daltons of Kansas, who were driven to outlawry by the persecutions of grafting Government officials. A full review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE SILENT RIDER (Triangle-Kaybee).—A splendid five-reel Western subject, written by C. M. Clark, and directed by Cliff Smith. Roy Stewart is cast as the cowboy hero and Ethel Fleming as the heroine. The subject concerns the rounding up of a band of cattle rustlers on a big ranch and is full of picturesque color and incident. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

United States Motion Picture Corporation.

SOME JUDGE and NEARLY A SLACKER (U. S. Motion Picture).—Two one-reel comedies of the Rainbow brand, these pictures are fairly amusing and have nothing at all offensive in the plots. They are reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 51 (Universal), Nov. 20.—How Washington, D. C., was guarded from the air leads this interesting number. It includes also scenes from London, New York, and various other places dealing with the great war. Cartoon by Hy Mayer closes the reel.

CURRENT EVENTS, NO. 81 (Universal), Nov. 30.—Scenes from our flying navy lead this number. The arrival of French scholars in America, surrender of the powerful German fleet, how Brazil learned lesson of the war, and other features are included. A Thanksgiving cartoon by Willie Hopkins closes the number.

THERE AND BACK (Nestor).—A ranch comedy, by Harry Wulze, featuring Ed Sedgwick and Belle Bennett. This concerns the adventures of a fat young tenderfoot who falls in love with the ranchman's daughter. A black bear is released by the cowboys during the attempted elopement. The antics of the bear are funny. This number will probably amuse children. The plot is an ordinary one, put together chiefly to exploit the bear.

GUILTY (Star Comedy).—An original comedy, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appearing as two young married men. They are sentenced by a judge to 90 days, and their joy cannot be understood until it develops that they are glad to escape from their mother-in-law. This is an amusing burlesque and should get over nicely.

THE BRASS BULLET, NO. 19 (Universal).—This final episode brings the story to an interesting close. Jack is cleared of all suspicion of the murder by Mrs. Strang, after the death of her son, the mysterious aviator. He and Rosalind are wed, and Spring-Gilbert and his gang are brought to justice. This serial has grown in strength since the early episodes, and the last installments have been particularly good.

THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS (Universal).—Episode No. 1 of a new serial story, with the redoubtable Eddie Polo in the lead, assisted by Molly Malone, Noble Johnson, Charles Hill Mailles, and others. In this number the pretty girl heroine runs away from a girls' seminary to attend the circus which is showing in town. The burning of an oil well makes a dramatic closing feature. A feature of the plot is the enmity existing between the girl's uncle and the hero's father.

AT DESPERATE ODDS (Universal).—Episode No. 2 of "The Lure of the Circus." This opens with scenes immediately following the burning of the oil well. "Dynamite" Dan confesses that Nan's uncle was behind the crime. Eddie fights single-handed with the members of Harden's gang. Scenes from the circus are shown, and it is also brought out that Harden had a daughter, Alice, for whom Nan is hunting. The serial has not the imagination of certain others, but bids fair to have plenty of exciting action.

World Pictures Corporation.

THE MAN OF BRONZE (World Picture).—A five-reel subject, written by Karl K. Coolidge, and directed by David M. Hartford. Lewis S. Stone plays the principal role, that of a young cattleman who loves his partner's daughter. The story has moments of deep feeling and several unique situations, though the action and suspense is not what it might have been. It makes an offering of better than average plot material, but rather weak in development. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

THE ZERO HOUR (World Picture).—A good five-reel subject, written by the late Paul West, and directed by Travers Vale. June Elvidge plays a double role and is assisted by Frank Mayo, Armand Kalisz, and others. The story is novel and has quite an ingenious plot. It weakens toward the close, but not enough to injure the story greatly. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Set Back Release Date on "Made in America"

THE release date on the eight-reel war series, "Made in America," has been changed from December 22 to December 29. This announcement was made at the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Made in America," produced and directed by Ashley Miller, is the authoritative story of the training of America's armies of victory. It was produced with the co-operation of the Government through the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

It has a cast of over 40,000 men, and the scenes were taken in one of the largest cantonments in the United States. The picture depicts truthfully America's part in the great war and the victory that sent the Prussian hordes Rhineward in retreat.

The "Y" men, the K. of C., the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. workers play important parts in this series, but, of course, the doughboys—the men who gave Generalissimo Foch the necessary "punch" when and where it was needed—have the principal roles, and, it is hardly necessary to say that they score repeatedly.

"Made in America" takes the audience on board a great transport, to the intensified training camps abroad and to the trenches. Its release at this time when the men are coming home by the thousands, and, when we are hearing so much about reconstruction, will prove a valuable weekly addition to the exhibitor's program because it will give every soldier an opportunity to show the home folks how the "job was done" without going into a detailed explanation; and, how the 4,000,000 men in khaki were "reconstructed," so to speak, mentally, morally and physically.

Swaab Issues Monthly Messenger.

The latest issue of the Monthly Messenger, issued by Lewis M. Swaab, Philadelphia, who is the exclusive distributor for the Simplex products in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, is a particularly attractive number.

One full page is devoted to a prospectus of Mr. Swaab's new organization, which he humorously designates the "Simplex Beneficial Association." After the readers of his house organ are told that they have been invited to join, the aim and object of the association are set forth.

Then follows a partial list of the principal Simplex installations on Government war vessels, army posts, Federal departments, training camps, hospitals and industrial organizations.

Universal Buys West Story.

What is believed to have been one of the last stories on which Paul West, famous author and playwright, worked before he was found dead, apparently from suicide, in Paris, has been purchased by the Universal for adaptation to the screen. It is "Cherries Are Ripe." Mr. West worked on it in collaboration with Maximilian Foster.

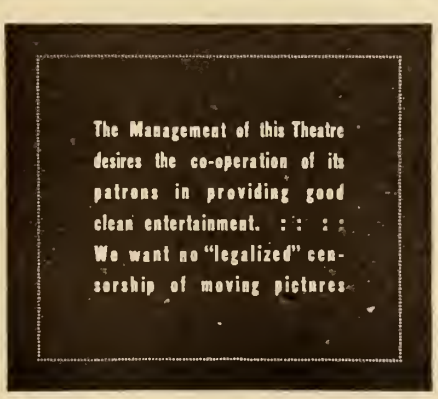
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

MOTION PICTURE CARBONS
Standard for Alternating Current Projection

A product that is considered standard by the experts in any industry must meet the requirements of the service for which it is intended. White A. C. They have been tested by the experts in the motion picture industry who are satisfied that they fill the bill in every particular.

White A. C. Special Carbons are standard. They give a pure, white light of high intensity, noiseless and flickerless operation, and a rugged light source not affected by any slight changes in voltage. Simply insert a trim of White A. C. Specials. No other change of equipment necessary.
